AT SAN MIGUEL, a city of forty thousand inhabitants in the republic of San Salvador, a bloody riot not long since was instigated by a Catholic priest named Palacios. On account of the refusal of the government to allow a violent pastoral of the bishop to be read in the churches, the priest preached a sermon in vehement denunciation of the authorities, which excited the mob to break open the prison and free two hundred convicts, to assail the garrison, to murder Generals Espinosa and Castro, and to set fire to sixteen houses. The riot was finally quelled by the aid of marines from the British ship-of-war Fantome. The most remarkable fact of the outbreak was thus announced by the cable telegram: "One curious and incredible discovery was made after the murderous affair was over; namely, that on the persons of some of the dead rebels were found passports, which, when translated, read as follows: 'PETER, open to the bearer, who has died for religion, the gates of heaven.' These were signed GEORGE, Bishop of San Salvador, and sealed with the seal of the bishopric of San Salvador." Such is the temper of the Catholic Church, and such is the danger of permitting it to acquire power over the minds of men. How to prevent this? EDUCATE THEM—no matter what it costs.

AS MIGHT have been expected, the bold action of the Rochester School Board in excluding the Bible from the public schools has been followed by a divided public opinion among the Protestants. Rev. Dr. Sproule (Presbyterian) and Rev. E. Nisbet (Baptist) declare for the retention of the Bible; while Rev. H. L. Morehouse (Baptist) and Rev. R. M. Stratton (Methodist) approve its exclusion. Bishop Cox, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, has preached strongly against the action of the Board. Could anything be more plain than that the discussion of this question has been altogether insufficient, and that the views of thorough-going, unflinching Liberalism need to be known and appreciated at their true value? When such momentous interests depend on the establishment of our school system on a basis which shall be morally defensible against the assaults, overt or covert, of its remorseless Roman Catholic enemy, how can any intelligent Liberal fail to see the utter necessity of some such useful agitation as that of the Liberal League? The existence of republican institutions is imperilled, so long as they rest only on a sandy foundation; and that must remain the case until they are thoroughly secularized. The object of the Liberal League is simply practical instruction by practical action in the cause of freedom and justice. And yet what indifference to our chief public duty!

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Isaac Rhen, President; Carrie S. Burnham, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünning, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

Nature and Humanity.

BY CHARLES MORAN.

From the earliest time of which we have any record, we find man sitting in judgment on Nature—the source of his very being and of all that contributes to his welfare and progress; and the judgment almost invariably has been that Nature is imperfect, unjust, and cruel towards man, and that there must be another world, and another life, where he will be compensated for the wrongs and sufferings inflicted on him in this life. Though modern science has penetrated many of the mysteries of Nature, discovered many of her processes and the results they produce, and in general has abandoned the idea of a future life in another world, it yet clings with tenacity to the idea of Nature's imperfections and needless cruelty and injustice to man. We find a recent striking example of this in an article in the Westminster Review of London, for January last, on John Stuart Mill's Three Essays on Religion, which merits special attention because a striking illustration of the leading defect of the scientists of the present day—an inability to generalize correctly from observed phenomena, and apply general principles to the practical purposes of life and to the establishment of truth. The constantly increasing division of labor which now prevails in science as well as in industry and art leads most scientists and thinkers to devote themselves, more or less exclusively, to a single branch of one of the sciences; this has a tendency to mislead them as to the relative importance and position of each class of phenomena, and the part it plays in the great cosmos of which it forms an infinitesimal fraction.

In the Three Essays, Mr. Mill has committed the same errors which his critic in the Westminster commits, only to a less extent. It is precisely against the limited extent to which Mr. Mill arraigns the laws of Nature, and their supposed first cause, that the criticisms of the reviewer are mostly directed. In fact, the Westminster article is nothing but an elaborate arraignment of the blunders, short-comings, and imperfections of the existing order of the universe; and its author claims that these furnish ample evidence that the universe cannot have emanated from, or be due to, a beneficent, omniscient, omnipotent first cause.

Having no desire to sustain or advocate any special theological belief, we propose to examine briefly some of the questions at issue in Mr. Mill's Essays, and in the Westminster Review of them, from a strictly scientific point of view, based on observation and analysis of natural phenomena, and on the general principles legitimately deducible from these,—in other words, in strict accordance with the true principles of positive philosophy, if such philosophy there be. We do this with the sole purpose of contributing our mite towards dissipating a portion of the misty fogs of ignorance which so long have kept Nature's perfections hidden from the eyes of man. The Westminster Review says:—

"Far from exhibiting a discriminating beneficence, the cosmic forces, after their colossal grandeur and irresistible might, reveal as their most impressive attribute an infinite capacity for inflicting evil, and an absolute recklessness in the exercise of their malignant activity. They go straight to their end, destroying not only the men whose death would be a relief to themselves and a blessing to others, but those who are engaged in the highest and worthiest enterprises. A hurricane, an earthquake, a pestilence, vie in destructiveness and injustice with anarchy, or a reign of terror, in the human world. Nature, in fact, abridges human life, in modes at once the most violent and insidious."

The reviewer quotes the following from Mr. Mill:—"Nature impales men, breaks them as if on the wheel, casts them to be devoured by wild beasts, burns them to death, crushes them with stones like the first Christian martyrs, starves them with hunger, freezes them with cold, poisons them by the quick or slow venom of her exhalations, and has hundreds of other hideous deaths in reserve, such as the ingenious cruelty of a Nabir or a Domitian never surpassed." The reviewer then continues: "In the torture which Nature inflicts, even where she does not intend to kill, as in the infelicitous provision for the perpetual renewal of animal life; in the cardinal arrangement by which the sustenance of one portion of her offspring is made to depend on the destruction of another; in her explosions of fire-damp; in the pain inflicted and the loss of life occasioned by the parasites that find their way into the kidney or the brain; in the desolations of a district by a flight of locusts, or the starvation of a million of people by a trifling chemical change in an edible root,—Nature, says her indignant accuser (Mr. Mill), perpetrates horrors which, if men were or could be authors of them, we should regard as crimes of unspeakable enormity. . . . The fashionable optimism at last becomes, in our eyes, what Mr. Mill calls in his Autobiography, a superstition; and without denying the glory of the sunlight, or the splendor of the grass, or disparaging the many beneficent services of Nature, we discern, not always with stoical indifference, her innumerable imperfections, her circuitous mode of attaining her alleged purposes, her contrivances without object, her monstrous and suicidal fecundity, her terrific machinery of destruction, her savage cruelty, and the inexorable necessity of laws 'which have neither morals nor laws.'"

This terrific arraignment of the immutable laws of Nature, instead of establishing the slightest error, imperfection, or inefficiency in these laws, or in the results they produce, to our mind only proves that the critic has no conception of the final results which the laws or forces of Nature insure, nor of the infallible means by which these results are so unerringly attained. A scientist who declares that the laws of Nature "have neither morals nor laws" can have no conception of any other standard of morality and law than the transitory, ever-changing, erroneous standards established by men in power, with a view to attain their own short-sighted, selfish ends. Fortunately the laws of Nature are based on very different standards from those of man. Nature's laws make individual interests identical with those of the community and of humanity at large; and invariably tend to the eradication of error, injustice, and suffering; whilst those of man as invariably tend to produce these evil results, and create an antagonism between individual interests and those of the community. All conclusions contrary to this are due to superficial views of the ultimate results produced by Nature's laws or forces. Most of the evils of which the Westminster critic complains are penalties inflicted by Nature for the violation of her laws, and hence are proofs of their efficiency and perfection,—a perfection so entirely beyond the comprehension of superficial observers that the results condemned as cruel and unjust are often the very means that assure the ultimate welfare of humanity. These apparent evils are Nature's kind admonitions to man—her hints that, in his ignorance, he has infringed some of her beneficent laws. The natural penalties and rewards that follow every action of man are the means by which he is induced, voluntarily, to contribute to his own welfare and progress, instead of remaining, like the brute creation, the mere passive recipient of Nature's gratuitous bounties. Man's power to contribute to his own welfare and progress is one of the main causes of his superiority over the brute creation, none of which possess the power to advance themselves, by their own efforts, a single step beyond the position in which they were originally placed by Nature. Most of the arguments to the contrary, advanced by Darwin and his proselytes, are based on the modifications produced in various organisms by man's intervention and protecting care—modifications which never occur in their state of nature. Man's highest faculties and attributes would be entirely useless to him, if all he needs and can attain were placed by Nature within his reach, without effort on his part; or if he had been placed on the earth endowed with full knowledge of all things. Had he nothing to observe and investigate, no knowledge to acquire, and no other objects to attain than the mere gratification of his animal passions and desires, man would be but little above the brute creation. The moment that man has nothing to learn and nothing to do on this earth, there will no longer be any apparent reason for his continued existence here; and we may then expect him to become extinct, like so many other organisms which, in the past, have disappeared from the earth. But we believe this moment will never arrive, and that man is destined to advance continually in knowledge and well-being through a constantly clearer comprehension of Nature's laws, and of the means by which these can be made to aid him in attaining the ends he desires.

We believe the laws or forces of Nature are now sufficiently known and comprehended by scientists and thinkers to warrant them to hold and believe that none of these laws ever has, or ever can, become a source of real evil to man; but, on the contrary, that they all contribute, directly or indirectly, to his welfare, happiness, and progress. That the cosmic forces go straight to their end, destroying alike the good and the bad that come in their way, is evidence of the equal justice they distribute to all. Every human action produces special results, no matter by whom done, or by what motive prompted. Man's attempts to judge human actions by the motives that prompt them are a grave error, and have always proved a failure, because the real motives of individual actions are generally beyond human detection—can only be inferred; and because Nature renders the consequences of an action identically the same, whatever be the motive that prompts it. An obstruction on a railway, whether there from accident, carelessness, or thoughtlessness, produces the same results as if placed there with criminal intent. So with every other human action. Thus should it be; for how could man anticipate the effects of the cosmic forces if they produced a different effect on the just than on the unjust—on the good than on the bad? Were the good differently affected by these forces than the bad, how could the exact amount of good or evil necessary to modify the results be ascertained? The fact that the laws of Nature act on all alike and are immutable—that the soil yields precisely the same results to the efforts of a bad man as to those of a good man,—in a word, that it is the act itself, and not the intent which induces it, that insures the results that follow,—are proofs of the absolute perfection of Nature's laws. If all these things were not so, how could man ever foresee the results of human actions?

Surely, no true scientist can for one moment believe that earthquakes and hurricanes produce no other results than the destruction of life and property which they sometimes occasion. The whole system of the universe is based on the antagonism of opposing forces which maintains harmony in all things throughout all space and time. Any momentary disturbance of this harmony leads immediately to the intervention of natural forces whose action soon reestablishes harmony. Every true scientist must readily understand that earthquakes and hurricanes produce effects beneficial to humanity, which far more than compensate all the loss and suffering they momentarily entail on individuals, particularly as these, with proper care and attention, can generally guard themselves against the greater part of the injury those disturbances inflict. As to epidemics, they are Nature's penalties for the non observance of cleanliness and the laws of health.

The following apt remarks, which recently appeared in a New York journal, though mainly relative to the spring freshets and ice-gorges which were then much dreaded, clearly demonstrate that most of the occurrences which we complain of and attribute to Nature are entirely due to man's folly and ignorance; to his improper, thoughtless interference with Nature's beneficent and necessary processes:—

"There has been a great deal of talk about the devastations of Nature during the winter just closed. It has been entirely forgotten that all the devastations committed have been owing to man's getting in the way of Nature. The trouble of this harbor has been with the shipping, the ferry-boats, and the public. The trouble of the ocean has been with the steam-ships and the sailing-vessels. The trouble of the ice-gorges has been with the villages, bridges, and factories. There has been nothing the matter with Nature. There has been considerable damage done to those trying 'to fool' with her. Storms and ice mountains undoubtedly work healthful sanitary results to those whose natural home is the deep. The whales are never wrecked. The shark never runs to pieces on the hidden rock. The swordfish cares not for the cyclone. So is it with the natural denizens of rivers. Torrents do not kill fish. They intoxicate them after a fashion, and, undoubtedly, better them, because the fish caught from the bed of a torrent are better than any others. Ice-gorges do not damage bluffs; they fertilize them, and the valleys running up to their bases. Nature makes a bridge of ice over her rivers, and that 'lifts' the bridges made by man out of place. The fields of ice that stately blockade our harbor are proof, as they come and go, of the healthful procession of the tides; and it is only man, the invader of Nature, that is disturbed by them. These reflections should temper impatience. They show that man suffers few misfortunes which he does not make for himself. They show that Nature is as undisturbedly operating now as a thousand or two thousand years ago she was amid her solitudes. Man makes no difference to her. The works of man make little difference to her. As long as he works in line with Nature, man gets along well enough. When he tries to cross-examine her, her answers take the form of demonstrations of strength, the results of which men call calamities. Yet Nature is not to blame; she only keeps on in the course of her own laws."

If it be true, as we believe it is, that man's knowledge is mainly due to his observations of the effects of his own actions and of the actions of others, and of the effects of natural phenomena, is it not as wise as it is kind and beneficent in Nature to inflict pain and suffering, nay, even death itself, on those who persist in committing wrong actions, or in making an improper use of things? Everything in the universe is susceptible of being applied to proper and improper uses; and the only unerring indication of the proper and improper use of anything, under the system that rules this world, is the natural consequences that flow from each use to which it is applied. These results are revelations that reach all, and which every one is capable of profiting by the moment they are comprehended.

A convincing proof that nothing in the universe is wholly injurious or useless to humanity is to be found in the fact that to-day the profits of nearly every industry greatly depend on the present value of the refuse materials formerly thrown away as useless; and it is mainly to science that we are indebted for the discovery of the uses to which the materials formerly wasted are susceptible of being applied. Hence a scientist, more than any one else, should know that a thing is not necessarily injurious or useless, and, therefore, a proof of the imperfection or wastefulness of Nature, merely because the beneficial use to which it can be applied is as yet undiscovered.

The Westminster critic complains that "for one seed, whether vegetable or animal, which attains maturity, a million, perhaps, are fated to perish"; and he speaks of Nature's "monstrous and suicidal fecundity"; and of "the extraordinary fecundity of locusts and migratory pigeons which bring with them destruction, famine, and death." But none of these facts warrant the conclusions drawn from them. The seeds that perish are not wasted; they become the food of other organisms, or enrich the soil in which they die. One species of vital organisms being made the natural food of other species, the undue development of any is thus checked by Nature herself, so long as her compensating processes are not disturbed by man. Why, then, is not this fecundity one of Nature's wise, necessary provisions instead of an evidence of wastefulness and cruelty? If any species has an important function to perform in the system of the universe, how can a sufficient number be insured at all times, without a progeny so abundant as to provide against all possible contingencies? The ravages committed by locusts, grasshoppers, and other insects, are mainly due to the destruction by man of birds and other vital organisms that prey on these insects, and thus prevent the greater part of the ravages complained of. All such complaints against the system of Nature are only evidences that her processes, and the ultimate results they produce, are but little understood. An organism which itself is useless to man may be necessary to other organisms, indispensable to the well-being of humanity. Man is too apt to look only at the first direct effects he sees, overlooking entirely the subsequent indirect effects, often far more important than the direct.

Before we complain that Nature has made one form of life contribute to the sustenance and development of other forms, and that death is made the ultimate end of all vital organisms, ought we not to examine with care what would be the probable condition of this world, and of the various organisms that inhabit it, under any possible modification of the conditions that now exist? We doubt whether either Mr. Mill or the Westminster critic has ever attempted this. Without the constant recurrence of death, and the disintegration of all vital organisms into their original elements, and unless each were made, as now, to contribute to the welfare and progress of others, how could man and all other vital organisms attain the well-being and progress they now enjoy? How could vital organisms be so easily modified, and made to harmonize with altered circumstances, as by dying and "being born again," and passing through a new period of childhood, one of whose characteristics is great flexibility and power of adaptation to surrounding circumstances? Under any other system, could the same wondrous results be secured with the same extraordinary economy of force and matter?

Look, for example, at the remarkable functions and attributes of water; the great central reservoirs of which are the vast oceans from which it constantly proceeds, and into which it as constantly returns. The water in these great reservoirs, being highly impregnated with salt, furnishes a substance indispensable to every vital organism, and prevents the putrefaction of the refuse organic matter which the creeks and rivers carry into the oceans. The solar rays, acting on these vast expanses of waters, cause the evaporation of the pure particles of water, free from all saline matter; these rise, and form clouds, which, driven by the winds, accumulate over the land, and especially around the hills and mountain-tops, where they fall as refreshing dew, or, after being condensed, as rain and snow. From the mountain and hills, the rain and melted snow trickle gently down, and form the rills, streamlets, lakes, and rivers that irrigate the land, and supply the water indispensable to life and vegetation, at the same time that they offer man the cheapest motive power he has as yet discovered. The navigable streams, the lakes and oceans, once considered serious obstacles to communication, have become easy, safe, and economical means of transportation between communities and nations. The streams, lakes, and oceans further contribute to the welfare of humanity by being the home of the finny tribes and crustaceans, and of innumerable other organisms, useful to man as food and for other purposes. Besides being the great source of hydrogen and oxygen, elements that form an important part in the composition of most substances, water furnishes the basis of the great motive power of modern times, steam, by means of which man has achieved his greatest triumphs over matter, time, and space.

This is but a feeble, imperfect sketch of a portion of the benefits man derives from the laws of Nature, which force a fixed quantity of water to contribute in so many various ways, through all time, to the well-being and progress of the generations that successively inhabit this world. It appears to us impossible to imagine any other system that would yield the same amount of beneficial results to humanity, by means so simple and yet so certain, all acting automatically, without the slightest intervention of any supervising, directing power.

Now, when we reflect on all these, and on the other innumerable proofs already discovered of the absolute perfection and beneficence of Nature, what shall we think of men, who, like Mr. Mill and his Westminster critic, claim to be scientists, and yet declare Nature to be "a reckless and unfeeling spendthrift"; that "waste, abortion, frustration, fatuity, attest the unintelligent character of her processes"; and who make these accusations after acknowledging that in this world "good comes out of evil"; and that this "is true of human crimes no less than of national calamities"; that "every rock, every grain of sand, every metallic film, is in unceasing motion; all matter attains form; oxygen in combination with carbon produces carbonic acid gas; in combination with hydrogen, water; phosphorus in combination with chalks forms bone; in combination with fat it forms the substance of the brain"; "electricity, magnetism, light, are so intimately connected in the evolution of life, that wherever heat is these forces will be present"; "all changes in the world are changes in the local distribution of elementary matter, and are eventually brought about by motion"? These are but a portion of the convincing proofs of the perfection and beneficence of Nature furnished by Mr. Mill and the Westminster critic, and yet they both deny that these attributes are to be found in the results produced by Nature! We have here another proof that error usually refutes itself.

But can the attainment of truth and the elimination of error be expected from one who, like the Westminster critic, first declares that it is in the order of Nature that "good comes out of evil," and then immediately after adds that "it is equally in the order of Nature that evil comes out of good"; and who fully endorses Mr. Mill's extraordinary assertion that "hardly any good fortune ever befel any one which did not give, either to the same, or to some other person, something to regret"? Then, not satisfied with these contradictory enunciations of principles, the critic contradicts himself, by the acknowledgment that "the tendency of either principle [good and evil] is to fructify each in its own kind, good producing good, and evil evil, so that good in general issues in further good, evil in an increase of evil." But he omitted to add that every error leads to further errors, which would have furnished the natural explanation of the innumerable erroneous conclusions to be found in the Westminster article, of which the following are further examples: "Conformity to Nature has no connection with right or wrong." "The elementary impulses of the constitution of man, unless subjected to artificial training, would fill the world with misery, making life an exaggerated likeness of the odious scene of violence and tyranny which is exhibited by the rest of the undisciplined animal kingdom." "Every indication of design in the cosmos is so much evidence against the omnipotence of the designer." "Far from acquiescing in the doctrine of Nature's perfection, men who come into direct contact with the great natural forces are constantly rebelling against her presumed authority, and violating by artificial arrangements that spontaneous order which, if the tenet were sound, they ought to respect."

Now, instead of these dogmatic assertions, unsustained by either facts or proofs of any kind, would it not have been more in accordance with sound scientific methods to have pointed out a single well-authenticated case of evil that ever came out of good? or of non-conformity to Nature that was not eventually followed by retribution? one single case of successful rebellion against any of the immutable laws of Nature? and indicate how any one can ever have a valid cause to regret the good fortune of another? A most strange conclusion for an eminent political economist like Mr. Mill to arrive at, when political economy has established that society is based on the exchange of services—service for service, as Bastiat so well expressed it.

The Westminster critic, it is easy to see, ignores or overlooks the fact that no artificial training can eradicate or change to any extent the natural impulses of man—that the violence and tyranny of man invariably end by being eradicated by man himself, a convincing proof that his elementary impulses need no artificial training, since they lead him, from mere self-interest, to establish and maintain peace, justice, and individual liberty,—and, most important of all, he overlooks that Nature has made it impossible for man to attack the interests of others, and make his fellow-beings miserable for any length of time, because she has made the true interest of the individual identical in all things with the true interests of the community.

Eventually, Nature always rewards the right and punishes the wrong in some manner or other; and that not in another world, or in some future life, but in this world, and in this life. All beliefs contrary to this are due to erroneous, superficial views of good and evil, and of the ultimate results of human actions; as well as to the omission to follow the first effects of these actions until they become transformed into causes of new effects, which generally are very different from the first. It is this inevitable, inseparable connection between cause and effects—between every human action and its ultimate results—that induces man, of his own accord, to abandon the errors he commits, and, in the end, will surely lead him to annul every one of the erroneous, short-sighted laws he enacts, but cannot enforce, and submit voluntarily to the sole rule of the perfect, immutable laws of Nature, which insure to all the greatest amount of well-being and happiness that the circumstances and the momentary condition of things render possible.

Nature has apparently not endowed man with the power of attaining perfection, but, instead, has conferred on him the far greater blessing of being able constantly to contribute to his own advancement towards it. Most persons imagine that, if things had been perfectly ordered by Nature, or by the first cause, if there be one, the original condition of things ought not to be susceptible of change. But a system of incessant changes for the better, such as now controls the universe, is infinitely superior for man to any rigid, unchangeable system, however perfect, particularly with the existing nature of man, which makes his contributions to these changes give constant exercise to his faculties and attributes. The most perfect man is, and apparently must always be, if Nature be perfect, he whose faculties and attributes are most fully developed; and Nature has made their development dependent on their constant exercise. Hence, an idle man can never be a fully developed man. All human experience proves that progress towards a desired end produces far greater happiness than its attainment. An object once secured cloy, and has to be replaced by the pursuit of other objects—a conclusive evidence that man's inherent nature does not permit him ever to rest satisfied with any position he may attain, however advanced it be, but constantly impels him to aspire to something still higher, nobler, and better. With such a nature, is it not evident that man must be far happier whilst incessantly advancing towards infinite perfection than he could be if he were in actual possession of infinite perfection itself? Under the latter condition, as far as it can be conceived, man would be deprived of the enjoyment he now derives from the exercise of his highest faculties, and from the efforts necessary to assure his own progress and welfare, as well as from the constant anticipation of some new future enjoyment. Hence, the attainment and enjoyment of infinite perfection, if it were possible, would not be infinite bliss to man; a new demonstration that the infinite in any form is incomprehensible to the human mind, which is only capable of comprehending finite things, with which alone man seems destined to come in contact. It is evident he has no necessity to comprehend infinity, if he is never to attain it, nor come in contact with it in any form. But though this conception of the human mind be only a mere imaginary, unrealizable idea, it yet impels man to incessant struggles for the attainment of the unattainable, and thus contributes to man's happiness and progress by the very impossibility of its realization. Is it possible to conceive anything more perfect than an order of things that renders an abstract idea, unknown to experience, and unattainable, a source of happiness and well-being to man?

The moment man becomes convinced of the power and absolute perfection of the laws of Nature, he is necessarily forced to accept the long-despised and much-abused doctrine of final causes; and then, instead of seeking the cause and reason of things in their atomic elements, as the materialists attempt to do, he must seek the cause and object of the atomic elements themselves, in the final ends they produce. If we understand Nature and her immutable laws, a complete revolution must occur in the present system of human research and reasoning before man can fully comprehend the phenomena of Nature revealed to him through his senses.

To reason correctly on these all-absorbing subjects, it must ever be kept in mind that all that we know of the past history of man indicates that, at his first advent on this earth, he must have been perfectly ignorant of all things—of his own faculties and attributes as well as of everything with which he came in contact; and that all his subsequently acquired knowledge has been due: (1) to the effects produced on his senses by their contacts with matter in its various forms; (2) to the subjective feelings produced in him by these objective contacts; (3) to the instantaneous recordance in his mind or memory (terms perfectly identical, though so often supposed to indicate different faculties of man), and the retention there of the effects of these objective contacts and the subjective feelings they generate; and (4) to the power possessed by him of communicating to others, and of receiving from others, a knowledge of the various results of past experiences and the deductions drawn from these. Through this recordance and retention in the mind or memory of the results of past experiences, man is enabled to guide his future actions by the results of the past. And the power of communicating and receiving a knowledge of the results of individual experiences, and of individual deductions, enables every human generation to start from the point reached by the previous generation, thus insuring constant progress. With all other species of vital organisms, even though they be also endowed with a mind or memory that registers and recalls the results of their past experiences, from the absence of the power of conveying knowledge from generation to generation, and the limited extent of their power of communicating it from individual to individual, every generation has to repeat the experiences made by previous generations, which renders all progress impossible to them except through the intervention and protecting care of man. But man needs no intervention nor protecting care from any one to insure his constant progress, which mainly depends on his own efforts and on his knowledge of the laws of Nature, a subject entirely beyond the ken of all other organisms. These all-important differences between the attributes and power of man and those of all other vital organisms known to us, had they been observed and kept in mind by scientists and thinkers, would have preserved them from innumerable erroneous conclusions that have given rise to other errors which, now that they have taken possession of the human mind, can only be eradicated by a vast amount of human research, time, and efforts. These important fundamental differences between man and all the other vital organisms should alone prevent the acceptance of the Darwinian theories, without regard to any of the other numerous facts and principles that prove them to be untenable. And yet these theories are accepted by the great majority of the scientists of the present day! [For the plain reason that to deny the "Darwinian theories" is necessarily to affirm miracle as the origin of species,—the whole object of these theories being to explain such origin in accordance with law.—Ed.]

Man can modify the natural condition of things by bringing their elements into contact under conditions which, without his intervention, would rarely or never occur. But he can do this only after discovering the laws of Nature, and by conforming to them,—never by violating or rebelling against them. Man can counteract a natural force or impulse only by opposing to it other natural forces more powerful, and hence capable of overcoming the weaker. There is apparently no other limitation to a natural force or principle than that imposed by the opposition or resistance of antagonistic natural forces or principles; and harmony is maintained throughout the whole universe by the effects of the antagonism of the forces of Nature.

While man, by the aid of Nature's laws or forces, can transform one force of Nature into another, he can never destroy any, no matter what be its effects. This must be so, if the laws of Nature are one and all perfect for the ends they produce; and if one of these ends be the greatest good of humanity. And yet the Darwinists would have us believe that all vital organisms possess the power of modifying the structure of their progeny! They assert that butterflies alter the coloring of their wings, copying that of other species disliked by birds so that they may escape being preyed upon by them! [This utterly erroneous notion of what the "Darwinists" hold shows how little their views are understood even by intelligent men. The principle of "mimicry" should be comprehended before it is denounced as absurd.—Ed.] Has human credulity ever been called upon to accept a greater impossibility than this? How do butterflies ascertain that the birds dislike the species whose coloring they copy? And how do they control the coloring of the wings of their progeny?

The very nature of the human intellect forces man to accept the theory of a first cause the moment he pursues the investigation of Nature far enough to entitle him to be classed among scientists. When man commenced to analyze the phenomena of Nature, he soon found that every phenomenon was due to some anterior phenomenon or cause, without which it could not have occurred. From this, by analogy, he is driven to accept the conclusion that there can be no phenomenon without an antecedent cause. Mr. Mill and the Westminster critic, on the contrary, not comprehending or not admitting this, declare that "the essence of causation as it exists within the limits of our knowledge is incompatible with a first cause." But how can this conclusion be correct if all ideas of a first cause are due to deductions from observations of natural phenomena, and of the effects these produce? And how can the above conclusion be reconciled with Mr. Mill's conclusion that "experience justifies the assertion that force has all the attributes of a thing eternal and uncreated"? Is not this the recognition of force as a first cause? On what phenomenon or experience can we base the theory that there exists anything uncaused? And so long as we have no experience of an uncaused thing, how can we believe and assert that force, or anything else, has "the attributes of a thing eternal and uncreated"? Is not this doing what the Westminster critic accuses his opponents of doing? attempting "to explain the universe without the preliminary knowledge which justifies the explanation"? And is not this precisely what the materialists, the Darwinists, and so many others constantly do? What proof have the materialists produced that force and matter are the first causes of all things? Or the Darwinists, that all vital organisms "have sprung from eight or ten progenitors," or "have descended from some one primordial form into which life was breathed"? (Darwin, Origin of Species, p. 419.)

There never has been, and there probably never can be, a philosophy that does not end by postulating one or more first causes. The materialists postulate force and matter as the first causes of all things, committing the unpardonable, unscientific error of omitting to inquire into the cause of force and matter, and why these are inseparably connected. If the cause of matter and force has not been discovered, is that any proof whatever that they are uncaused? There can be no exception to a natural principle or law. And it is a well-established fact that every phenomenon that man thus far has been able to thoroughly analyze has been found to be due to some antecedent phenomenon or cause; and so long as we find no positive evidence to the contrary, we must, by analogy, believe that force and matter, like all other things, are due to some anterior cause or phenomenon. It is true that a first cause has never yet been revealed directly to our senses, sole source of all objective knowledge; and, hence, that a first cause is not even conceivable to the human mind. But this is no proof that a first cause does not and cannot exist. When effects or phenomena are discovered which cannot be traced to any known cause,—such, for example, as the fact that the true interests of the individual are made by the laws of Nature identical with the true interests of the community, a result which certainly cannot be ascribed to force and matter, nor to any results which these produce,—when such effects, we say, are discovered, it is certainly perfectly legitimate and scientific to ascribe them to some unknown cause (which may be denominated God, or first cause, or any other name), so long as they cannot be traced back to some other cause. This is far more scientific than to ascribe such effects to force and matter, or to leave out entirely the unknown in the problems attempted to be solved, as is done by the materialists, provided only that the unknown cause be not supposed to possess powers and attributes inconsistent with observed phenomena, the great error committed by nearly all who, hitherto, have ascribed observed phenomena to some great unknown cause or God. But because attributes have been unwarrantably ascribed to the unknown first cause, is that any reason for refusing to admit that a first cause may exist? The only valid reason for refusing to admit the existence of a first cause is that such an idea, to the human mind, is inconceivable, and sheer nonsense, because it necessitates the admission that something uncaused exists, which is contrary to all human experience. If all human knowledge consists of the effects produced on man by the contact of his senses with outward objects, and the subjective feelings these produce in him, it is evident that man cannot comprehend nor conceive an uncaused infinite so long as unrevealed to his senses. The Westminster critic says that "to conclude that the final cause of creation was the happiness of sentient beings is a conclusion directly opposed to the evidence." We, on the contrary, firmly believe that all the evidence that can be gathered conclusively proves that, under the system of Nature, man's great object in life is to struggle for the attainment of that which, for the time being, he considers enjoyment and happiness; and to avoid whatever he supposes will produce suffering and evil. By means of these two opposing impulses, Nature successfully controls human actions, and forces man, even against his will and desires, to progress towards predestined ends. In the pursuit of happiness and the avoidance of evil man spends his whole existence, and exerts all his efforts, no matter what be his turn of mind, his intelligence or ignorance, his occupation and position in life, and the more or less success that crowns his efforts. But what at one time man seeks as means of enjoyment and happiness, at another time he shuns as an evil; and what one man considers an enjoyment, another considers misery. It is these apparent anomalies (which, however, all really conform to the great principle that controls every human action) that lead so many to deny the principle.

The natural tendency of man, under all circumstances, to seek happiness and avoid suffering is the basis of the doctrine of SELF-INTEREST or utilitarianism, the only theory that, thus far, rationally and philosophically explains every human action; the only one that gives an intelligent explanation of the constant changes that have occurred during the past in the views and actions of social man, and his steady onward progress through every variation in his condition and surroundings. It explains human errors and human successes; explains the gradual eradication of error and the voluntary acceptance of truth by man, without the slightest intervention from any outward controlling power; on the contrary, despite all the efforts of Church and State, the most powerful human institutions ever organized, both of which attained almost unlimited power on the plea of benefiting and protecting the community,—a power, however, always exercised for the benefit of the administrators of Church and State, at the expense and to the injury of the people whom they controlled.

The doctrine of self-interest is the only solid foundation on which to construct that inchoate but all-important science, SOCIOLOGY, the SCIENCE OF SCIENCES, as Auguste Comte so aptly termed it; which is sure, at some future but not far distant day, to throw much light on all the other sciences, of which it is the natural completion, if, as we believe, all things in this world contribute directly or indirectly to man's welfare (whatever other purpose they may further serve),—a conclusion fully sustained by the well known fact that science hitherto has never made a discovery that has not, in some way, been found applicable to the furtherance of the well-being and progress of humanity. If, in the natural order of things, everything can be made to contribute to the welfare and progress of man, it is evident that, before things can be fully understood, we must comprehend man and the natural laws that control him,—the most neglected, and, therefore, the least advanced of all the subjects that science has thus far investigated. It is only since the middle of the last century that it is acknowledged that man, like all other forms of matter, is controlled by the laws of Nature. Before that time it was generally supposed that man was, and should be, controlled by human laws and governments; that these alone could properly guide his actions, and force him to do right contrary to his natural inclinations. The French encyclopedists of that period were among the first to recognize that man had inherent natural rights which no government should infringe; and the French physiocrats, at about the same time, laid the foundation of political economy, subsequently perfected by Adam Smith in his Wealth of Nations, published in 1776. These were the first systematic efforts to discover and analyze the natural laws that control civilized man, and to point out the effects they produce on him. But political economy limits itself to the study and analysis of the natural laws that control the production, distribution, and consumption of wealth; hence, only forms one branch of social science, which requires for its completion the application of the same methods and principles to the investigation of all the other natural laws that control human actions and man's relations to every other form of matter.

The future progress of true philosophy greatly depends on the general recognition of the important fact that all human reasoning is limited to one single method. Whether denominated inductive or deductive, objective or subjective, metaphysical or positive, human reasoning is invariably based on the observation of natural phenomena and the results they produce; and the subsequent assumption that the same results have been and will be produced by all similar phenomena, under identical circumstances, at any other place or time. This assumption is based on the immutability of the forces laws of Nature that control matter in all its forms. The general recognition of this will at once reconcile or remove the greater portion of all the dispute points in philosophy,—will harmonize the various conflicting schools, which then, instead of disputing as in the past, as to which use the true method of reasoning, will all devote their whole time and attention to the observation of natural phenomena, and to the deduction of the natural laws or principles which they establish. All schools use the inductive and deductive methods, and there can be neither an objective nor a subjective philosophy; for if outward objects be not observed, how can subjective feelings arise? And if subjective feelings be disregarded, what can the subject know of outward objects? An object is cognizable to us only by the effects it produces on our senses and on our feelings; hence, we can never disconnect the object from its effects on the subject. As to metaphysical and positive philosophy, they both use the same processes; the only possible difference between them being that one may attach more importance to one branch, the other to another branch, of the same identical process. In the end it will be found that throughout all Nature there reigns perfect harmony, and that every part of Nature contributes, directly or indirectly, to the welfare and progress of humanity, whatever other purpose it may further serve.

NEW YORK CITY, July, 1875.

STEPS IN SECULARIZATION.

BY THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON.

In common with many other readers of The Independent, I have felt grateful for the clearness and ability with which it has urged the necessity of secularizing our government as to disarm sectarian criticism, and carry out the aim of the founders of our government. When at Philadelphia, in 1787, in the great festival which celebrated the adoption of our Constitution, the Jewish and Christian clergy walked conspicuously together in the procession there was a distinct recognition of the principle of universal toleration. When, in 1796, Washington signed the treaty with Tripoli, in which occur the words "the Government of the United States is in no sense founded on the Christian religion," he placed our government on a purely secular basis, and, as the Constitution (Art. V. c. 2) declares all treaties to be a part of the supreme law of the land it is plain that the absolute separation of Church and State is one of our centennial traditions. But however clearly we may agree upon this principle there are points of detail which present practical difficulties; and of some of these I now wish to speak.

It is easy, of course, to take a position of absolute dogmatism on either side. It is easy to resist all change, even when demanded for the sake of consistency. On the other hand, it is easy for any radical to draw up for himself, off-hand, a list of points to be amended, and to say to all the world "This is the way, walk ye in it!" But, unless we greatly mistake, this agitation, like most others, develops difficulties in the practical application that will need much careful discrimination in those who are to guide it; to say nothing of the need of patience and good-nature in bringing into harmony the various elements by which, after all, it must be carried. If we are at once to banish to the ranks of the enemy all who venture to criticise a single detail of our policy, the party of reform will soon become conveniently small. For one, I frankly confess that on some of these details I would gladly take counsel with those wiser than myself.

1. Take, for instance, the exemption of church property from taxation. I am wholly opposed to such exemption, and it is even held by good lawyers to be contrary to the constitution of the State in which I live (Rhode Island), which provides that "no man shall be compelled to frequent or to support any religious worship, place, or ministry whatever, except in fulfillment of his own voluntary contract,"—the italics being my own. So far is comparatively clear and it would seem at first sight to be a sheer case of religious persecution, needing simply to be abolished. But as soon as we look a little further it turns out to be a much wider question than that. For not only are religious societies thus exempted in Rhode Island, but all charitable and educational institutions, all incorporated schools and libraries, all Masonic or Odd Fellows associations; in short, a vast variety of bodies, non-religious as well as religious, all exempted in the same degree. It is like those ponds so tangled with water plants that you try to pick a lily and find yourself lifting the whole surface of the pond. It is not merely the religious question that is to be settled, but the whole theory of exemption or non-exemption, of which the religious question is but a subordinate part. In this view we non-exemptionists certainly need some mutual consultation. Shall we refuse exemption to church property and leave it to all the rest? We shall have the common sense of the community against us; for who can deny that a Christian church is as much entitled to that protection as any secret, oath-bound society? Shall we deny exemption to all? That certainly would be my own view; but as soon as we take that position we have against us not merely the Roman Catholic Church, on the one side, but the thoroughly secular President Eliot and his university on the other, and every Mason and Odd Fellow in the country will be of the same opinion. All this does not prove that action is of no use; but that the action is to have a much wider basis than was supposed, and that the question of religious toleration is, after all, merged in a vast question of social science, in which Christian or anti-Christian feeling will have small place.

2. Another form of the same question is that presented by the proposed eighth section of the Bill of Rights in the Constitutional Convention of Missouri, providing, in brief, that any gift, sale, or devise of land or goods for the use or benefit or support of any minister or preacher of the gospel or religious sect shall be void. If those who urge or approve this prohibition would apply the same to the Masonic order or the German Turnverein, it would be consistent. But to single out Christian organizations as such—supposing this to be the intended meaning of the words “the gospel”—is as clear an act of persecution as if the same thing were done to Jews or Atheists; and it would be wise for reformers to discuss the full bearings of such extraordinary measures before seriously bringing them forward.

3. Another point, which may prove less difficult, is the question of chaplains in prisons. By putting a chaplain, as such, in any prison, the State virtually supports the opinions of that man on religious subjects, and sustains such forms as he may prefer to administer; which is clearly wrong, on the secular theory of government. On the other hand, it is very desirable to bring to bear the needed moral and spiritual influences on prisoners; and it may justly be said that immense inconvenience would follow from opening a prison to the religious teachings of various faiths—e. g., in San Francisco, where it might be necessary to provide room, seats, altars, candles, and the rest, for Jew, Buddhist, Greek Catholic, Roman Catholic, and Protestant, all at the same time. We certainly need counsel from the experts in prison discipline to learn the best practical solution of the problem how to secure the needed influences for the prisoner, and yet not make the jail a mere battleground for contending sects.

4. Then there is the question as to the use of the Bible in schools. So far as religious instruction and exercises are concerned, your correspondent, Rev. John Monteith, stated very forcibly the grounds of objection to these in your paper of May 20th. Indeed, in this State (Rhode Island), where the traditions of religious liberty are strong, it is laid down in the State digest of school laws that school committees have no legal power to require religious exercises in our schools, and can only “recommend” them at most. But suppose it a settled thing that religious exercises are to be omitted in all schools, as they now are in many schools. Is this to be held equivalent to the absolute exclusion of the Bible in all cases? Many radicals—including the “Liberal Leagues,” most of whose demands appear to me unexceptionable—say that it should be so excluded.

I wonder that radicals do not see that this policy would be conceding just what they are disposed to deny; that the Bible is to be treated as a wholly exceptional book. At any rate, it would have practically the weight of such a conclusion, just as the prohibition of Roman Catholic religious services in countries otherwise free would be likely to strengthen that church, as being a recognition of its power. Moreover, it is practically impossible to study history or English literature in any extended way without reference to the English Bible; and to exclude it from such use on the ground that it would be used covertly as a means of religious instruction by Evangelical teachers is like refusing to permit Roman Catholics to teach in our schools at all (as I have heard seriously proposed), for fear they should aim at proselytism. Why not assume that even Evangelical and Roman Catholic teachers will have common sense and common honesty? Any teacher can be a propagandist who wishes. He can teach the five points or the Thirty-nine Articles under cover of algebra or chemistry, if he will. The way to disarm him is to trust him; the way to teach him tricks is to suspect him of them.

See what absurdities would result from the application of any such rigid restriction. In one of the best series of readers I have lately inspected, there are given beautiful extracts from the Old and New Testaments, in the regular course of daily reading—just as was done in the Barbauld's Lessons of my childhood. In my view, this is as it should be. The passages are left to stand upon their own merits; no question is raised as to whether they are to be interpreted according to the strictness of Hengstenberg, or with the liberality of Strickland. There they are; they speak for themselves; they are the best part of the book. Yet under this rule, misnamed “liberal,” the teacher must go through that book and tear out every page containing these passages; prohibiting in the name of “liberalism” precisely that simple use of the Jewish and Christian Scriptures which liberalism itself would demand.

So in studying the history of the Mohammedan conquests, the Koran may be freely used under such a rule, but not the Bible; in studying the history of Asia, Conway's Sacred Anthology may be employed to illustrate the character and habits of Oriental nations; but the teacher must lose his position if he reads a parallel passage from the Jewish or Christian Scriptures. No matter if a pupil is being fitted to enter a college which still examines for admission on a portion of the Greek Testament, he cannot bring that volume into the high school, but must use it only by private instruction. All this seems to me poor judgment and poorer liberality. It would end only in reaction and the reestablishment of just what it seeks to destroy. And I would beg my brother liberals, within the ranks of Christianity and without it, to reason together on these things, that they may at last unite on a platform of demand so clear and wise that opposition shall be reduced to a minimum, and success shall be sure.—Independent.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE was placed on the verge of a panic by the failure of Mr. Daniel Drew, “the veteran operator,” to make good his “puts” and “calls.” It turned out the next day, however, that the reason was that he was sick at home, and had neglected to give instructions to his brokers about the matter. Mr. Drew is eighty-two years old, and at that age it is not surprising that a man should be sick, and should forget his “puts,” and be unmindful of his “calls”; but when his indisposition and his forgetfulness threaten the public with a financial crisis, it is not unfair to ask whether it would not be well for a person so well advanced in life to forsake the Stock Exchange altogether. There must surely be some pursuit which a gentleman of Mr. Drew's well-known piety could find distraction in, in his last years, besides betting on stocks. He may at any moment, in the natural order, have not only “to lay down on his stock privileges,” as they say on the Street, but to “lay down on” everything in the world; and we beg most earnestly to suggest that he will, in the interest of society, prepare for that event by a complete retirement from business. We make this appeal to him as to an aged patriot; his pastor might reinforce it by considerations of a higher order, addressed to him in the character of an old sinner.—Nation, April 8.

ONE OF THE LAST as well as one of the neatest hits made by General Butler, just before the close of the last session in Congress, occurred during the famous “dead-lock” fight on the Civil Rights Bill. The question of adjournment was under consideration, and General Butler had stepped over to Mr. Randall's desk for a private consultation. Butler favored a Sunday session. Randall opposed.

“Bad as I am, I have some respect for God's day,” said the Democrat, “and I don't think it proper to hold a session of Congress on that day.”

“Oh, pshaw!” responded Butler; “don't the Bible say that it is lawful to pull your ox or ass out of a pit on the Sabbath-day? You have seventy-three asses on your side of this House that I want to get out of this ditch to-morrow, and I think I am engaged in a holy work.”

“Don't do it, Butler,” pleaded Sam. “I have some respect for you that I don't want to lose. I expect some day to meet you in a better world.”

“You'll be there, as you are here,” retorted Butler, quick as thought, “a member of the Lower House.”—Exchange.

THE REV. DR. McCULLOCH, minister of Douglass in Clydesdale, was one day dining with a large party where the Hon. Henry Erskine and some lawyers were present. A great dish of water-cresses being, according to the fashion of the period, handed round after dinner, Dr. McCulloch, who was extravagantly fond of vegetables, helped himself much more largely than any other person, and, as he ate with his fingers with a peculiar voracity of manner, Mr. Erskine was struck with the idea that he resembled Nebuchadnezzar in his state of condemnation. Resolved to give the minister a hit for the grossness of his taste and manner of eating, the wit addressed him with: “Dr. McCulloch, ye bring me in mind of the great King Nebuchadnezzar;” and the company were beginning to titter at the ludicrous allusion, when the reverend devourer of cresses replied: “Ay, do I mind ye o' Nebuchadnezzar? That'll be because I am eating among the brutes, then!”

THE Monteur gave the following account of the death of General Douay at the battle of Weissenburg. The general, from the beginning of the engagement, was in the thickest of the fight. When at last he saw the day was lost, after he had done all he could to retrieve it, and that not even a battalion was left him, he called his aids one by one, and gave them orders and sent them away. As soon as the last was gone, the general, spurring his horse, rode some distance to the front, dismounted, and taking a pistol from the holster, shot the animal. Then turning around he slowly walked towards the enemy. His soldiers vainly tried to stop him. Amid the terrible firing, he deliberately walked on. The retreating soldiers, aroused by the spectacle, turned again upon the enemy, but fell in heaps around their general, who still pressed forward. Another tremendous discharge from the enemy, and Douay, almost alone, fell dead.

A STORY is told of a couple of farmers who lived not a great distance apart, one of whom was noted for being very penurious. One day his neighbor called upon him while he was eating dinner, but instead of asking him to sit down to the table with him, he kept on eating and talking just as though the visitor hadn't a mouth in his head. “Well, what is the news, neighbor Brown?” “Nothing much.” “No news up your way?” he asked, still helping himself to his good dinner, while his neighbor looked on with anxiety and appetite. “Well, yes, now I think on't, there is just a grain of news. Mr. Jones' cow has got five calves,” replied the visitor. “Five calves! I never heard of such a thing. Why, what the dickens does the fifth one do while the other four are sucking?” “Why, he stands and looks on like a dumb fool, as I am doing now.” “Oh! ah! Hannah, put down another plate.”

“HAPPY is that human being,” says the Tribune, “who has the tact to do a disagreeable thing beautifully. Here are the men of America continually a-babbling concerning the aggravating height of feminine hats in theatre audiences. And yet no manager in the land has the wit to remove those torments in the simple manner adopted by the functionary of a French provincial theatre. He made no boisterous observations; he gave no stern orders; not he. He merely printed in large letters on his play-bills this masterpiece of genius: ‘The manager begs that all good-looking ladies will remove their hats for the accommodation of the rest of the audience. The aged, the bald, and the plain are not expected to comply with this request.’ From that auspicious night the soaring bonnet and the mountainous hat were invisible in that wise man's theatre.”

DR. SUMNER once held a canon's stall in Durham Cathedral, where he frequently performed service. The students of the university attended service in the centre of the church. One morning an undergraduate, coming in whilst the organist was playing the voluntary, made haste to get to his seat. Hurrying past the lectern, his gown caught and began to tear. As is their wont, the students tittered; the unfortunate undergraduate, becoming confused, rushed on, splitting his gown into halves, and by the very noise made with the tearing drawing universal attention. Before he had got to his seat the canon rose abstractedly, and commenced the service with, “Rend your hearts and not your garments,” etc. The whole congregation, already with difficulty suppressing its amusement, burst into laughter.

IN THE OFFICE of one of the hotels recently a gentleman snapped his finger to a boot-black, and as he put his foot on the box he said: “You look like a good, smart boy.” “See here, mister!” replied the boy as he rose up, a brush in either hand, “I've had that game played on me a dozen times; and now I want to know whether this is a cash shine, or whether you're going to pat me on the head when I get through, and tell me that I'll be Governor of Michigan some day?”—Detroit Free Press.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

YOUTH.

BY S. H. MORSE.

O HAPPY YOUTH! and thou dost keep Thy garments white!
Thou dost with each day's burden reap
Sweet sleep by night.

How beauteous are thy untired steps
As thou goest free!
This universe thy youth accepts
Is fair to see.

Fair, fair is all the future time
To thy young soul;
And thou dost find in every clime
The perfect whole.

The secrets of the earth are thine
To open all;
And stars in heaven that brightly shine
For thee do call.

And souls of men for beauty born
Draw nigh to thee.
And in thy heart is God's adorn—
Thyself, art He!

THE BROTHERS.

We are but two; the others sleep
Through death's untroubled night;
We are but two; oh let us keep
The link that binds us bright.

Heart leaps to heart; the sacred flood
That warms us is the same;
That good old man; his honest blood
Alike we fondly claim.

We in one mother's arms were locked;
Long be her love repaid!
In the same cradle we were rocked,
Round the same hearth we played.

Our boyish sports were all the same,
Each little joy and woe;
Let manhood keep alive the flame,
Lit up so long ago.

We are but two; be that the band
To hold us till we die;
Shoulder to shoulder let us stand,
Till side by side we lie.

CHARLES SPRAGUE.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING AUG. 7.

Henry Gerson, $3.75; S. Kingma, $5.35; Thos. Carleton, $5; J. M. Grant, $1.60; N. A. Hayward, 28 cents; G. H. Holtzman, $3; L. S. Hapgood, $3.20; E. P. Robeson, $3; Eliza A. Babbitt, $3; Merritt Peckham, $3.20; Asa C. Pierce, $3.20; Thos. F. Hamilton, $9; Thos. J. Crouse, $3.20; J. H. Howland, $3.20; German Casino, $3.20; E. D. Sohler, $3.20; Willis P. Corbin, $1.60; C. M. Dennison, $3.20; O. F. Mason, $10; A. Stephan, $3.20; D. R. Sparks, $3; W. R. Cole, $3.20; W. H. Walworth, $3.20; A. G. Wheelock, $3.20; Horace Richey, $10; Howes Chapman, $3.20; M. A. Ballou, $10; W. J. Warrington, 75 cents; Geo. Iles, 50 cents; W. L. Gardner, 25 cents; F. A. Angell, 25 cents; Elsie Nicholson, $2; J. P. Dunn, 25 cents; O. S. Barr, 55 cents; Sarah E. Whitney, 25 cents; John H. Lull, $20; R. C. Spencer, $20; A. Taft, $10.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, AUGUST 12, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCOIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E.
D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS
W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
(England), Editorial Contributors.

MR. J. W. PIKE, of Vineland, has just published a neat pamphlet of forty-five pages, with large type and excellent paper, on The Fallacies of the Free Love Theory; or, Love Considered as a Religion. Professor William Denton contributes a short preface. It is seldom that we can speak of any pamphlet in such strong terms of commendation as we can of this. A delicate subject is treated in its pages with the utmost purity and dignity, and no one could take offence at the manner in which it is handled. At the same time a very remarkable strength and insight are brought to bear upon it, and the plausible sophistries of the free-love theory are refuted with great ability and conclusiveness. No person who is interested in this theme ought to be unacquainted with Mr. Pike's little treatise. Considering it extremely useful in the service of the true theory of sexual morality, we have made arrangements with the author to furnish it from this office to such as may order it; and it will be mailed post-paid at the price of twenty cents.

F. R. A. ANNUAL REPORT.

The Report, in pamphlet form, of the Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association for 1875 is now ready.

It contains an Essay by Wm. C. Gannett, on "Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and an Essay by F. E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. B. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

It can be obtained, in Boston, at A. Williams & Co.'s, and by mail by addressing "Office of Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass."

Price of single copy, 35 cents; package of four copies or more, 25 cents each.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

CALL FOR THE SEPTEMBER CONVENTION.

The Liberal Leagues throughout the country are cordially invited to send five delegates each to a Convention to be held in Philadelphia on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of September next, for the purpose of disseminating our principles and of making arrangements for a general Congress of Liberals to convene next year during the Centennial exhibition. It is very desirable that every Liberal League in America should be fully represented at the September Convention. Now is the time to work. The enemies of religious freedom are busy in preparing to utilize human ignorance and superstition for the strengthening and perpetuating of an organized system of mental repression, hostile alike to science, reason, and the right of private judgment in all matters of faith and conscience.

Let us endeavor to overcome ignorance by intelligence,—superstition by reason. Let each League send a full representation of men and women, so that from the combined wisdom of both sexes and all our societies we may be able to inaugurate a new era of impartial justice, perfect freedom, and scientific religion.

As soon as delegates are elected, Leagues are requested to notify the undersigned, and also THE INDEX.

JOHN S. DYE,

Sec'y Phila. Liberal League,
2527 Brown Street, Phila.

PHILADELPHIA, July 22, 1875.

N. B.—All Liberal Societies which sympathize with the objects of the Liberal Leagues and wish to be represented are included in the above Call.

DELEGATES REPORTED.

PHILADELPHIA LIBERAL LEAGUE.—Isaac Rhen (President), John S. Dye (Secretary), Carrie S. Burnham, Damon Y. Kilgore, Jesse B. Beam.
BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.—F. E. Abbot (President), Geo. A. Bacon (Secretary), A. Bronson Alcott, B. F. Underwood, John Wetherbee.

"STEPS IN SECULARIZATION."

On a previous page will be found an article by Col. Higginson with the above caption, originally contributed to the Independent. He points out that the treaty with Tripoli, signed by Washington in 1796, "placed our government on a purely secular basis," and that "the absolute separation of Church and State is one of our centennial traditions." "But, however clearly," he adds, "we may agree upon this principle, there are points of detail which present practical difficulties; and of some of these I now wish to speak. It is easy, of course, to take a position of absolute dogmatism on either side. It is easy to resist all change, even when demanded for the sake of consistency. On the other hand, it is easy for any radical to draw up for himself, off-hand, a list of points to be amended, and to say to all the world: 'This is the way, walk ye in it!'"

This last sentence is, of course, an allusion to the "Demands of Liberalism," which are thus indirectly instanced as an illustration of "taking a position of absolute dogmatism"; and, equally of course, the allusion is less than just or fair. The "Demands of Liberalism" simply plant themselves on the justice and necessity of the principle of the "absolute separation of Church and State," as one which constitutes the very basis of the Republic, is conceded nominally and in the abstract on all hands, and needs no demonstration so far as our own citizens are concerned; they then simply proceed to enumerate carefully all the practical infringements of this principle in the existing state of things, and to utter a strong protest against them as constituting in the aggregate a great public grievance. What is there of "dogmatism" in all this? If there is any "dogma" in the "Demands of Liberalism," it is the dogma which Col. Higginson plants himself upon, when he says that "the absolute separation of Church and State is one of our centennial traditions." He is exactly as much guilty of "absolute dogmatism" in this matter as we are, for he assumes the very same dogma, and just as dogmatically. We have never said, "This is the way, walk ye in it!" or any thing like that; and it is a species of ad captandum disparagement, for which we were quite unprepared, to suggest that we have said it, virtually or otherwise. If by "absolute dogmatism" he merely means a persistent and uncompromising spirit in working for the "dogma" which is his as well as ours, we plead guilty of the crime without delay, and acquit him of it at the same time. But we point out that no man can withhold his sympathy, approbation, and full assent from the "Demands of Liberalism," unless he either repudiates the great principle on which they rest or else is apathetic and indifferent to the practical violations of it. Not a single one of those infringements of the secular principle can be approved without condemning the principle itself to that extent. Here is the head and front of our offending—the sum and substance of our "absolute dogmatism." But the whole responsibility for it lies further back than Col. Higginson perceives—in the laws of logic, which make it impossible to advocate pure secularism abstractly, and yet yield to ecclesiasticism practically, without self-evident inconsistency. The only "dogmatism" which can be pointed out in the course of THE INDEX consists in a profound respect for the laws of logic.

We pass to the series of observations on "points of detail which present practical difficulties": a euphemistic designation of certain clear and flagrant violations of the secular principle.

1. The "difficulty" as to the exemption of church property from taxation, to which exemption Col. Higginson is "wholly opposed," is the fact that exemption is extended to various non-religious as well as to religious bodies; that the whole theory of exemption is involved in the discussion; and that "the question of religious toleration is, after all, merged in a vast question of social science, in which Christian or anti-Christian feeling will have small place." If it is true that "feeling" will be thrown out of this question, there is some hope of arriving at a just solution of it; for it is a question of equity and not of "feeling" of any sort. But the "difficulty" is not one of principle in the slightest degree; it is simply an obstacle in the very plain pathway of just reform, and can cause confusion in no mind that firmly believes in "the absolute separation of Church and State." If church-exemption is all snarled up with the exemption of charities and schools and colleges, so much the more reason for unravelling the tangle—so much the more reason for showing the people that different principles must be applied to the differing cases—so much the more reason, in short, for Liberal Leagues. Whether charities and colleges should be exempted or not, it is perfectly plain that churches should be taxed; since to exempt them is to tax the whole people for their support—a glaring and incontestable violation of well-recognized rights. There is no difficulty here in discovering what is just, or what should be worked for: the only difficulty is, first, in persuading the sluggish or over-prudent liberals to demand their rights, and secondly, in persuading the indifferent public to concede them.

2. The "difficulty" as to the eighth section of the Bill of Rights in the proposed new Constitution of Missouri does not concern us and may be dismissed. The section is not a part of the "Demands of Liberalism," nor does it seem a just regulation.

3. The "difficulty" as to prison chaplains belongs to the general subject of prison discipline and prison reform. There is no difficulty in seeing that the State has no right on American principles to support any ministers of religion anywhere. How to "bring to bear the needed moral and spiritual influences on prisoners" is an independent and very perplexing question—especially since they are very seldom "brought to bear" under the chaplain system; but this question need not embarrass us now. The growing demand of the Catholic Church to have an equal finger in this nice chaplaincy pie, and the likelihood that other sects will soon be making trouble on the same score, reveals the absurdity of the whole system and bids fair to break it up. But the prisoners will doubtless be better cared for morally, when the custom of turning over the moral custody of them all to a single paid official has been abolished, when every prison officer is expected to be a wise friend to those under his immediate control, and when all good people interest themselves as they should in providing for the highest wants of those whom society has deprived of freedom for its own good. There is no difficulty here as to the "Demands of Liberalism," but only as to the general management of prisons and prisoners: the duty of the State to cease its support of the Church is perfectly plain, and this "difficulty" will embarrass nobody who perceives that duty.

4. It is only with regard to the Bible in schools that Col. Higginson directly criticises the Liberal League by name. Its platform protests against church-exemption: he agrees with it there, and is merely perplexed about exempting colleges and charities. Its platform protests against chaplaincies: he agrees with it again, and is merely perplexed on questions of prison reform. But when its platform protests against the use of the Bible in schools, "whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship," he thinks he dissents, and therefore blames. But, in order to discover a ground of dissent, he is obliged to twist and pervert (of course unintentionally) the meaning of the very explicit language just quoted. The fourth "Demand" speaks only of the use of the Bible as "a text-book" or "a book of religious worship"; it does not refer in the remotest way to any extracts from the Bible that may chance to be incorporated in school-readers or histories, but speaks only of the Bible as a whole. Col. Higginson takes for granted, however, an interpretation of that "Demand" which can only be got out of it by the most unwarrantable stretching; he himself makes the "Demand" absurd, and then exclaims, "See what absurdities would result from the application of any such rigid restriction." He goes on to mention a school-reader in which Bible extracts make "the best part of the book," and says: "Under this rule, mis-called 'liberal,' the teacher must go through that book, and tear out every page containing these passages," etc.

Such criticism as this is utterly frivolous, pointless, and unfair; coming from such a critic, it is surprising in the extreme. The Bible could not possibly be used either as "a text-book" or as "a book of religious worship," if it were only available in such brief extracts as are contained in school-readers; yet it is nothing but its use in school as "a book" against which the fourth "Demand" protests. Is not the reason sufficiently obvious? As a religious book, the Bible of course could not be used at all in purely secular schools. But as a text-book, the Bible as a whole could only be introduced into such schools dishonestly. Neither as a text-book of science, history, literature, morals, or anything else, could an honest and intelligent school committee direct it to be used; and its ostensible presence as a text-book would be to all but simpletons a proof positive of its furtive religious use. We have never said anything against the genuine literary use of the Bible,—or against its rational religious use outside of the public schools; and of this fact Col. Higginson ought to be aware, if he is not. The "absurdities" he is so acute as to discover lurking in the fourth "Demand of Liberalism" are the grotesque progeny of his own capricious and lawless exegesis. No such consequences as he deduces from it were intended; neither are they to be found implied in it, except by criticism that disdains all restraints of fact.

In short, Col. Higginson has been criticising the "Demands of Liberalism," and trying to discover something in them to dissent from, but totally without success. The only point of real difference is one which his imagination has created for the occasion. It turns out, therefore, at least so far as his present statement is concerned, that his "brother liberals" need not go any further to find "a platform of demand so clear and wise that opposition shall be reduced to a minimum and success shall be sure." Will Col. Higginson, then, advise them all to "unite" upon it? If not, we trust he will himself draft such a "platform of demand" as shall be more "clear and wise" than the "Demands of Liberalism."

PARTY BLINDNESS.

THE INDEX, of July 22, contained an article copied from Harper's Weekly, and emanating doubtless from the pen of George William Curtis. It was entitled "A New Plank in Platforms." That article, considering its source, seems to me to be such an extraordinary piece of political writing, and to betray so glaringly the strong prejudices of a partisan, that I cannot be content to let it go forth to the readers of THE INDEX,—among whom are found members of all parties, and those who belong to none,—without at least expressing my decided dissent from some of its sweeping conclusions, which I believe to be partial, unjust, and false in the extreme.

Mr. Curtis is a man for whom, in general, I have a profound admiration and respect. He is one of the most elegant writers among American journalists and essayists. He has a wealth of culture and a perfection of style which is scarcely equalled and not excelled by any of his contemporaries. As a citizen of the republic, a member and in some respects a leader of one of our great political parties, he is among the most eminent of all men for ability and spotless integrity. Withal, he is a genial and benevolent man and high-toned gentleman.

And yet, Mr. Curtis is a partisan; and within the last few years he has developed that character to a surprising and painful degree. I do not mean to affirm that George William Curtis is a politician who would say, "My party, right or wrong." Without doubt, he is honest and sincere in believing that the Republican party to which he belongs is the only party worthy of trust and support—is the only party which, in the present state of national affairs, can be made to be worthy of trust and support. But no candid and impartial person, it seems to me, can read this article which THE INDEX copied, or re-read many of the political articles written by Mr. Curtis within the last three or four years, without perceiving that this distinguished gentleman is wofully struck with party blindness. Can we forget how deep was this blindness in 1872? When Sumner and Schurz could see such fatal defects in the Republican party, that they felt compelled not only to point them out but to leave the party altogether, Mr. Curtis could discover no reason for denouncing or even criticising his party, but remained in it, defending and supporting it through thick and thin; remained among the shameful slanderers and abusers of these stainless statesmen; among those who vilely caricatured Horace Greeley, and added their persecution to other troubles that drove him into his untimely though honorable grave. And when the Republican administration disgraced itself with a treacherous betrayal of the civil-service reform, Mr. Curtis, although resigning his place at the head of that commission, still continued to support the administration; and, doubtless, if Gen. Grant should be re-nominated by the Republican party for a third term, Mr. Curtis would find it advisable on the whole to advocate his reelection to an office which he has, in so many ways, aided to dishonor.

Now it so happens that I never have voted in my life any other national ticket than that which the Republican party has proposed, although in 1872 I should have been proud to cast my vote for Horace Greeley, had I not lost the privilege to do so by a change of residence. But when Mr. Curtis, with all the indiscriminate zeal of an ordinary politician, institutes a wholesale comparison between the Democratic and Republican parties, and finds that the former is a synonyme in our national history solely of slavery, anarchy, ignorance, political rascality and moral degradation, while the latter in his estimation stands alone for freedom, order, education, political and moral purity,—I must protest that through partisan prejudice he strangely misreads and misrepresents the actual history of the two parties, and falls into partialities and inaccuracies of statement that are simply amazing in one so intelligent and honest.

The fact is that the Democratic party was for years the party of the people, par excellence, in this country; that it stood for some of the noblest political ideas that have obtained signal prominence and advocacy in America, and enrolled among its members some of the most shining names that have lent lustre to our national history. State sovereignty, local self-government, free trade, a sound currency, anti-monopoly,—these are some of the mottoes that the Democratic party bore upon its banner for years and years. And in all this it stood in opposition to the Whig party, which always represented centralization, conservatism, and aristocracy. The Democratic party, indeed, in all its long history, which is coextensive with the history of the republic, has made but one mistake; that of suffering its political fortunes to become identified with the institution of negro slavery in the South. That in truth was a sad and fatal mistake, and yet one which it fell into, not as Mr. Curtis would have us believe through its anarchical and disunion proclivities, but from its desire on the contrary to preserve the Union by maintaining constitutional guaranties, and to be true at the same time to its cardinal doctrine of local self-government. The strength of the pro-slavery tendencies of the Democratic party was mainly in the Southern portion of it, as it was natural enough it should be. In the Northern portion of that party there were large numbers who abhorred slavery, who protested against its further extension into then free territory; and who, when all opposition to the pro-slavery rule of the party was seen to be hopeless, aided in forming the new Republican party in the North. Many of the best intellects and fairest consciences that conspired to create and continue the new party came from the old Democratic party, where they had been nurtured and educated for generations in the Jeffersonian principles of popular liberty and human rights; while from the old aristocratic Whig party went those elements which conduced to the most hard-shelled hunkerism in the modern, pro-slavery Democracy.

Mr. Curtis would seem to intimate that it was the Republican party alone which subsequently overthrew slavery, and put down secession and rebellion. He ought to know better than that; certainly the country knows better. I tell him that it was the people of the North who did this, not any mere party. It was Democrats and Republicans who did it; for the men and money needed to accomplish it came from both parties. Who were our most successful generals in the field? Were they not Democrats as well as Republicans? Did Republican soldiers fight any better than Democratic soldiers? Only he who is struck with party blindness will think of claiming that our late civil war was carried through to a successful issue by any mere political party in the land. I repeat again, the PEOPLE did it; and to the PEOPLE belongs the praise.

And who, since the war, has been responsible for the reign of terrorism and anarchy in the South? "The Democratic party!" fanatically cries the elegant editor of Harper's Weekly. But who were the carpet-baggers, the shameful and rascally misrulers of the South, Mr. Curtis? Were they Democrats? On the contrary, were they not nearly all Republicans? And how wisely and well have our Republican administration, and our Republican Congress, aided to conciliate and harmonize the Southern people, and to restore prosperity and good order to the Southern States? Let the masterly and unanswerable speeches of Sumner and Schurz reply. Let the political history of the country, during all these troublous times, reply; and let not the partisan utterances of Mr. Curtis go for more than they are worth.

Moreover, is it Democrats any more than Republicans who now oppose a return to specie payments, who advocate inflation, who favor a union between Church and State, who are uncertain in their utterances and action concerning woman's rights, labor reform, temperance, and unsectarian schools? Mr. Curtis makes haste to inform us that the Democratic party is always sure to be found on the wrong side of all these questions, and the Republican party on the right side. But the fact is that many prominent men of both parties are found on either side of all these questions; while both parties, as parties, treat these matters, so far as any real action goes, with gingerly precaution. So far as Church and State are concerned, and unsectarian schools, it is the Christian party, irrespective of political distinctions, that is found on the wrong side; and it is to the Free Religious men and women of this country, again irrespective of political distinctions, that we must look for a wise and practical solution of these questions.

The truth is that it has come to pass in this country when no political party that now exists, or is likely to exist, can be relied on to do justly and love mercy in our national affairs. It is in the whole people that we must put our hope and trust—the whole people, as they shall be operated upon by slowly-advancing ideas of truth, justice, and purity. That man who points us to any party, and bids us expect our salvation from it, is a blind leader of the blind, and not for a moment to be trusted. But we, the people,—we ourselves must save ourselves, if we are to be saved. All parties, both in Church and State, are in the long run unreliable. They will, in the end, consider and work for mere party interests, without regard to a true commonwealth or a true civilization. The Republican party reeks with corruption to-day, as much as the Democratic. Without doubt, a new deal is necessary, and will soon be had, all round. The best men of both parties will combine to produce it. Not party blindness, but the vision of free and honest intelligence, is to discover the way whereby this nation is to pass out from its present difficulties of misrule and mismanagement into an assured position involving equal justice to all classes and conditions. The signs of the times are hopeful rather than discouraging. The "common people" are thinking deeply on all these things. They are beginning to refuse to be led by party leaders. They will follow ideas. And now is the time when it is more noble to work to create sentiment than to organize parties.

A. W. S.

FREE THOUGHT NOTES.

BY A VETERAN ENGLISH FREE-THINKER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—My chambers overlook the Thames at Temple Bar; and, when I could see, I could look upon the river. Of late I have only learned when daylight has come through the information of friendly sparrows, who come chirping at my casement to let me know that the sun is up, opening his stores of light, and commencing business with the world. The enemy has returned upon me, but has done little harm to my newly-acquired health, and has contented himself with imposing upon me privation of sight and discomfort. Do you know I think I have Conservative eyes, as they do not see much, and do not like seeing that? Sometimes I think they are Trades-Union eyes, and are on a strike; but, as friends unforeseen and unexpected have in America as well as in England accorded me increased means (under circumstances of kindness and distinction which much impress me), I suppose my eyes will come to an arrangement, and resume work again. If so, you shall hear from me with more regularity, as I believe I have lost two months.

My last disablement became sensible to me, while trying to read up some law-cases applicable to the recent movements of the Sabbatarians here. They have closed an aquarium which had been for some time open on Sundays at Brighton, the nearest seacoast to London, if regard be had to convenience in going there. If one set of tradesmen in England were to put down rival places of business, there would be a great outcry at the unfairness. But the clergy can do this. There is an act of George the Third which enables them to close any place of interest or instruction to the people, if money be taken at the doors, or in any way, for admission. George the Third was a sort of patron saint of intolerance, and the clergy grew fat in injustice during his reign. Did not Thackeray come lecturing in your country on the "Four Georges"? Well, Walter Savage Landor put the whole thing into six lines, to this effect:—

"George the First was always reckoned Vile—viler George the Second;
And what mortal ever heard
Any good of George the Third?
And when from earth the Fourth descended,
God be praised—the Georges ended!"

The Sabbatarians have made a great mistake in bringing the statute bearing the name of the obstinate old king to the front. So long as they applied it to working people unable to resent it, they were safe. By applying it to the shareholders of the Brighton Aquarium, they rob that company of £3,000 a year; and it is rich enough to resent it. Besides, Brighton sent two Tory members to Parliament last election, and Mr. Cross, the Tory Home Secretary, is obliged to sympathize with the losses of Tory supporters. He has, therefore, so far thrown the Sabbatarians over, as to refuse to enforce the penalties of the act. The two liberal members displaced at Brighton were Professor Fawcett and a very eminent liberal, James White, who had achieved a very considerable Parliamentary reputation. Brighton would not stand the loss of its liberal members, and the aquarium too. Three deputations waited on our Home Secretary, and one of them, Lord Shaftesbury, urged the old and futile argument that any recreation on the Sunday involved the obligation of labor on the working classes. Whereupon I wrote a letter to the Examiner,—the famous journal started by Leigh Hunt and Lord Byron, and now understood to be the property of P. A. Taylor, M.P., well worthy to succeed them as far as liberalism is concerned.

[Mr. Holyoake's letter to the Examiner was republished in THE INDEX of July 15.—ED.]

Mr. Cowen, M.P., attended one of the deputations on behalf of the people, and pointed out that the Park at Newcastle-on-Tyne had cost £25,000; that it was kept in order by the charge of a penny admission for each visitor on Sunday; and that it would be closed by the operation of the Act in question. The busy people on the Tyne side live in a perfect atmosphere of smoke and sulphur, and a passenger looks down upon the town from the high-level bridge which spans the Tyne at a great altitude. Newcastle-on-Tyne seems like the bottomless pit; and the Sabbatarians who would deprive the working-people of means of escape to the Park deserved to be sent to the bottomless pit themselves, for a week. Mr. Cowen put a question in Parliament to Mr. Cross, demanding to know whether he intended to apply the law to the Zoological Gardens, and the Botanical Gardens, which were both liable to be closed by the operation of this Act. Mr. Cross said he believed he had the power to remit the penalties. To the other deputation, he said he was advised he had the power. The opinion I published, in which I said he would find he had no such power, has turned out to be correct. Mr. Cross has had to confess in Parliament that he was wrong, when he said he believed he had the power, and that his advisers were wrong when they said he had the power. He has been obliged to ask Parliament to give him leave to bring in a Bill to enable him to remit these penalties. This is the greatest triumph which the friends of the wise use of Sunday have obtained. When the penalties are remitted, what becomes of the Act? It could only be enforced by the consent of the Home Secretary, who will be answerable to Parliament for every act of enforcement; and no Home Secretary in England will venture to outrage the common sense of the nation, by prohibiting men of science in addressing the people on Sunday, or coöperators from advocating domestic and social improvement on that day. The ill-advised zeal of the Sabbatarians has thus led to unforeseen and unexpected good.

Please read my letters for what printers call the "sense"; and, if through my inability to revise what I dictate I am not intelligible, please do me the favor of making me so.

Ever yours,

GEO. JACOB HOLYOAKE.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—I have as a rule studiously refrained from taking any notice whatever of adverse and abusive criticism; in the first place, because it does not make me angry; and, in the second place, because such a mode of attack is undeserving of attention. There is, however, such a tidbit in the Church Herald in reference to my sermons on Moody and Sankey, that I must quote it, partly for the amusement of your readers, and partly for their warning:—

"The Rev. C. Voysey has succeeded in writing the most hideous blasphemy which it has ever been our misfortune to read. . . Mr. Voysey hypothetically attacks the Almighty in terms which we should think are unequalled in the vocabulary of unbelief. . . After reading Mr. Voysey's pamphlet we have been unable to refrain from speculating as to what would happen to this gentleman, if we lived in a perfect state of society [the italics are mine]. As, instead of this, we live in days of liberalism and unbridled license, Mr. Voysey, and such as he, will probably be allowed to go on inflaming the minds of the ill-instructed against their Creator, until it is not safe for one who believes in God to show his face in the street. It is, of course, impossible for us to reproduce the passages which have occasioned these remarks. . ."

After reading the foregoing lines, I have been "unable to refrain from speculating" as to what would happen to the Church Herald, if I were to bring against the proprietors an action for libel.

I do not see how it is possible to have invented any charge against me more palpably and obtrusively false, than that of "inflaming the minds of the ill-instructed against their Creator." Nor would any man in his senses, writing his honest thought, say that my patent endeavor is not to help and encourage people to believe in God, instead of making it "unsafe for any one who believes in God to show his face in the street."

Misrepresentation in controversy—even in theological controversy—has its limits; and I imagine that a jury would readily conclude that this "elegant extract" of criticism had exceeded those limits.

But it was not about myself that I purposed to call your attention to the above quotation. I have emphasized the words—"if we lived in a perfect state of society"—as a note of warning which all of us on both sides of the Atlantic would do well to heed. The writer of those words explains what he means by "a perfect state of society" in the next sentence. "As, instead of this, we live in days of liberalism and unbridled license," etc. Now, bearing in mind that the "liberalism and unbridled license" over which he mourns is not that of lax morals or social anarchy, but only freedom of speech on religious questions, we see that his idea of "a perfect state of society" is nothing else than one in which free speech on religious matters would be absolutely forbidden; and, if ever attempted, would be punished by penalties, the severity of which can be easily conceived by recalling the palmy days of that "perfect state of society" in which flourished the Holy Inquisition.

Roman Catholics, even if they desire a return to this state of social perfection, are not so indiscreet as to say so; but the High Church party in the Church of England are so intoxicated with their recent successes in defying and trampling on the law, that they have shown their cards, and let us know the little game they intend to play. Their "last trump," however, may not be the "biggest," and it is still possible they may be outwitted, if we do not go to sleep over their tactics in false security.

I am no alarmist, nor do I emulate the distinction which rests upon the head of our own great Protestant champion, Mr. Whalley, M. P.; but when I see a great flaming furnace through a chink in a wall, it is only humane to give notice of it.

If the "perfect state of society" aimed at by these Orthodox of the Orthodox Christians involves the absolute suppression of freedom of speech, we must first take care that these philanthropic agitators do not go too far in their regeneration of society. We need not shut them up, nor put a gag on their lips, nor aid their tottering arguments by even a shade of persecution. All we have to do is to go on saying those very things which have put them into such a timid rage; to repeat in ever widening circles those attacks on their position and creeds which they dare not attempt to refute, and which they can only ward off from the ears of their flocks by direct and wilful misrepresentation. What we really proclaim as worthy of belief, they well know is most dangerous to their own influence, and most powerful as a rival to their own creeds; and we want no better proof of this than the elaborate care they take to hide what we say from their people, and to give an utterly false account of our teaching and its tendency. Their anger is our best justification, and, in fact, is the best answer we can give to those who from tedium with controversy accuse us of "slaying the slain."

Thanks to Moody and Sankey, we have been able to give a hard shot all round at every shade and degree of so-called Christianity.

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, S.E., July 16, 1875.

CAPTAIN BOYNTON makes a fine thing of his wonderful exploit to cross the channel in Merriman's dress. He is a discreet American. He not only excludes the dress from the European market, but has also doubled its price in America; namely, £15. Meanwhile, he is now one of the most remarkable and prosperous showmen in France and England, making often £200 and £300 a week by his exhibitions in lakes contiguous to Paris, London, Manchester, and such places.

Communications.

DISPOSAL OF THE NIELAND CASE.

GERMANTOWN, Philadelphia, {
102 Mill St., July 24, 1875. }

MR. F. E. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—At last I am able to inform you of the final development in the Nieland naturalization case. Although the Freie Gemeinde of Philadelphia had already, on the 11th of April, in a very largely attended meeting, unanimously resolved to identify itself with the case above referred to by raising (in common with kindred organizations, some of whom, like the Freie Gemeinde in Milwaukee, and the "Turner" organization through their executive committee in Chicago and their local association in Philadelphia, most emphatically expressed their sympathy and readiness to assist us with their means) the necessary funds for enabling Julius Nieland to appeal from the decision of Judges Hare and Pratt to the higher courts—if necessary to the Supreme Court of the United States,—while at the same time, vigorously agitating the matter in the public press. Yet the carrying out of this resolution was, at the personal request of Mr. Nieland, held in abeyance until he had repeated his application for naturalization before another court, since particular reasons made it very desirable for him to acquire the rights of a citizen soon. Various circumstances, however, delayed his action in the matter until Tuesday last, July 20, when, accompanied by his previous voucher, Mr. F. Bielefeld, and after having stated his previous experience before Judges Hare and Pratt, he renewed his application for naturalization before the District Court of the United States, Judge Cadwalader presiding. Both he and his voucher were invited to swear to their respective statements; but on their declaration that they would "affirm," their "affirmation" was readily admitted, and "no questions asked." Thus Mr. Nieland, though a confessed infidel, has become a citizen of these United States, and hopes to enjoy his rights as such, unless Judges Hare and Pratt should see fit to appeal from the United States District Court to the Supreme Court of the United States.

I enclose a translation of an article I found in Karl Heinzen's Pioneer of last week, thinking you might deem it suitable for insertion in your paper.

Yours, as ever, faithfully,

A. Loos.

[Translated for THE INDEX from the Boston Pioneer of July 21.]

Resolutions of the Freie Gemeinde at Milwaukee on the occasion of the celebration of the Fourth of July:—

"We know of no celebration of higher import to the people of the United States than that of the memorable and magnanimous act by which they declared their own independence and liberty, as well as the equal rights of all mankind. We therefore consider it a desecration of the Fourth of July to defer its celebration from Sunday to some other day of the week, as if the ecclesiastical Sabbath were too good for our great national and humanitarian celebration,—that Sabbath which for the great majority of its observers is a day of sham piety and hypocrisy, and which, as a relic of superstition and of priestcraft, overshadows the life of the present day, like an artificially supported ruin.

"1. Faithful to the principle of the equal rights of all men to govern themselves and to secure their happiness, we recognize it as a task imposed upon the people of these United States:—

"To secure to the female sex the same political rights as to the male;

"To secure to the youth of the land through its public schools, not only the necessary amount of useful knowledge, but an education in the spirit of its free institutions and of the principles of our constitution;

"To amend the Constitution of the United States in a truly democratic spirit, and especially to free it from the monarchical relic which it still preserves in the presidency;

"To remove the infringement of personal liberty by which the temperance agitation endeavors to enforce a humiliating control upon independent citizens of the freest State in the world;

"To tax all property equitably, and no longer by the exemption of church property to rob all other property-owners, even widows and orphans, in favor of priest-craft and sectarianism;

"To aim at the amelioration of social relations by abolishing the humiliating and pernicious slavery which capital enforces upon labor by its domineering control of wages.

"2. We protest against the surrender, in any State of the Union, of the public schools to such individuals or corporations as have not renounced their allegiance to a foreign sovereign controlling their political conduct, and who have not sworn allegiance to our constitution and laws,—especially to the adherents and servants of the Catholic Church.

"We declare, on the contrary, that the emissaries of the Pope of Rome, the Jesuits, whose hosts now are inundating our territory and threaten to poison it with the pestilential breath of their pernicious moral doctrines, unless they submit to the above specified conditions, deserve at least in the same degree as the uncivilizable sons of Nature, the Indians, to be transferred to Western reservations as exponents and propagators of barbarism.

"3. We consider it the duty of all citizens, regardless of sex, by their example and conduct, to work for the recognition of republican simplicity and fidelity to principles in public as well as in private life, as an essential condition for the preservation of our republic, and to exert their whole influence for the removal of those manners and customs which tend to destroy patriotism and the interest in a higher spiritual life through an unnatural and inordinate longing for pleasure and wealth, and even by the apian imitation of monarchical luxury and monarchical distinctions of rank."

"SOMETHING BETTER THAN CHRISTIANITY."

It is the cry of some that, before we overthrow Christianity, we must have something better to put into its place. "Give us something more helpful," they say, "and we'll gladly accept it." Of course they would, or else be fools. But the question arises: Are we not to give up Christianity, even though we have nothing better to put into its place? Is not the question, after all, this? Is Christianity true or false? If false, then we must reject it, though there is nothing but darkness. We must not stop to an error, no matter how beautiful it may be. We do not accept Christianity as we do a beast of burden, for services that it may do. It is a question of pure, essential truth. Only the truth can be of any real service; and, though a falsehood may seem of some apparent value, still, when we are convinced that it is a falsehood, we must put it aside, no matter how much of beauty and helpfulness may seem to go with it. Though we have not a single new truth to put into its place, no shining glimpse whatsoever of fresh worlds, still we must put the splendid falsehood by, and travel on in darkness and barrenness, if need be. It is the truth we are after, and not mere beauty and joy. Was Jesus really the Son of God, a perfect man, a leader of the race? Did he really rise from the dead? Did he really ascend into heaven, and does he really rule in the Church to-day? These are questions to be settled simply and solely by the evidence. We who reject Christianity are under no obligation to show that something else is better. If there is no sufficient evidence for Christianity, then of course we must reject it. We must be true to the laws of our intellectual nature, even though the heart feels a loss. Who can look into the future, and tell what wonders are yet to come? Who can prophesy of the mighty glories of the incoming truth? But the only way by which those glories can be made vivid is to reject what we now know to be false, without any reference to the truths that may eventually appear. We must not wait for something better. Such a course is fatal. If a thing is dead, bury it, and trust to all abounding Nature for the new and living forms that must take its place. They will come, but not if we cowardly cling to the false until we are sure that a better thing will take its place. Trust to Nature for grand and beautiful gospels yet to come; but, if the old one is untrue, fling it aside, even though our souls are made empty.

S. P. PUTNAM.

THE TRUE "ECCLESIA."

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Allow me to thank THE INDEX for publishing such able and instructive discourses as frequently appear on the second page of the paper. When the late one by Mr. Stevens on "Our Ancestors" made its appearance, I invited all my family and visitors to meet in my parlor at ten o'clock on Sunday morning to hear me read it. They cheerfully accepted the invitation, and, after the service was over, informally voted me thanks for giving them such an opportunity for receiving useful and interesting instruction. When THE INDEX of the 15th of July brought Mr. Spencer's discourse on "The Lilies of the Field," I did the same thing. After our church (ecclesia, gathering together) was broken up, all concluded to pass a vote of thanks to the author for the exquisite pleasure he afforded an assembly of people whom he never saw, nor will see. Blessings on the man who first invented types which immortalize thought; and on him who originated the steam-engine which makes that thought ubiquitous, and opens up the treasures of knowledge to us who dwell in rural places, and away from the busy haunts of business and crime!

While "on my legs," as a member of the British Parliament would say, permit me to exclaim, how much good might be done, and pleasure enjoyed, if there were twenty thousand radical clubs in the country that would meet in their respective places on Sunday, and have read to them such addresses as those of Mr. Stevens and Mr. Spencer! In towns where "Churchianity" runs riot, and you would suppose that radicalism has no existence, you will find on inquiry that in each there are persons enough to form a nucleus around which people might organize for conference and instruction. I know that with thousands the word "organization" suggests a creed, and a clergy to expound and enforce it, and terms of communion; and, having had a heart-scald of all this in the days of their ignorance and superstition, they hate the very name. But in this utilitarian age where is the use of a man being a fool? Why cannot men organize for mutual discussion and free speech on all questions interesting to human hopes? Because the Church has a cast-iron creed, and an order of priesthood to force its dogmas down the throats of the people, does it follow that intelligent men cannot organize as Radicals without subjecting their consciences and lips to bondage? If they come together on the conceded principle that they are independent thinkers on all questions, and that all questions are open, and that they are learners from whatever source, how can any man's conscience feel a feather's weight of imposition? If in every town it were known that there was an organization of entirely free thinkers and free speakers, and that every Sunday a discussion would be had, or a lecture be read, either by the author or his voluntary agent, on some interesting subject, intelligent persons would soon find out the fact, and would frequent such places in preference to the churches. In this land of freedom, where the Constitution knows no creed and no Church, why should Radicals skulk in the dark, and suppress the utterances of their honest convictions, whatever they may be? And if there were twenty thousand clubs, or centres, from which light through the medium of tracts and free discussion might emanate, what a motive there would be for able men to write, and THE INDEX to print, lectures and articles bearing upon the all-important subject of religion! The military maxim, "fas est ab hoste doceri," is one that Radicals should consider in their conflict with the Church; and whereas the Church would go to pieces in ten years by free discussion, and owes its present power of evil to the fact that it is as well organized as the Prussian army, the Radicals, who have the truth on their side, should imitate this policy, and organize for the inculcation and spread of their opinions among the people. Moody-and-Sankeyism will pass off from England as an odoriferous effervescence in the course of a year, and the Church will become deadlier than ever. John Wesley understood things better. When he got fire from heaven, he did not allow it to be extinguished by the slobberings of the saints, but he placed it on a candlestick where it would continue to send out light and heat when he was dead and gone. The wisdom he evinced is seen in the Methodist Church to-day, which, although the youngest sect in Christendom, scarcely an hundred years old, is a more widely spread and powerful organization than any other in this country. Wesley's lights are all still burning in their candlesticks, and have increased a thousand fold; while those of Whitfield, his cotemporary, and the Moody of that day, because he did not organize, have gone out in darkness. If the Radicals really have grand and worthy objects in view which can only be reached by combined effort—if they do not wish to figure in history as the mere dry-rot of nominal Christendom,—let them establish their opinions by organizing, and thus become a power in the land. At least so says your friend and brother,

A. B. B.
EXON VALLEY, Pa., July, 1875.

CHRISTIANITY AND CIVILIZATION.

Is it not rather defective reasoning to argue that, because Christianity is found in company with the highest civilization, the latter is produced by the former? If it is good reasoning, how is the logic of the statement affected by striking out the words "highest civilization," and inserting the words "Slavery, Intemperance, Mormonism, Spiritualism, Free Love, etc.?" If simple contiguity is evidence of cause and effect in this matter, why does it not apply on the left as well as on the right hand? "Oh no," say our Christian friends; "these bad things exist in spite of Christianity!" "Heads I win—tails you lose."

It is this erroneous notion of the magical power of contemporaneity that leads many to credit "Christ" with what is due to Franklin, Morse, Columbus, Stephenson, Rothschild, Livingstone, and so on; when in fact their accomplishments were delayed for centuries by Christianity. Until men whom Christianity hunted down with every epithet of opprobrium it could devise had created a public sentiment adverse to negro slavery in this country, its chief buttress was the Church, which I suppose James Freeman Clarke will admit is one "definition" of Christianity in every age of its existence.

Dr. Clarke says we can't define Christianity, but we can judge of its effects. Agreed. What was the "effect" of Christianity, when the theory of the circulation of the blood was first advanced? What was the "effect" of Christianity, when the art of printing was discovered? What was the "effect" of Christianity, when astronomy was changed from a matter of conjecture to a matter of science? What was the "effect" of Christianity during the five hundred years preceding the time of Luther? What have been the "effects" of Christianity in France during its struggles towards republicanism? What are the "effects" of the upper millstone of the Established Church, and the lower millstone of Catholicism in Ireland? What "effects" of Christianity did that hoary "infidel," Garrison, encounter? When that crimson shame, the Fugitive Slave Law, was being enforced, what were the "effects" of Christianity as exhibited in the pulpits of the leading churches of Boston?

"Oh, but," says Mr. Clarke, "Christianity means, Do unto others as you would that others should do unto you." No, sir; that principle was in force and recognized ages before the era of Christianity. It has its origin in human nature itself; and right here is the flaw in your logic of giving a name to a thing which antedates the origin of the name you give it. Christianity was born eighteen hundred and seventy-five years ago, and was duly and properly named; but you have no right, as godfather, to drag in a principle as old as truth, and rechristen it as one with your favorite bantling, whereby to give the latter consequence and respectability.

Christians to-day, in proportion to their various degrees of bigotry, do nothing but oppose, obstruct, and vilify those who are laboring in the fields of scientific inquiry to make discoveries in the facts and laws of Nature; and every hypothesis, no matter how laboriously and seriously assumed, is scouted and ridiculed by Christians, if it touches their creeds. But as soon as it is demonstrated, then all break out in chorus and shout, "Christianity must be the true religion; for see how science flourishes under it!" It is safe to predict that next Sunday, in half of the Boston pulpits, the claims of Christianity on account of its being found in company with the most advanced civilization will be asserted; and also that those who are admitted by scientific men to be their true leaders, such as Tyndall, Huxley, Darwin, and Spencer, will be berated. The whole trouble is that a religion with creeds is, by the necessity of its nature, in its attitude towards improvement obstructive. It instinctively feels the constant liability of danger from new discoveries of truth. Hence its constant opposition to the efforts of scientific men. To me the dogma of infallibility, though in a sort of a latent state and not professed, is more offensively apparent in Protestantism than even in Ultramontane Catholicism.

The Pope can manipulate matters so as not to appear to be opposing the inevitable; but Protestantism has no such facile instrumentalities, and so it has to be jerked from positions which science makes untenable, to readjust itself to new circumstances as best it can. Christianity (by which I mean the machinery of the Church, and not the Golden Rule, or the cardinal truths of morality, which are before Christianity was) is, in proportion to its power, subversive of liberty. Its inherent tendencies are to enslave. Its breath of life is ignorance. It withers, and must die in the sunshine of knowledge.

"COST THE LIMIT OF PRICE" AGAIN.

EDITOR OF INDEX:—

Some twenty years ago I read S. P. Andrews' Science of Society, including "Cost the Limit of Price." On the last page of the work I wrote: "There is real value in this book, whether it 'cost' the author, by his principles, little or much. I insist that it is but simple justice that I pay him for his intellectual labor, without knowing whether it was a 'pleasure' or otherwise for him to write it. That is none of my business to inquire into. His gifts and talents are his, not mine. If he can use them with 'pleasure,' the pleasure is his—not mine. If the 'labor' with which I pay him is 'repulsive' to me because of my repulsion to labor, the repulsion is mine—not his. He should not pay for it. Benevolence should give freely. Want should take freely of man as of God. But call not benevolence justice. Nature has made some men, both physically and mentally, rich. Others are made poor in one or in both senses." At the close I wrote: "Mr. Warren's and his disciple S. P. Andrews' philosophy of 'cost the limit of price' will never be adopted in society." All who have read Mr. Andrews will clearly understand the force of these strictures.

Mr. Linton well knows that all men cannot be "average producers" of anything or any crop. There can be no correct estimate of the "average cost" of produce by counting the time spent in producing them. That must vary from year to year, and from one locality to another, five times as much as gold ever varies. As a rule, selling things at their market value has a greater tendency to place the "right man in the right place" than has the cost principle. This is very plain to me. I understand Mr. Linton to call "measuring exchange (between neighbors) by the time employed the only perfect measure of labor or service." It may be more truly called, as society and men now are, offering a premium on laziness. It would soon kill off the best and hardest workers. I know a rather small man who does one fourth more work per hour than his larger and seemingly more healthy neighbors. He lays up a little yearly; while his neighbors do not, and seem to be growing poorer. Mr. Linton's plan would force him to give the fruits of most of that extra labor to others less industrious.

Too many doctors of medicine or of divinity often injure the bodies and souls of men more than they help them. As I see it, not over one in ten, if over one in twenty, of the doctors of finance or of political economy offers us anything of real value. The patient is pretty sick. But I pray that he may not be made worse rather than better by so much malpractice.

AUSTIN KENT.

STOCKHOLM, N. Y., July 27, 1875.

P. S.—In many parts wages are higher in proportion to other things—including "flour"—than they were years ago. It is so about here. The average hired girl gets two dollars where she then got one, and spends three times as much for clothes; hence now lays up nothing. And our poor are made to believe that they must bury with their friends, in extra clothes, in extra coffins, forty or fifty dollars to prove their "love for them." Ten dollars answered as well forty years ago. It is still true that to help the poor we must write unpopular truths.

A. K.

A CERTAIN LAWYER had his portrait taken in his favorite attitude, standing with one hand in his pocket. His friends and some of his clients went to see it. Everybody said: "Oh, how much it is like him! It is the very picture of him!" One farmer, who happened to be present, thought differently. "Tain't a bit like him!" "Tisn't, eh?" said half-a-dozen at once. "Just show us wherein it is not a capital likeness." "Wa'al, tain't; no use talking, I tell you 'tain't." "Well, why? Can't you tell us why it ain't a good likeness?" "Yes, easy enough. Don't you see he has got his hand in his own pocket? 'Twould be as good ag'in if he had it in somebody else's!"

NOT LONG AGO, at a mansion on Murray Hill, a sentimental young lady strolled with a gentleman, on whom she had her eye, into the conservatory. Looking up pensively into his face, she said, with tears in her voice: "Ah, no one loves me, Mr. Barnes!" "Some one does." "Yes?" said the lady, dropping her head, and pressing his arm ever so little. "Yes, Nellie," said the wretch, "God loves you."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 "	8 "	"
" 26 " 51 "	6 "	"
" 52 " " "	5 "	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.

Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interest in Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents 2 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

F. W. NEWMAN, England.

CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion;

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual;

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
Rhine.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition, 1 vol.....	1.50
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 4 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist, with Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside. Helmholtz, Mayer, Paraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Paraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched: a Volume of Illustrations. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly Conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising— Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life, The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	1.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellaneous.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
The Life and Works of Ralph Waldo Emerson.....	2.00
Poems. With Portraits.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of John Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	2.00
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Ewald Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.25
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Tintern River.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Feltton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	1.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGLEW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGLEW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	.60
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, and a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versabilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greek Antiquity to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	1.00
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.....	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons.....	3.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdeemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Tractory Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, and Maps of Heaven.....	5.00
The Expansion of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.00
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.40
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.50
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip.....	1.50
Pendennis.....	1.50
The Virginians.....	1.50
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....	1.50
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketches, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Diderot, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols. II, IV, and VI, each.....	3.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldwater's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL, for both sexes, MERIDEN, CONN.
EMILY J. LEONARD, Principal.

MORSE'S SUMNER.
Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address
S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

FRED GRANT & CO.
A Capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

MORSE'S PAINE.
PHOTOGRAPHS
For sale at the office of THE INDEX.
Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cts.

A CHEAP OFFER
A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.
Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.
Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

REPORTS,
SERMONS,
ESSAYS,
and PAMPHLETS,
of all kinds, neatly and promptly printed by
GEORGE H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place,
BOSTON.

THE AMERICAN EDITION
OF
MONCURE D. CONWAY'S
SACRED ANTHOLOGY,
A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,
has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.
Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

THE FALLACIES
OF THE
FREE LOVE THEORY:
OR,
Love Considered as a Religion.
BY J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

FOR SINGING SCHOOLS.
No book can be better fitted to provide agreeable musical entertainment mingled with instruction than the !! SONG MONARCH!!

By H. R. PALMER, assisted by L. O. EMERSON. Price 75 cts.

It contains the Singing-school Course, usual in Church Music Books, with abundant exercises, etc.; and, in addition, a fine collection of cheerful Easy Gleees for practice, thus rendering it quite as interesting as a good easy Glee Book.

Musical Societies will bear in mind our new CHORUS CHOIR ($18 per doz.) by Dr. Tourjée; also, Perkins' Anthem Book ($1.50); both fine collections for Choral Associations and for Choirs.

FOR CHOIRS!

The latest collection of Church Music by the successful compiler, H. R. Palmer, is

!! THE LEADER!!
Not quite as large nor as expensive as other recent Church Music Books, it still contains a great variety of Metrical Music, Anthems, etc., etc., in addition to the usual Singing-school Course. L. O. EMERSON contributes a large number of tunes. Price $1.38, or $12 per doz.

Sold by all Music dealers. Sent, post-free, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,
BOSTON.
CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES, IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.
This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address
S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.
For sale by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOOK Card,

Job PRINTING,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,
7 TREMONT PLACE,
BOSTON.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform."

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being.

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Edward D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, A. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN
HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, MO. Box 247.
Send for Circular.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF— THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO., BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—
GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY
335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on Improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods, 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!

THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, AUGUST 19, 1875.

WHOLE No. 295.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———.

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

PUNCH pokes fun at Ritualism by suggesting, as a cry for Convocation, "Old clo', old clo'!"

MR. GLADSTONE inquires in the Contemporary Review, "Is the English Church worth preserving?" Yes—when bottled in alcohol.

THE FRENCH government has prohibited the sale in France of ex-Premier Gladstone's writings against the Papacy. He sees too much, and says it too plainly.

MR. GLADSTONE is out with another pamphlet on the Catholic question. He declares that "the Papacy will seize the first opportunity through bloodshed to maintain its rule, and will, if necessary, even plunge the world into war."

MR. HOLYOAKE informs us that the first volume of his History of Coöperation will appear at once, and that Lippincott, of Philadelphia, is the American publisher. The work will undoubtedly be of a very high order, and should command a wide sale.

THE O'CONNELL Centenary was a great affair in Dublin, some forty thousand men being in line. But the people refused to hear the Lord Mayor read Lord O'Hagan's address. No serious disturbance occurred, as had been feared, during the day; but the evening banquet was broken up in disorder.

HON. ALPHONSO TAFT, of Cincinnati, the Republican candidate for Governor of Ohio, recently delivered a very able speech on the financial question, at Marietta, in which he argued against the inflation policy and in favor of resuming specie payments as soon as possible. Judge Taft is a stockholder in the Index Association, upon which his private character and public course alike reflect honor.

"I HAVE NEVER enjoyed preaching so much as I have in this country," said Mr. Moody, at his last meeting in London. "Have another week!" shouted one of the audience. "I want to have you all saved to-night," replied Moody. So he called on all who "wanted to join him for eternity" to rise, and hundreds rose. We have no doubt of Mr. Moody's sincerity; but what a dreary sight is this spectacle of epidemic delusion!

ORDER HAS BEEN restored in San Miguel by President Gonzalez, in season to prevent concerted similar outbreaks throughout the republic of San Salvador. Various Catholic ecclesiastics implicated in the late murderous riot have been banished. But the Christianity whose lust of power is at the bottom of all such riots remains behind. President Gonzalez cannot banish that: it takes KNOWLEDGE to accomplish that supreme act of self-protection.

STEPS ARE taking for the formation of a new society in London which shall be devoted exclusively to obtaining "the opening of Museums, Art Galleries, Libraries, Aquariums, and Gardens on Sundays." Mr. Mark H. Judge, one of the editors of the Free Sunday Advocate, is honorary secretary of the Provisional Committee, of which Miss Cobbe and Mr. Conway are also members. The movement has been stimulated by the late Sabbatarian prosecution of the Brighton Aquarium Company.

"ADMIRAL" SEMMES, ex-pirate, announces to a world aghast that he will not attend the Philadelphia Exposition next year. He does not like the Declaration of Independence, for it contains "a brand implanted on the forehead of the South by the people of the United States." Moreover, he has various little wants which are likely to keep him uncomfortable for some time to come, as for instance: "I want the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution first repealed by a three-fourths vote of the States; and then I want black lines drawn around it as a seal of disapprobation, put there by the American people, of the partisan and sectional hatred in which the amendment was engendered and had its birth."

HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN has left a most tender memory behind him in thousands and thousands of hearts. We would lay a sincere tribute of reverence, gratitude, and love upon his grave; for his sweet and beautiful genius laid our childhood under obligations that it is a sacred duty to acknowledge. The charm of his sunny nature, the delicacy, quaintness, and inexhaustible wealth of his fancy, the delicious humor of his quiet and scarcely perceptible satire, the strength of his love for children and the overflowing tenderness he constantly manifested for them, the profound wisdom which lay all ready to reward his little readers as soon as the experience of life should give them eyes to see it, and which makes his merry and pathetic stories more lovely than ever to their later years,—how dear all this makes Hans Andersen's name to thousands who never saw him and whom he never saw! He has told the last of his tales now; but the tale of their influence is not told, and will not be. Green be the memory of the poet story-teller of childhood!

MR. PLIMSOLL, with justice and indiscretion on his side, has proved more than a match for greed, heartlessness, and parliamentary decorum. Mr. Disraeli moved his expulsion from the House of Commons, but covered before the terrible public, which in thunder tones informed the haughty prime minister that the fierce wrath of his opponent, however injudicious and over-vehement, was righteous, and should be sustained. When the thousands of poor sailors, annually consigned to death in unseaworthy "coffin ships" to make money for their owners, are remembered, who can blame Mr. Plimsoll for losing his temper, shaking his fists, and hurling defiance and hard words at the murderers and the government that would abet them? Not we. On the contrary, we applaud the plucky Englishman whose whole soul flamed out in sublime anger against oppression, and see in him that indomitable conscience of mankind which is mightier than thrones and empires,—nay, the awful "Power that makes for righteousness," and sweeps away their tyrannies with the besom of destruction. The world involuntarily takes off its hat to Mr. Plimsoll.

MR. GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS, in Harper's Weekly for August 14, replies as follows to the mistaken accusation that he is a partisan: "The Boston Herald, in a temperate and courteous article, says that in stating such facts as these we forget that few Northern Democrats favored slavery, and that, in any case, slavery is gone. The Herald, however, will remember that Northern Democrats sustained to the very last the slavery policy of their party, whether they favored slavery or not, and that a Northern Democratic President assured his Southern allies that the war for slavery would be fought out in our streets. As to the present position of the party, it is evident that neither the life-long convictions of its leading members nor its real feeling as shown in its press and conduct are especially favorable to equal rights. Now the choice in 1876 lies between the Republican and Democratic parties, and the claim of the latter that it is the party of equal rights is as much a false pretence as the claim made by some Democratic papers that it is the party of hard money. All that we say is, not that the Republican party has not serious offences to answer for, but that the great objects which are justly most precious to good citizens are very much more likely to be promoted, according to all the signs of the times, by the Republican than by the Democratic party. And it is the constant statement of this truth which makes us seem to the Herald incapable of rising above party prejudice. We can, indeed, conceive, with the Herald, of a great party true to the American principles of liberty and justice. But the Republican party is certainly much nearer that ideal than the Democratic."

Mohammed the Iconoclast.

FROM THE "GALAXY" FOR AUGUST.

BY F. WHITTAKER.

Prophet or impostor, saint or devil, hero or Antichrist,—which was he?

Ages have asked that question, and the reply is not yet. Godfrey de Bouillon would have answered without hesitation, and Richard Plantagenet, surnamed Cœur de Lion, would have backed the assertion, "Impostor, devil, Antichrist." Haroun the Just, who sent Charlemagne the first clock ever seen in Europe, and Yussuf Salah-ud-Deen, who outgeneralled the Lion Heart, would have answered with even less hesitation, "Prophet, saint, and hero." Which party was right; and if neither, which was nearest right? Which of the two knew most about Mohammed? Which was most capable of judging on any question of character and evidence, and which possessed the most collateral learning and powers of comparison?

These questions are by no means hard to answer. We know that the mental accomplishments of Godfrey de Bouillon and Richard Plantagenet were confined to a very small smattering of education, sufficient to enable them to sign their names after a fashion, while of the Arabic language and of the contents of the Koran itself they were both in blissful ignorance. Had any one offered to present either with a copy of the book in the original Arabic, or in a perfect French translation, it is most probable that Godfrey and Richard would have acted in the same way. Into the fire would have gone the book, and with it the donor, had the latter been available. Had either possessed the power to exterminate every Moslem living, there is not a shadow of doubt that he would have ordered the execution at once, imagining he was doing God service in punishing "blasphemers." In what the sin of blasphemy consisted, as applied to "Islam," the faith, Godfrey and Richard might have been puzzled to explain to the satisfaction of a disinterested party. The argument, had such a thing as argument been possible, would infallibly have ended, like the renowned discussion between Captain Fluellen and Captain MacMorris, in an attempt by one party to cut off the other party's head. In the present day Messrs. Mace and Coburn are the best living representatives of that style of argument, and we doubt not that the sentiments of Godfrey and Richard on the subject of Mohammed would be fervently echoed by both—had they ever given the subject serious attention.

When we come to examine Haroun and Yussuf, we find men of a different stamp. Without being less a soldier, each was much more of a general, and each was the most enlightened prince of his own time. All the learned men of the East flocked to the courts of both, and in those days the East almost monopolized the learning of the world. Besides this, each prince was well acquainted with the writings of Mohammed, and in fact had committed the greater part of the Koran bodily to memory, as every Arab of rank does at the present day. These men, thoroughly acquainted with Mohammed's book—a book historically certain as being the work of his single mind unassisted by others—called Mohammed, as their descendants do to this time, "Prophet, saint, and hero." It becomes, then, to us of the present time, a matter of inquiry whether these men may not possibly be right, and Godfrey and Richard possibly wrong. For a good many centuries we have been going on the crusading theory as regards Islam, and it is about time that those of us who are open to reason stopped to ask whether we are quite justified in our classification of "Jews, Turks, and infidels" as objects of pity, to be prayed for once a year. Another doubt may even arise as to whether we are justified in calling a Moslem an "infidel" under any circumstances; but this doubt will arise at a later stage of the inquiry. To form a judgment on Mohammed we must read his book, Al-Koran. To that alone we appealed, when asked to work miracles as a sign of his mission; to that the Arabs point to-day as a standing miracle, defying the world to produce its equal.

We are told by all Arabs that the Koran is the most perfect poetry in the Arabic language; and yet, when we come to read it as translated into English, we find it dull and tedious. It is a difficult thing for a European to read through the whole Koran in a translation. He soon realizes it to be different from what he imagined it. Very possibly he dreamed of finding therein long and luscious descriptions of the so-called "Mohammedan paradise"; that he should read about hours and the tree of life, the beast Al-Borak, rivers of wine, and all those visions of the different heavens usually attributed to the prophet. He finds not a word of all this. Instead, there is boundless devotional enthusiasm, all the vocabulary of praise to God, long moral lectures, Old Testament stories in a different form, a familiar reference to all the Jewish patriarchs, prophets, and kings, an equally constant reference to the facts of the Gospels, but in a somewhat different dress, and, finally, fierce denunciations, in a strain of the most awful solemnity, of the infidels who will not believe in the truths of God. Of doctrine he finds no subtlety. Mohammed proclaims but one fact, and reiterates it for all time. As the Koran opens with Al-Fatihah, "The Preface," so it naturally closes with the simple and sublime "Declaration," a chapter of itself. The words of those chapters are texts for all the rest of the book. It enlarges, dilates, amplifies, illustrates, reiterates the one grand declaration, "La Ilaha il Allah"—"No God but God." All the rest is written only to give that weight. The fact that Mohammed is the prophet of God is a mere incident, like the "Thus saith the Lord" of the Hebrew prophets. It is to show whence came the message. That message is the one thing of importance to man, and it is of the simplest: "No God but God." When that message is believed, the morality of the Koran follows with equal simplicity. Prayer and charity are the whole duty of man. Not prayer as an importunate begging for favors, but prayer which is only praise and anxiety to be kept in the faith of God; not ostentatious almsgiving, mis-called charity, but a charity as complete and genuine as that described in the Corinthians. Such as we find Al-Fatihah we find the whole book. Let Al-Fatihah speak for itself:—

"Bismillah hi rah-mani raheem—In the name of the Most Merciful of the merciful.

"Praise God, the Lord of the worlds, Most Merciful of the merciful, King of the Judgment Day.

"Thee do we praise; to Thee do we pray.

"Direct us in the way, in the way of those Thou lovest, of those who anger Thee not, who wander not from Thee. Amen."

If any great wickedness lurks in that chapter, it would puzzle Luther himself to point it out. The "Declaration" is equally brief and emphatic. In it is contained by implication a condemnation of Christianity, it is true; but at present we are not so much concerned about the comparative as the positive status of Mohammed's religion and book. The Declaration begins with the same preface, "Bismillah hi rah-mani raheem," and sums up the faith of its author boldly:—

"Say He is God, one God.

"God is the eternal God.

"He begetteth not, neither is He begotten.

"There is none equal to him."

Can we close these short extracts better than by the last chapter in the book, the summing up of all the Moslem's hopes in this world and the next?

"Say, I fly for refuge to the Lord of all men,
The King of all men, the God of all men;
That he deliver me from the tempter that fleeth away,
Who whispereth evil thoughts in man's heart,
From evil spirits and from men."

There we see the whole foundation of Moslem hope,—belief in one God of infinite mercy, who asks only belief in Himself from men. That such is the real spirit of Mohammedanism as a religion, that such was the teaching of Mohammed himself, and still is of all the doctors of the pure faith, we hope to show in the course of this article. The truth has long been known to Arabic scholars, and every day spreads it further. All that we hope to do in these pages is to popularize these truths for the use of that great mass of people who have not time nor opportunity for either Arabic study, or the works of those Arabic scholars who have shown us in translations what the Koran contains. The time may come when the great book of the Arabian seer will be on every table in the land, and when true liberality will dictate a closer acquaintance with a faith like that of Islam, as pure as either Judaism or Christianity, positively true when tested by either, and only erring in our own view by a denial which it shares with other Unitarians; in the Jewish view by supplementing Christianity. It is time that we, claiming in this nineteenth century so much civilization and enlightenment, should inform ourselves about the real facts of Mohammedan faith, and cease to abuse that of which we know little or nothing, save through the representations of bitter enemies, seeing in the Arabian iconoclast only a fancied Antichrist, composed from misunderstood passages of the Apocalypse.

Our first question is, Prophet or impostor? It attacks the character of the man, and demands a view of his life, before and after his mission. In examining Mohammed's life we have the great advantage of asking after a historical character. Mohammed is no myth. His identity does not rest on shadowy legends like that of Buddha, nor is it of uncertain date, like that of Confucius. Arabians, Greeks, and Romans agree in the facts of their accounts of his life and actions; and the supernatural and incredible are alike absent from the accounts of his contemporaries. With the exaggerations of subsequent commentators, enlarging that most elastic of traditions—camp gossip,—we have nothing to do. The facts of Mohammed's early life are known and undisputed. Living as he did in the blaze of publicity and hostile criticism all his life, every fact of importance has been carefully sifted.

He was an orphan at an early age, left in the care of his uncle, Abu Taleb. His father died before his birth; his mother when he was a child of six. He belonged to the noble tribe of the Koreish, the guardians of the great idol temple, the Caaba; but it availed him little. He was but a poor relation. Moreover, he was delicate and sickly in childhood. He had epileptic fits. There was nothing about him to give his uncle hope that he would do credit to his family, and so he was made to earn the bread of dependence by keeping his uncle's sheep. Remember that the Meccans were town Arabs; that the East never changes. To this day the Arab townsmen look down on the Bedouins with their flocks. A Bedouin in a town skulks along like a strange dog, and the townsmen draw aside their robes as from a pariah. In those days, as now, the Meccans looked down on shepherds as much as we do on drovers. What culture then existed in Arabia was confined, as it is to this day, to the higher classes. There was a vast difference between Abu Taleb, rich and respected, chief of his family to the third and fourth generation, with vast flocks and herds, a rich house, slaves and camels, horses and weapons, and his poor and insignificant nephew, whom he kept out in the mountains taking care of sheep. No wonder the boy received little or no education. It cost too much to waste on a poor relation.

But the lad grew up, and became strong and healthy. The open-air life of a shepherd was very likely all that he needed to help his delicate constitution. He developed into a handsome Arab, such as we see in portraits of renowned sheikhs at this day. Of medium height, thin and agile of figure, broad-chested and thin-flanked, strong and active, with a noble, aquiline head, dark, solemn eyes under black brows, and long, sweeping lashes, thin, eager face, with full, jetty beard, beautiful white teeth, of which he was very careful, elastic, springing step, imposing dignity of demeanor, laughing seldom, but with a beautiful smile,—such is the portrait left of him by his companions, feature by feature, and such are some few of the high-caste Arab sheikhs of to-day. They cannot read; their lore is that of tradition; they have perhaps never entered a house before; and yet they can comfort themselves in the most brilliant assemblies with all the quiet self-possession and exquisite courtesy that marks the perfect gentleman.

Such was Mohammed in later life. At twenty-four years of age he had become a camel driver, and was hired by a rich widow—Khadijah—to conduct her caravans to Damascus or Suez, wherever the trade of Mecca went. We have no minutiae of this, his early life. His companions of those days took little interest in him, and Abu Taleb, the only person who might afterward have given us the information, died before the Hegira. We know that, after several journeys in Khadijah's service, the rich widow suddenly married her young steward, who was fourteen years younger than herself. The match was regarded with disgust by her family. She was still, under old Arab custom, subject to her father, and she only obtained his consent by intoxicating him. The purse-proud Meccans regarded with contempt the poor young drover, however handsome, and it was only under the transforming influence of sudden wealth that his good qualities began to attract notice. Khadijah's husband, with a handsome fortune, was a very different person from the insignificant poor relation of Abu Taleb, living on the chief's charity. His rich relatives began to notice him. After all, was he not one of the family? Like the French nobleman who disgraced his family by going into trade, when his fortune was made he was allowed to resume the sword of nobility. Khadijah was a widow twice married, and her passion for the young and handsome Arab was half motherly. She fell down and worshipped him, and he repaid her with entire devotion. As long as she lived, though in a country where polygamy is the rule, Mohammed was faithful to the worn and wrinkled woman whose hand had raised him from poverty to comfort. From henceforth his life was no longer one of labor. He had become a respected member of society. And yet we hear of nothing that he did of any note for sixteen long years. There are traditions of his paying a visit to Palestine; of his mingling with Christians and Jews, and learning of them; but all these are vague and unreliable. That he acquired all the education in these years he ever had is probable. He did not, however, learn to write, though he could read. To his death he was not a scribe, and the Koran was dictated and taken down by others.

All we know for certain about him in these years is that, as he approached forty, he became silent and melancholy, fond of solitude, given to long absences from his house, wandering alone in the mountains around Mecca. What drove him there?

He was for the first time facing the terrible problem of his life.

Let us now take a look at the state of religious belief in Arabia when Mohammed was forty. The Peninsula was inhabited by tribes of diverse origin. The Ishmaelites were by no means the whole; they were not even the majority. There were the descendants of the many sons of Abraham by Keturah, on the north, of the Cushites all through the happy pastures and gardens of Yemen. The Cushites survive to this day, and their faith has always been the same wherever it has appeared, and in whatever time. Whether in Egypt, Carthage, India, China, Cambodia, Central America, we always find the same crowd of grotesque or hideous idols, the same licentious images and ceremonies, the same union of material comfort and luxury with a moral degradation worse than bestial. The Cushite religion then overshadowed Arabia, supreme above all others in Mecca especially. There was the Caaba, the peculiar holy place of Arabia, with its three hundred and sixty-five idols, one for every day in the year, and yet all but uncouth black stones. The art which beautified idolatry with the Aryan races is almost entirely absent with the Cushites: witness the grotesque and meaningless ornaments of Indian, Chinese, and Cambodian architecture. Compared with the glories of Greece, Rome, and Europe, the East may be said to have no art. Its highest result is shown in brilliant play of color, clustered around the conventional curves of an Indian shawl, or arabesque mural decoration. The beauty and poetry of the Shemites lie in the realms of words, in the poetry of those grander aspects of Nature before which art falls back, impotent to imitate, in the sweep of the thunder and earthquake, the silent immensity of the starlit heavens.

The Cushite, whether Egyptian, Ethiopian, or Phœnician, with all his skill in commerce and manufacture, was a low, sensual beast. It appears in every line of his architecture, in the disgusting phallic worship, in every account of the manners and customs of him and his compeers. We see his nature in the Chinaman of to-day, with all his comfort and luxury at home, his engineering capability, his skill in manufactures, his essentially bestial nature and degraded idolatry. Just such a religion then dominated in Arabia, coming from a part of the same race, the powerful and civilized Himyarites of the interior of Yemen. The Ishmaelite Bedouins were confined to the desert strips on the coast, and depended on the walled towns for part of their subsistence, all of their manufactures, as they do to-day. Like the Jews, like all Shemites, they were prone to lapse into idolatry, and the power and wealth of the idolaters made the idolatry more seducing. Thus it happened that a purely Shemite tribe, that of the Koreish, had become custodians of an obscene idol temple, and amid all its sights and practices Mohammed was reared. This polytheistic religion was mixed and jumbled up in the strangest manner with remnants of old Judaic truth. The custom of circumcision was common, though without notion of its symbolic meaning. There were still scattered about stories of Abraham and the prophets; and the people were much in the condition of the Jews during those strange periods chronicled in the Old Testament, when they deliberately embraced idolatry, and threw away the truth, allowing it to become forgotten in the lapse of years. The Jews were only finally saved from this strange perversity by the captivity of Babylon. The Arabs were to be finally wakened by the powers of Mohammed.

Such as he was, an uneducated shepherd and camel driver, he had yet travelled and learned much, especially from the Jews, who were plentiful in Yathrib (afterward Medinat al-Nabi, the "City of the Prophet," our Medina). He had become slightly acquainted with the vitiated Christianity of the seventh century, with its jumble of truth and idolatry, nearly as gross as the three hundred gods of the Caaba. He had leisure, and began for the first time to think. This it is that easily accounts for his long silences and absences from home. In his ears were ringing the sayings of his Jewish friends, full of Talmudic lore, and his memories were lingering over their revelations. Then it was that, at forty years of age, he went to the Mount Hira, a huge barren rock, torn by ravines and caverns, without grass or water, standing erect in the hot glare of the sun. There he remained for a full month in fasting and prayer, as we are told, alone with Nature in her sternest and most majestic moods. Prayer to whom?

Not to the idols. The Caaba was the place for them. To whom, then? Why, to the one God who lives behind the idols of the grossest polytheisms, and whom even the idolaters are fain to recognize beyond all the lesser deities, whether as Brahma, Jove, the Great Spirit, or the eternal rest in Buddha. Mohammed had a friend, Waraka, a blind Jew, "who knew the Scriptures of Jews and Christians," we are told, though his knowledge was that of memory and tradition only. This Waraka was a cousin of Khadijah. Much speculation has been made as to the mode of the prophet's evident acquaintance with these writings, while the presence of Waraka, the blind Jew, has little weight attached to it. Waraka, after Khadijah, was the first recipient of the prophet's revelations, as we shall see; and it is most probable that he of all others was the cause of Mohammed's previous knowledge of the true God, which culminated in the Koran and Islam.

All the accounts of Mohammed confirm the fact of this first solitary abode in Mount Hira. There he lived in a small, dark cavern, passing his days and nights alone, fasting, worn down with hunger, brooding over the great discovery just made to him of the unity of God. He had been an idolater with the rest up to this time; but the tidings had come to him, and he was beginning to struggle toward the truth. Nothing else explains his sudden change to melancholy and solitude. The news came to him in the prime of life, and changed the whole current of his existence. There in the dark cavern, among the barren rocks, no living thing to disturb his thoughts, he brooded all alone over the tremendous mystery of creation; on the God of Nature whom he had not known. Fasting and prayer began to turn his brain, and it wandered. It seemed to him that the stones in his path cried out, "Hail! oh prophet of God"; and he fled back to his dark cavern, fearing he was going mad. He could not believe that a special mission was coming to him. At last, in the middle of the night, came a voice, and he awoke "as if a fearful weight had been on him." He thought himself dying. He could do and say nothing. Again came the voice to him, and still he could not stir. Then the third time that voice called aloud, "Cry!" and he said, "What shall I cry?" And the voice answered, "Cry! in the name of thy God."

And then that terrible voice went on, in the silence of that "blessed night Al-Kadar," and told him how from the beginning man had been raised up by the knowledge of the Lord, and how the God of all mercy had revealed by the pen what man could never know; and Mohammed awoke from his trance, covered with sweat, trembling in every limb, and feeling that a book had been written indelibly on his heart. Such is the account Mohammed gives himself, in the ninety-sixth chapter of the Koran, of his first revelation. Well, we may smile, may call it a mad vision, or a cunning imposture; but the miracle becomes none the less. From henceforth this uneducated shepherd gave utterance to nothing but strains of the most sublime poetry in his Suras or chapters of the Koran.

From the depths of his inner consciousness, if you will, he produced things he had never known. He did not yet believe in the reality of his own mission, but it seized hold of him all the same; it tore him with fearful convulsions; he swooned away, and when he recovered, weak and exhausted, he dictated those wonderful Suras.

That night he hastened trembling home to Khadijah, and cried out, "Oh Khadijah, what has happened to me?" then fell down exhausted. She watched by him, and he slowly recovered, and faltered out, "Oh Khadijah! he of whom one could not have believed it has become either a low fortune-teller, or possessed by devils—mad."

Motherly Khadijah, half-frightened and all-loving, soothed him gently. "God is my protection, father of my children. He will not surely let such a thing happen to thee; for thou speakest truth, keepest faith, art not revengeful, but kind to thy friends. Neither art thou a vain talker. What has befallen thee? Hast thou seen anything fearful?"

The terribly stricken man shook all over as he whispered, "Yes."

And he told her of his vision.

And what said Khadijah?

She believed instantly, and cried, "Rejoice, my husband. He in whose hand stands Khadijah's life is my witness, that thou wilt be the prophet of his people."

Then she went to her cousin Waraka, and told him; and as soon as he heard it, he cried out, "Holy! holy! holy! Truly this is the same message that came to Moses. He will be the prophet of his people. Tell him this, and bid him be of brave heart."

But Mohammed was in great anxiety and trembling. Like Isaiah, when the word came to him, he was thinking, "Woe is me. I am undone, for I am a man of unclean lips, and live in the midst of a people of unclean lips." He could not believe that he was a prophet, and was in great misery. Then came Waraka, and met him in the streets of Mecca, and said, "I swear by him in whose hand is Waraka's life, that God has chosen thee to be the prophet of his people. The greatest of all messages has come to thee. They will call thee a liar, they will persecute thee, they will banish thee, they will fight against thee. Oh, that I could live to those days; I would fight for thee." And the old man kissed his forehead, and Mohammed was much comforted for a while.

He waited for more visions, but they came not, and again he began to think he was mad. He went to Mount Hira again, determined to leap from a precipice and end the torments of his life. And as he came to the precipice, he beheld a vision of angels at every turn, and heard a voice saying, "I am Gabriel, and thou art Mohammed, the prophet of God." And he stood rooted to the spot, till Khadijah, full of anxiety, sent men in search and found him.

From henceforward to the end of his life, the Suras were revealed to him, and all in the same way, without intermission. There were long solitary broodings, as in the first vision at Mount Hira; then a sudden something seized Mohammed, exactly similar in outward symptoms to an epileptic fit. He uttered a hoarse roar—who that has ever heard it forgets that dreadful sound?—shook from head to foot with fearful violence, while the sweat rolled from his whole body, and he became as one dead. Then came a sound in his ears as of tolling bells, and the same awful voice that first called to him, as to Isaiah, "Cry! in the name of thy Lord," revealed a new Surah, "as if words were written in his heart," with fear and unutterable agony that turned his black locks white before their time.

But Mohammed spoke not during these paroxysms. When they were over, calmly and distinctly, he dictated to his scribe the words of those wonderful Suras, for he could not write. And what reward had he for his message? He came through torments to reveal to degraded idolaters the great truth, "No God but God," and they followed Waraka's prediction with singular accuracy. They called him a liar, hated him, laughed at him, fought against him, tried to kill him. All his friends fell away from him, and for a time he was as much alone and as truly an object of pity as any early Christian during persecutions. Had he been an impostor, he could never have persevered as long as he did. An impostor might simulate epilepsy, might dictate Suras. Clairvoyants and other charlatans do so now-a-days. But no impostor turns suddenly gray with the agonies of revelation. The revelations of a clairvoyant, and the communications from spirit circles, are generally puerile and contemptible; always highly inadequate to the genius from whom they claim to emanate; while the columns of spiritualist literature have never furnished us with aught better than vague inanities.

But the Koran is different. It is unequalled in the Arabic language for sublimity of poetry. The ignorant camel-driver, unable to read, could not have composed such a book unassisted. Who, then, was his assistant? Who spoke through the lips of Mohammed in the second chapter of the Koran? Hear the Suras:—

"There is no doubt in this book. It is a counsel for the righteous, who believe in the unseen things of faith, who observe the times of prayer, who give alms of what WE have bestowed on them, who believe the revelation sent unto thee, and sent to the prophets before thee, who have firm assurance of the life to come. These are directed by the Lord, and they shall prosper."

"As for the infidels, they are like one who kindleth a fire, and when it hath thrown its light on all around him, God taketh away the light, and leaveth him in darkness, and they cannot see. Deaf, dumb, and blind, therefore, shall they not retrace their steps. They are like those, who, when there cometh a storm-cloud out of heaven, big with darkness, thunder, and lightning, thrust their fingers into their ears because of the thunder-clap, for fear of death. God is round about the infidels. The lightning almost snatcheth away their eyes; so oft as it gleameth on them they walk on in it; but when darkness closeth on them they stop; and, if God pleased, of their ears and eyes he would surely deprive them; verily God is Almighty. . . .

"God! there is no God but He, the Living, the Eternal. Thunder doth not overtake Him, nor sleep. To Him belongeth all that is in heaven and earth. Who is he that can intercede with Him but by His permission? He knoweth that which is past, and that which is to come unto them, and they shall not comprehend His knowledge, but so far as He pleaseth. His throne extendeth over heaven and earth, and the upholding of both is no burden to Him. He is the High and Mighty One."

Well may the Arabs challenge the world to produce such a book unassisted by the Spirit which spoke through the prophets. The fishermen of Galilee spoke with as little worldly wisdom, and we believe them inspired. What shall we say of Mohammed? Was he prophet or impostor?

Not impostor, we think. No man can honestly examine the Koran, and read the absolutely uncontradicted facts of the agonies and persecutions that accompanied its origin, and say that Mohammed was a wilful impostor. Was he then deceived? Did he, consciously or unconsciously, steal the best parts of the Koran from the Old and New Testaments?

This is the current charge against him among Christians, and especially among clergymen; but it will not bear a careful examination. In the first place, it is certain, from a comparison of the Koran with the Bible, that Mohammed had never read or perhaps even heard of any one of those epistles which we call inspired. There is no trace in the Koran of any knowledge of the apostles, or of what they did after the ascension. Of Paul, Peter, James, John, Mohammed never speaks, while his anecdotes of our Savior are evidently taken from the spurious Gospels of the Infancy and of St. Barnabas. Of such is the well-known story of Jesus in his childhood making sparrows of clay, and giving life to them. The Koranic account of the crucifixion is from the Gnostic point of view, Mohammed insisting that the Savior was not crucified, but another in his place.

In all the Koranic mention of Christ, there is evident ignorance of our New Testament; while what little the prophet does know of the facts of the Savior's life impresses him with the deepest reverence. He admits the immaculate conception in full, and gives nearly the same account of the annunciation as that in St. Luke's Gospel, while there is no trace of acquaintance with other parts of the same Gospel. All the traces of New Testament knowledge in the Koran point to a single hypothesis—that of the oral communication, from ignorant persons, of a half-knowledge to Mohammed.

And that such was almost certainly the case is clear from contemporary history. The seventh century was perhaps the darkest of all the dark ages. Christianity had almost vanished in idolatry. The Roman empire, shattered by barbarians, and sunk in sensual sloth wherever out of danger, was Christian only in name. Christianity had as yet reached Arabia only in the persons of a few slaves, mostly Abyssinians; and what a jumble of heathenism and truth Abyssinian Christianity is, we know now-a-days. The Christian world knew almost nothing of Arabia. We find that out now, when we have to correct our geographical notions of the country, handed down through centuries of Christian ignorance. There are stories that Mohammed, on certain journeys to Syria, met a monk, variously called Bahira, Sergius, Georgius, and Nestor, from whom he obtained his knowledge of Christianity; but there is one suspicious fact about these stories, that they all emanated from Christian monks, long after Mohammed's death. So far as appears from the accounts left by friends and foes in Mecca, Mohammed had never left Arabia, never visited Syria. His only proven acquaintances, outside of idolaters, are Jews, and especially blind Waraka, his wife's cousin. In examining Mohammed's life and doctrines, it is well to deal only with known facts, without building theories on possibilities. From the intensity of passion in Mohammed's conversion, it seems certain that, had he ever met with a real Christian, ever read the New Testament as we understand it, Mohammedanism would have been a very different thing to-day from what it is. The great soul of the man bounded forth to meet those feeble glimmerings of the Old Testament which he received from Waraka, obscured by the subtleties of Talmudic tradition. Had he but known the undefiled Scripture, old and new, what might he not have done?

For Waraka and all the other Jews of that day were, like those of to-day, Talmudists to the backbone, "making the word of God of none effect with their traditions," as our Savior told them face to face. What Mohammed knew of Old Testament history came to him only through rabbinical tradition. All his Old Testament stories are in the rabbinical dress, as all his New Testament history is found in the garbled and traditional form communicated through Abyssinian slavery, or hostile Jewish sneers. What of Old and New Testament appears in the Koran reveals its source with the utmost plainness.

What, then, shall we say of the mind and heart of that man who, from these dim and discolored glimmerings, these foully polluted waters from the fountain of truth, blackened with the lies of centuries, could evolve the pure and exalted religion which he did? What shall we say of the man, who, alone in the dreary wilderness, haunted by tremendous shadows of fear, face to face with the dread problem of the universe, before which our leaders of science to-day fall back, confessing their impotence to explain that First Cause of all, could find the answer to the dread question, and proclaim aloud the truth, "No God but God"?

Truly does the experience of to-day bear out the dictum, "The world, by wisdom, knew not God." The ignorant shepherd and camel-driver, the poor fisherman, the desert wanderer clothed in camel's hair,—not one was learned; and yet to each came God, and talked with him, and made his weakness strength. There are prophets great, and prophets less. Isaiah and Balaam, Daniel and Jonah, if we are to believe Holy Writ, were all prophets; and yet what a difference between their lives and sayings! Shall we refuse to Mohammed, the founder of the purest monotheistic religion of modern times, the only one which has never been stained by idolatry, that credit which we give to the rebellious Balaam, and the selfish and cowardly Jonah? We nineteenth century church people, whether Calvinists or Arminians, Baptists or Papists, have got into a habit of talking of our collection of books, accumulated in their present form under the decisions of certain councils of churches and convocations of rabbis, as being all inspired, and of everything outside as necessarily profane. True, the councils have differed in many centuries. One man swears by the Bible of James I. of England, another by the Douay version, another by Luther's; while every version is different, and the number of books claimed to be inspired or stigmatized as apocryphal varies as widely as opinions vary. All the same, one pats his James I., another his Douay, another his Luther, regardless of questions of original language, regardless of interpolations in manuscripts, regardless of anything but what he has been taught, and boldly calls Mohammed an impostor.

To all such well comes the challenge of the prophet in the second Sura, spoken "in the name of God, Most Merciful of the merciful!"—

"If ye be in doubt as to our revelation to our servant, then produce a Sura like unto it, and summon your witnesses, God and all, if ye be men of truth."

The challenge is sustainable as to parts of the Koran, while other parts are clearly human and full of error. But the same thing we find in many parts of our own canonical Bibles. Nothing but our habits of dogmatic assumption, indeed, could cause us to class the clearly human histories of the Old Testament, the quiet relations of the Acts of the Apostles, with the grand messages of Isaiah and the Psalms, claiming inspiration in every page. An unprejudiced outsider, not blinded by the mists of clerical dogmatism and the dicta of councils, sees little difference in point of language and ideas between the kindly counselling letters of Paul to the churches in Philippi, Corinth, Galatia, Thessalonica, and to Bishop Timothy, and the almost equally beautiful letters of Ignatius, Polycarp, and Clement to their churches. Yet the councils have arbitrarily determined that one set is inspired, the other not. We find no claim to constant inspiration in Paul's letters, set up by himself, nor in those of the other apostles; while in the Acts we are often told of their temporary inspiration. In the Old Testament the same distinction is drawn. At one time a prophet speaks as from himself; at another as moved by inspiration. If we allow this to Jonah—selfish, disobedient, and cruel,—to Balaam—in constant rebellion against God,—can we deny it to Mohammed, steadfastly preaching the one true God to idolaters, and rescuing two continents from the grasp of Paganism, to bring them to eternal truth? We cannot deny the truth of Mohammed's doctrines. Jew and Christian assert it themselves, and the latter refines and mystifies away the doctrine of the Trinity in the Athanasian Creed, till he has made out of it an incomprehensible mystery, of which we can only distinguish one salient fact,—the belief in one God, manifesting himself in three forms, but remaining one.

Nothing but inspiration will explain parts of the Koran, in which a power of truth shines out that could never have emanated from an untaught shepherd. Let Christians once recognize this fact, as they must sooner or later, and the key to the success of Mohammed is found. When the degraded and vitiated Christianity of the seventh century became powerless to affect Paganism, arose Mohammed, the prophet of God, with all his sins and imperfections, his ignorances and mistakes, as truly a prophet as King David. His preaching and practice and the swords of his followers swept from the earth the Paganism that had so debased Christianity, and substituted in the South a purer religion. Nothing short of the pure Christianity of Christ and his apostles can replace it. In vain do our missionaries fight it to-day, in Syria and Turkey, in Africa and Hindostan. The subtleties of theology and the dogmas of churches fall powerless before the simple monotheism of Mohammed; and so it will remain till they learn to recognize that Mohammed was a preacher of the truth. What he did not know of Christianity and the divinity and teachings of Christ himself will make its way on the foundation laid by Mohammed, the unity of God, but not on the ground that Mohammed was an impostor. He preached the truth, and we must recognize the fact. What he lacked of the whole truth may be supplied some day when Christian preachers throw aside intolerance, and own that a man need not be faultless to be a true prophet.*

Our next question, "Saint or devil?" is more easily answered. Were we to take the life of Mohammed in Mecca from the time of his first calling to that of the Hegira, a period of six years, we should find it as truly saintly, as humble and unselfish, as full of charity to others, as was ever the life of Paul, James, John, or any other saint on record. Were we to take all his former life, as recorded by friend and foe, we should look in vain for aught but generosity, honor, truthfulness, and courage. It is a somewhat remarkable fact that in all the lives of Mohammed extant, written by his bitterest foes, amid all the venom and slander of his most intense enemies, no whisper is found accusing the Arabian prophet of a single breach of faith, of a violation of any single commandment in the Decalogue. His whole life was spent in keeping the first four, as soon as he knew them; the honor which he could not give to the parents denied him from early childhood, he paid in full measure to the aged wherever he met them. Theft, murder, and adultery were unknown to him, and lying and covetousness he has never been accused of. Of the meanness and treachery attributed to David, the admittedly inspired prophet, in the case of Bathsheba, of the duplicity and revenge exhibited by the same David in his dying injunctions to his son to slay the men whom himself had ostensibly forgiven, there is no trace in the life or death of the Arabian prophet. As compared with the Psalmist in every action of his life, both before and after his calling, the showing is in Mohammed's favor. As he began so he ended—brave, courteous, truthful, generous, modest.

The sole moral accusation made against him is that of sensuality, in the number of his wives. It has never been stated that he stole other men's wives, like David, nor lied about his own twice over from fear, like Abraham and Isaac. Such as Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and David did without reproach, did Mohammed. In a land of polygamy he had several wives, and took care of all of them. There is no riotous living in his early life. Khadijah was kind to him in his youth, and he remained faithful to his old and withered wife to the day of her death. For many years after he remained unmarried, and it was only when in the full career of conquest and triumph that he took to himself his numerous wives, in great part as it would seem from motives of pity. With the exception of Ayesha, all were widows of some of his followers killed in battle, or otherwise left destitute, and none of them are recorded as having either youth or beauty. Ayesha is the exception, and she was the sister of Ali, his most devoted follower. Of Maryam, the Coptic girl, it is sufficient to say that she was his slave, sent to him as a present by the Governor of Egypt, just as Hagar and Keturah were Abraham's slaves; just as Billah and Zilpah were the slaves of Jacob. He married her, as he married the rest of his wives, as much to protect her from the jealousies and persecutions of others as for sensual pleasure.

If polygamy is a sin, Mohammed was a sinner. We know, however, that it has never been declared to be a sin in any part of Holy Writ, inspired or uninspired. Moreover, the law of polygamy merely provides that the man whose passions lead him to consort with many women shall be compelled to support them in honor. It remains to-day an open question whether its practice may not produce better results with human nature than that remorseless and cruel law of Aryan society which damns every woman not the only wife of a man, and yet leaves the man free to follow his passions without pain or penalty adequate to the ruin he has wrought.

Polygamy has been the practice of all Semitic peoples from the earliest times, along with monotheism. Compulsory monogamy, with its attendant, the widespread "social evil," which all our laws are still powerless to arrest, has been the equally constant practice of those Aryan races which were heathens from the earliest times. Its restrictions have never prevented men from pursuing sensual pleasure where go inclined. They have simply relieved them from the penalty imposed in that Hebrew law given from Mount Sinai.† The essential justice of every part of that law is so well fitted for the protection of the weaker sex that it is somewhat surprising it should have been overlooked in these days, when the wrongs of women are so frequently deplored. One wrong may be done to a woman by a married man which he can never repair under Aryan laws, be he ever so willing. Hebrew and Moslem laws compel the reparation.

This is not the time nor place to enter into an extended discourse on the right or wrong of polygamy. Its brief consideration is, however, absolutely necessary in considering the character and life of Mohammed. He took many wives in his later years; and of these only one, Maryam, seems to have been sought by him from any motive but that of charity, and a desire to protect the weak. Ayesha, the youngest and most beautiful of all, was forced upon him by her family when still a child, they being anxious for the honor of his alliance. Looked upon by the light of the Old Testament, the plurality of Mohammed's wives is nowhere condemned. Looked upon in the light of the New, the condemnation is equally absent when we consider Mohammed only as a fallible human being. It is somewhat remarkable, if we take sensuality as the motive for these marriages, that the prophet should have lived to the age of forty-six faithful to a wife fourteen years older careless of theological criticisms, on the saying of Him who spake as never man spake: "In vain do ye worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Mohammedans can be converted to Christianity in only one way: by showing them who Christ was, and how the prophet mistook his character; not by abusing Mohammed as an impostor.

† I Kings ii., 1-8.—And yet for all this David was an inspired prophet, for whose possession the devil fought hard by temptation, and his sins are fearlessly recorded. They prove nothing against his mission.

‡ Exod. xxii., 16. Deut. xxii., 28, 29.

than himself, and for four more years an unmarried widower. It is still more remarkable that, when at fifty he married again, he should in all cases, when uninfluenced by others, select poor old widows, for whom he provided with scrupulous honesty, supporting each in a separate house. Closely examined, the number of Mohammed's wives was no proof of sensuality, but rather of charity and kindness of heart. He could take care of the widow and fatherless in no other way so well as the one he did, and the laws of God and man in his own country justified him. We have no right to set up our Anglo-Saxon laws and standards to measure the actions of a man living in a different state of society; and nothing but the prejudices of early education prevents us from seeing this truth clearly.

To our last question, "Hero or Antichrist?" the answer is much easier to arrive at. In the first place, the definitions of Antichrist given us by various divines are as widely divergent as their own doctrines. One man is ready to prove conclusively that the Pope is Antichrist; another is equally certain that it is Mohammed; while a third can show you by positive proofs that it was decidedly Napoleon; and a fourth with still greater certainty shows that the rest are all mistaken, and that Russia is symbolized by Gog and Magog and Antichrist. We are not certain but that Washington may have shared these honors in the brain of some truly loyal parsons of the last century, when they considered carefully the unnatural rebellion of that wicked militia colonel against the best of monarchs; and we are pretty certain that the Southern Confederacy took its turn in some pulpits during that "wicked and unnatural rebellion against the best government the world ever saw." That poor Mr. Lincoln was classed in the same category by some people in the same Confederacy was only natural. In fact, at all times and places, men have been wont to stigmatize the head and front of their enemies as Antichrist, and no books have proved so fertile of interpretations of this sort as Daniel and the Revelation.

It is only in the application of their prophecies to the Moslem power that the commentators have made out a poor case. While the ninth chapter of Revelation has been generally, by Christians, held to prefigure the Mohammedan power, the commentators, misled by early prejudice, have only recognized in Mohammed a devil from hell, whereas he is simply called in that chapter the angel Abaddon or Apollyon,* a word signifying simply "the Destroyer." That Mohammed and his successors in their military career were great and terrible destroyers is certain; but if we are to take the same chapter as a prophecy of Mohammed, it is certain that condemnation of any false teaching of his is absent therefrom. On the contrary, it is expressly implied and stated that "the Destroyer" was sent by God himself to destroy idolatry. That such was the main work of Islam all history teaches us, and if such a work is Antichristian, and not otherwise, Mohammed is Antichrist. And if not, what shall we say of the marvellous powers of this man, ignorant shepherd and camel-driver that he was, who, with only the vague Talmudic traditions of a blind Jew to guide him, created the sublimely simple religion of Islam? What shall we say of this man, pretending to be nothing more than a man, who by his simple genius and courage created from a flock of jarring and scattered tribes a nation able to overthrow the whole Roman empire?

We should hail that man to-day as a hero and genius of the very first order who should unite our scattered Indian tribes under one head and overthrow the whole power of the United States, with all its wealth of material prosperity, its aggressive and defensive strength. Were a Tartar chief to collect Tartar and Turcoman under his banner to-day, and overthrow the Russian colossus, then sweeping into India exterminate the English, his name would be classed with those of Genghis and Alaric. Mohammed did all and more than this. He found his tribes poor and scattered among deserts and rocks, with small numbers and less wealth, and he led them boldly to the assault of the mistress of the known world. Dying himself, as one who had begun his work too late in life, he left to his followers a legacy of heroism and strength that carried them on to the conquest of the queen of Europe. Mohammed began the assault on a Roman empire. Ere the Saracens sheathed their swords there was no Roman empire to fight in the West; and the Turks only ceased from ravaging when the last remnant of the Eastern empire had crumbled to dust at the siege of Constantinople.

As general, soldier, and lawgiver, Mohammed was a true hero. He remains the one hero of his people to this day—the only man, simple man, that ever lived whose words and actions are imitated after twelve hundred years with as much fidelity as when they were uttered. Christians,† as a body, do not

*The common notion of Abaddon or Apollyon, "the Destroyer," is too often confounded with that of Satan, "the Adversary"; and the Puritans have aided in confounding them more than any other class of men; Bunyan, by his one scene in Pilgrim's Progress, in which Apollyon is represented in the real character of Satan, has done much to spread this error in that snugly respectable class of people who count going to church as righteousness. Apollyon, in the Revelation if he really prefigures Mohammed, appears as the terrible minister of God's anger against idolaters, not as the adversary of Christianity; and the sooner Christians recognize this plain truth the more philosophical will their position become, from the Christian point of view. From the rationalist point, of course, this whole discussion is about nothing but a vision; but from that point also Mohammed is a great moral teacher, and needs no defence. His most stubborn accusers are your good stiff-necked old Calvinists and Papists of the mediæval and Renaissance types.

† So-called Christians, we should rather say; the sectarians of every grade who cheat each other all the week, go to church Sundays, give money to the missionaries, build churches and "bear" stocks with equal vigor, and are hailed as "merchant princes."

*The writer desires to be clearly understood. In all his remarks, both here and subsequently, he is by no means attacking primitive Christianity, as preached and practised by the inspired apostles who had heard their Master's words, and took care to preach nothing but Christ crucified. His reprobation is directed against nothing but human inventions, misinterpretations, and interpolations, which have slowly gathered around the Gospel in the form of denominational doctrines, and from which no sect whatever is free at the present day. Against these doctrines, emanating from whatever human source, and bolstered up by whatever distortions of texts, he takes his stand, pretend to follow the example of their founder. They will quote Paul, James, any one that they can think of, to avoid understanding the literal truth of Christ's words. In the matter of imitation Mohammedans are far ahead of us. They all try to imitate the prophet, and his name is never out of their mouths. Shall we then deny to the great soldier and prophet, the illustrious lawgiver, whose one book remains to-day the sole code of Mohammedan countries, the title of hero? We think not.

The ignorant strictures of illiterate monks and men-at-arms, the fierce invectives of partisans like Luther (who never read a word of Arabic in his life), the pious platitudes of flocks of parsons, seeking the same hole in the fence like sheep in each other's tracks, may be cast like mud at the greatness their utterers do not understand. The sober sense of a candid mind in search of truth cannot survey the Koran and the life of its author without thanking God for having sent on earth for his own purpose Mohammed—the destroyer of idols, prophet, saint, and hero.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

CHRIST AT THE VATICAN.

BY VICTOR HUGO.

TRANSLATED BY GEORGE S. BURLEIGH.

[This poem had the honor of being interdicted by Louis Napoleon, and was afterwards published at Geneva.]

Spite of all reverence to the Eternal given,—
His Father,—one day Jesus yawned in heaven,
Till his jaw-bone was dislocated;
In this abode of glory he was sated.
The prayers they chanted him before,
Still rose to Paradise; but, alas!
They came to his address no more.
There's nothing, even to the Mass,
That gets not shortened to the uttermost,
When of a goodly meal to take his share
The official would repair.
The Father and the Holy Ghost
Have no whit better fare.

"What's this?" said Jesus; "through forgetfulness
Have Christians dared suppress
Incense and vows, to me their wont to pay?
Much to the Virgin Mary they address;
To the Saints' chapels run the crowds, and pray,
Even as ran and prayed, of old,
The Pagans to their gods of wood and gold.
But for myself the case is different, rather.
At Rome, meanwhile, I have the Holy Father,
My Vice-God, as report hath said it;
He ought, among men, to sustain my credit:
Has he betrayed it? Or may Paganism
Have quite absorbed the old Catholicism?
Straightway to Rome I needs must go,
To see what's doing there below,
And ascertain if the aforesaid Vicar
To my affairs attention gives with rigor;
If he diverts not to himself alone
The worship destined for my own.
My divine nature I must doff, to don a
More modest garb, and take the human figure
That in Judea I wore,
What time her Governor
To hang me did himself the honor!
Or people might not know me, otherwise."

So said, so done; the divine Master flies
And measures with one span
Thence to the Vatican.
Inquiring where the Pope was staying,
Some snare he fancied they were laying,
When to the palace he was brought.
"Oho!" he said; "I never should have thought,
As in a stable fell my natal lot,
To see my servant in a lodge like this!"
Still in he went; but prompt a gilded Swiss,
With halberd set, cried, "Halt! and show your ticket;
You've need of one to pass the papal wicket.
The plumiest dukes, to pay their court inclined,
A passport need, by the Good Father signed,
Or by his chamberlain. Think you a poor wretch
Without a doct, I'm sure, can pass this latch?
Go, go! the Servant of God's servants ne'er
Will give your sort of clowns reception here."

The door already in his face he slaps.
Astonished Christ, who could not dream
That such a compliment was meant for him,
Thinking he'd missed the purport, mused, "Perhaps
To times of persecution they relapse;
That a new Caesar, foe to Christ's exalters,
Rebuilds the Pagan altars."
'Twas so for him this mystery seemed to ope,
That these gay Swiss were jailers to the Pope.
What honesty of heart! I wit
That Christ alone this error could commit.

"My son, I am Jesus," quoth he to the soldier;
"I come my envoy to behold here.
No doubt the Emperor vowed to Jove, in some
Black dungeon holds him for new martyrdom,
As to my first Apostles chanced of old."

The Swiss at hazard his pater noster told,
Though the air, poor and humble, of the Savior,
Seemed not to merit this distinguished favor.

"Jesus, you err; the Holy Father's Caesar;
He makes this palace dome his ordinary home;
Only to guard him are we Swiss here;
Nobody here has any prison, at present,
But your Vice-God; according as seems pleasant,
He'll lodge there all who smack of heresies,
From tender care for their sole bliss,
And honor of the Christian sanctities.
He even hangs sometimes: but I'm good Swiss,
And I would aid you: the ascent for us
Is just before you; mount to the repair
Of the Grand Chamberlain, offer him your prayer;
Perhaps you'd speak the Holy Pontiff thus."

He fancied he reclaimed the hall of Caiaphas.
"Ah, well!" he murmured, "they've a palace home
Of marble and of gold; for me, instead,
When night had come,
I knew not where to lay my head.
Here are the poor a true mar-mirth.
Poor was I, and taught charity on earth.
Ah me! for all guards I had only those Rough dogs who raffled for my clothes.
He hangs! and me, troth I was hung!
My faith! if this old gent, among
His pomps triumphal, plays the role of me,
I'm vilely represented, you'll agree."

While speaking thus had Jesus climbed the stair:
From a vast landing vaster halls ran back,
That seemed a market, as he entered there;
Bazar of nameless things, sham bric-a-brac,
Where, certes, 'tis the buyer who's put in sack.
All round, old bones and models new
Offend the smell, or glitter to the view;
Clerks numberless, alert, sharp-eyed to look,
Tied parcels, and served customers, and took
Pleasant cash; it is a shop, indeed.
The Boss, all dressed in scarlet,—from beyond,
Seeing advance a ragged Lazarus,—
Was mad.

"Eh! what! a dirty vagabond,"
He cried, "in chambers of Earth's Master thus
To penetrate, unceremonious!
How came you here? Who brought you in, and whence?
But it may be, of our Vice-God,
Expecting pardon for some grave offence,
Your penance makes you beggar; that's not odd.
Speak! what is that you lack?
Have you killed some one, and, the danger fearing,
Have stabbed him in the back?
Or did you, else, a murderous hand uprearing,
Your father or your mother slaughter?
Or have you, delicate connoisseur,
Ravished your sister or your daughter?
At Rome, for cash, may one secure
For all these foibles absolution broad.
Do you want crosses, tapers, lambs of God;
Beads better blest than if by Jesu's grace
They had been consecrated?
Would you eat roast, Fridays and Saturdays,
In Lenten tide? Or would you patronize
The precious relics, well authenticated,
Of all the saints who are in Paradise?
Speak! draw your wallet and pay down your score;
For Austria's Emperor we would do no more.
If you'll not pay, march! quick step for the door!
We are ordered by a Papal Bull
Not to deliver but for cash in full:
For us the rich; the devil take the poor!"

"Whew! pretty pranks!" thought Jesus; "truth to name,
These fellows have no more of Jesus
Than had of old the Scribes and Pharisees.
Here are no Christians among these;
That's a sure case!
It would too grossly my good name degrade,
To cover with it this ignoble trade,
By which they rob you, with a brazen face.
But, of their strange career the end we'll seek.
I've little time to lose, and I would speak Straight to the Christians' Father."

This provokes
The Cardinal-peddler of that pious stuff.
"Speak to the Pope! Ha, but the villain jokes!
Believe you, then, rascalion rough,
That he'd permit you, kneeling though you go,
To kiss his cross-back mule? Ha, blockhead, no!
No, it is not for you the Pope puts on his shoe.
And fast and soon get hence! If, with like haste
You would not choose a dungeon's sweets to taste!"
"Priest, I will dissipate your blunder;
Behold and recognize your Master under
This garb of penury!
I am the Christ; and, now, it well may be,
I shall have leave to see
Your Holy Father who holds his power alone from me."

"You Jesus! humph! that kind of wit
Is good, and lets me laugh at it!
What! shall the mighty Lord of Heaven be seen
With your all-faded face and pitiful mien,
And dirty rags, your squalor's signal shown,
As one may see in Beggar Lanes alone?
Further, though 'twere the very truth you've told,
You will not come His Holiness to behold.
He has—by Bacchus!—other things to carry
Than thoughts of Christ, of heaven, or breviary!
Romagna boils. Legations to the gale
Of Revolution fling their sail:
The temporal power escapes us, on my word
Above all other good to be preferred:
In fine, then, be it true you're Jesus, accuse
Only yourself that we your suit refuse.
Why in your glory came you not? Then we Had welcomed you: that were a victory
O'er all our enemies. How you are done!
Clad like a beggar; the Pope would blush to own
A God in such a budget! Me, therefore,
Allow, dear friend, to beau you to the door!"

The Cardinal was talking still,
When Jesus Christ, as once on Tabor's hill,
Became transfigured. In his look austere
Kindled the lightnings of the holy zeal
That moved him when he drove, while ere,
Far from the sacred courts the trafficker.
The Publicans, with insolence inflated
Before, in silence now awaited
The storm which, muttered in the Savior's soul,
Burst terribly its thunder-roll!

"Woe unto you, oh viper progenies!
Your brothers' faith abusing, with no shame;
Woe, woe to you, ye priests and Pharisees,
Hypocrites! wearing the fair Christian name,
Who veil the lessons that were mine
Under a thousand mummeries,
And desecrate my holy shrine
With thousand-fold idolatries.

Need I remind you what my laws decree?
Blind leaders of the blind afar from me!
Need I remind you that my life was given
In teaching sweetness, peace, and modesty,
Alms, and forgiveness, love, and hope in heaven,
And all the virtues ye so feebly show?
Once, in my humble life, did I allow
That men should hail me 'Grandeur,' 'Eminence'?
Or, clothed in gold and purple, did I enhance
My treasure from the poor man's dripping brow?
Jerusalem saw me riding on an ass:

The Roman people, unrieved by it natheless,
Behold your Chief, and not His Holiness,
Borne upon Christian backs, in triumph pass.
I marvel how his daring pride omits
To put on them the saddle or the bits!
My law and pattern see how men pursue!
Showing humble for the nonce, which one of you
To him who took his cloak the coat has given?
For worldly treasures, to the robber free,
Ye'll give centupled all the wealth of heaven.
Your heart's the altar of Cupidity!
Your hands are always stretched to gather more;
Never could tender pleadings of the poor

Your pity move. Less priests than hucksters keen,
Less shepherds than true butchers, from your lean
Sad sheep ye take the milk, the flesh and wool:
The Church for you is earth's possession full.
The life eternal, and the glory above,
Employ you little: it is gold you love!
'Gold! give us gold!' such is your text sublime,
And to be poor, your greatest, only crime.
Your eye is mild, your lips with honey fall;
And, while your visage lies, your heart is gall!
Rigid for others, for yourselves replete
With greedy lusts, no faults your pardon meet:
With haughty mien you love unbounded rule.
The chief among you feigns to call
Himself the servant of my servants all;
He lies, like his own Bull:
Of the all-servant does one kiss the mule?

"If not as you some hapless being thinks,
If he would break his chain's too heavy links,
Your wrath, with justice for its thin disguise,
Consigns him to the hangman. I have said,
'I will have mercy and not sacrifice.'
Have said, 'Give freely what without a price
Was given to you.' To my redeemed, instead,
You sell baptism upon their natal bed;
Sell to the sinner void indulgences;
To lovers sell the natural right to wed;
Sell to the dying the privilege of deace,
And sell your funeral masses to the dead!
To kinsfolk vend the New Year's 'Wish you well!'
Your prayers and masses and communions sell;
Beads, benedictions, crosses; in your eyes
Nothing is sacred; all is merchandise.
None in your Church one step can make his way
But he must pay to enter, for sitting pay,
And pay to pray: altar is counter here,
The Papacy is earth's grand usurer!
My house is, here below, a house of prayer,
But ye have made thereof the robbers' lair!
Sold there the Virgin's favors, as they sell
The loves of women in their little hell!
Here your soul's blot is mirrored everywhere.
The Scribes, your fathers, were not so perverse;
You are not even wilted sepulchres!"

"By sham laws, robberies, and extortions vile,
Of Borgia's usurpations, with subtle wile,
Your cities, you aver, comprise
Saint Peter's patrimony: there must men
Think as the monk, and not as citizen.
Transgression is a vice
Your laws condone, though reason punishes.
There reign among you Pride and Avarice;
Cowed knave and fool the price of justice share:
To crawl before you is sole duty there!
And this you name the temporal power! a scheme
That my poor Peter never saw in dream.
Only to rule earth, you the heavens invoke.
But times change. Weary of the priestly yoke,
Your States break down the olden Papal sway,
And on Romanag Freedom smiles to-day.
Aye, your own Romans, whom Revolt has won
(If France had not restored their tyrant's power),
Would have expelled ye eleven years since and more!
Cower, brood of vipers, priests of Papal pride!
The sons shall finish what their fathers tried."

The tonsured hucksters, consternated, dumb,
Still at the voice of Jesus trembled all,
As he returned to his immortal home.
On the same day was heard the news at Rome
That, driving out the Legate Cardinal,
Bologna stripped her king pontifical;
And that with newer glory,
Adorning her old story,
She had just chosen a Power Provisional.

LONDON, Jan., 1861.

RECEIVED.

Books.

ON THE ORIGIN OF SPECIES BY MEANS OF NATURAL SELECTION: or, the Preservation of Favored Races in the Struggle for Life. By Charles Darwin, M.A., F.R.S. New Edition, from the Sixth English Edition, with Additions and Corrections. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1875.
PRINCIPLES OF SOCIAL SCIENCE. Being a Survey of the Subject from the Moral and Theological, yet Liberal and Progressive, Standpoint. By R. J. Wright, Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. 1875.
A QUESTION OF HONOR. A Novel. By Christian Reid. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1875.
HISTORY PRIMERS. History of Rome. By the Rev. M. Creighton, M.A. With Maps. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1875.
CONVERSATIONS OF JESUS. Arranged in Dialogue Form. Boston: Congregational Publishing Society.
JESUS AND THE APOSTOLIC AGE. By Olive G. Pettis. Vol. I. Providence. 1870.
GERMAN FOUR PART SONGS, for Mixed Voices. With English Words. Edited by N. H. Allen. Boston: Oliver Ditson & Co.
NATIONAL HYMN AND TUNE BOOK FOR CONGREGATIONS, SCHOOLS, AND THE HOME. Boston: Oliver Ditson & Co.

Pamphlets and Periodicals.

UNITED STATES OFFICIAL POSTAL GUIDE. Boston: H. O. Houghton & Co.
TWENTIETH ANNUAL REPORT of the Board of Directors of St. Louis Public Schools, 1873-74. St. Louis: 1875.
THIRD ANNUAL REPORT of the Board of Directors of the Chicago Public Library. June, 1875. Chicago: 1875.
THIRTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT of the Working Men's Club and Institute Union, 150 Strand, London.
SIN AGAINST GOD. An Anniversary Discourse preached at Clerkenwell Unitarian Free Church, St. John's Square, London. E. C., June 6, 1875. By Emeritus Professor Francis William Newman, London: Trübner & Co. 1875.
PUBLICATIONS OF THOMAS SCOTT, Esq., London.—The Pauline Epistles. By Thomas Lunt, en Strange.—A Plain Statement.—The Pentateuch and Book of Joshua. By a Physician.—Signs of the Times: August, 1875.
SERMONS by the Rev. Charles Voysey, London.—Theism versus Christianity: June 6.—Hospital Sunday: June 13.—The Letter and the Spirit: June 20.—The Sure Refuge: June 27.
THE HUDSON RIVER, by Pen and Pencil. For Tourists and Others. Illustrated with Sixty Wood Engravings. New York: D. Appleton & Co.
STATEMENT OF REASONS for Embracing the Doctrines and Disclosures of Emanuel Swedenborg. By the Rev. Geo. Bush. New York: E. H. Swinney. 1875.
THE FALLACIES OF THE FREE LOVE THEORY. By J. W. Pike. Boston: William Denton. 1875.
THE LITERATURE OF THE INSANE. By F. R. Marvin, M.D. THEOLOGY SIMPLIFIED. By Samuel Keese. New York: 1867.
THE JOURNAL OF SPECULATIVE PHILOSOPHY. July, 1875. St. Louis: Gray, Baker, & Co.
THE UNITARIAN REVIEW. August, 1875. Boston: L. C. Bowles.
THE PENN MONTHLY. August, 1875. Philadelphia: 233 South 8th St.
THE HERALD OF HEALTH. August, 1875. New York: Wood & Holbrook.
THE SANITARIAN. August, 1875. New York: 234 Broadway.
THE PHYSICIAN'S MIRROR FOR 1875. New York: W. A. Townsend.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING AUG. 14.

Jona. F. Barrett, $40; G. T. B. Perry, 20 cents; J. T. Clarkson, 50 cents; Henry Justice, 20 cents; O. S. Barr, 35 cents; Geo. Lewis, 20 cents; Katie G. Bliss, 35 cents; A. Clark, 50 cents; C. L. Cassin, $1; Joel Sharp, $3.20; Joel McMillan, $2.20; Henry Lantz, $1; Henry Obermyer, $3.20; Benj. Freeman, $3; H. H. Hatch, $3.20; Val Walters, $9; C. D. Van Vetchen, $3; A. Williams & Co., $3.78; Chas. E. Pratt, $3.20; Albert S. Brown, $10; A. P. Rose, $5.50; Henry Grew, $3.20; C. M. Stiles, $3.20; W. S. George, $3.20; John Scott, $3.20; R. G. Sells, $4.25; John Winslow, $4; L. W. Blakesly, $3; Chas. H. Goddard, $3; Wylie Smith & Co., $3; T. J. Crouse, 60 cents; G. S. Steward, 35 cents; Geo. Terry, 20 cents; S. G. Matthews, 75 cents; R. Peterson, 30 cents; S. R. Honey, 20 cents; G. B. Blake, $3.20; Wm. Boyer, $3.20; H. T. Marshall, $3.20; B. J. Francis, 50 cents; H. L. Noyes, 50 cents.

The Index.

BOSTON, AUGUST 19, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E.
D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRAN-
CIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
(England), Editorial Contributors.

"IN AGREEMENT with a paragraph copied into your paper from another paper," good-humoredly writes an Ohio subscriber, "I must say that THE INDEX contains much very instructive matter not found in any other newspaper, and for this reason must renew my subscription to it, however closely circumscribed my means. Now please make a note of this in THE INDEX, just to see how I would look in print!"

THE COMMUNICATION published in another column from the pen of Mr. M. S. Toyama, a Japanese student at the University of Michigan, with regard to belief in miracles, is very ingenious and interesting. Really, when so much is said about the probability of converting Japan to Christianity, such an article seems to indicate that the chances are all the other way. If Christianity cannot hold its own at home against the keen, strong intelligence of these Japanese youths, it is little likely to convert them under the great disadvantages it encounters in a populous and highly civilized heathen land. Our readers will doubtless be pleased, as we certainly shall be, with further communications from Mr. Toyama.

F. R. A. ANNUAL REPORT.

The Report, in pamphlet form, of the Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association for 1875 is now ready.

It contains an Essay by Wm. C. Gannett, on "Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and an Essay by F. E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. B. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

It can be obtained, in Boston, at A. Williams & Co.'s, and by mail by addressing "Office of Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass."

Price of single copy, 35 cents; package of four copies or more, 25 cents each.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

CALL FOR THE SEPTEMBER CONVENTION.

The Liberal Leagues throughout the country are cordially invited to send five delegates each to a Convention to be held in Philadelphia on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of September next, for the purpose of disseminating our principles and of making arrangements for a general Congress of Liberals to convene next year during the Centennial exhibition. It is very desirable that every Liberal League in America should be fully represented at the September Convention. Now is the time to work. The enemies of religious freedom are busy in preparing to utilize human ignorance and superstition for the strengthening and perpetuating of an organized system of mental repression, hostile alike to science, reason, and the right of private judgment in all matters of faith and conscience.

Let us endeavor to overcome ignorance by intelligence,—superstition by reason. Let each League send a full representation of men and women, so that from the combined wisdom of both sexes and all our societies we may be able to inaugurate a new era of impartial justice, perfect freedom, and scientific religion.

As soon as delegates are elected, Leagues are requested to notify the undersigned, and also THE INDEX.

JOHN S. DYE,
Sec'y Phila. Liberal League,
2527 Brown Street, Phila.

PHILADELPHIA, July 22, 1875.

N. B.—All Liberal Societies which sympathize with the objects of the Liberal Leagues and wish to be represented are included in the above Call.

DELEGATES REPORTED.

PHILADELPHIA LIBERAL LEAGUE.—Isaac Rhen (President), John S. Dye (Secretary), Carrie S. Burnham, Damon Y. Kilgore, Jesse B. Beam.
BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.—F. E. Abbot (President), Geo. A. Bacon (Secretary), A. Bronson Alcott, B. F. Underwood, John Wetherbee.

SHALL THE CIVIL SERVICE BE CHRISTIANIZED?

Under the caption, "Christians in Politics," the New York Nation lately discussed the merits of the scheme for securing honesty and efficiency in the civil service by selecting officials from among the technically religious men of the nation,—more particularly with reference to President Grant's policy towards the Indians, and the address of the Indian Commissioners to the "Christian Public" regarding the charges brought against Secretary Delano and Commissioner Smith. Pointing out very truly that the arguments for selecting "Christians" to fill the various posts of the Indian service apply just as strongly to all other posts in the government employ, and that such a system, if adopted, would simply have the practical effect of "handing the State over to the Church," it goes on to say:—

"What are the objections to this course? Why should we not make a profession of religion, or a certificate of religious character from some religious association or denomination, a condition of entrance into any branch of the civil service? Why should we not hand all the whole work of governmental administration over to the missionary societies, for instance? We think the answer to this is furnished by the recent history of the Indian Bureau, as well as that of some other places of trust and profit in the public service and elsewhere; but, before stating it, we will say frankly that we think the selection of all employees from among the professors of religion would, for a while, be an enormous gain on the present system. It would supply a test of character of very great value the first time it was applied, because there is no question that, taken as a whole, the members of churches are more likely to be honest, upright, and trustworthy than the rest of the community. One sees why this must be so without taking any very high or spiritual view of the matter. Persons who make an open profession of religion may be divided roughly into three classes: (1) really spiritually-minded persons of pure lives, who have a longing for communion with God, which finds expression and satisfaction in the public worship and various other ministries of a religious organization; (2) persons with more or less desire for right living, but with so little strength of will and so much carnal weakness that they are constantly giving way to temptation and losing their self-respect, and join the church as a kind of external help in satisfying the demands of their own consciences; and (3) the worldly schemers who have no religious sentiment whatever, and no belief in God or devil, but have acquired skill in the use of religious terminology, and see, or think they see, that religious profession is a powerful help in trade and commerce. As regards the first two classes, church-membership is unquestionably a means and a sign of a higher than the average morality. As regards the last, it is unquestionably also a powerful restraint. There is many a man of this class whom the church probably keeps out of jail by the help and comfort it brings him in business and in society, and by the way in which it concentrates public opinion on him. If anybody were to determine, therefore, in a general way, that he would employ none but church members, he would find that on the whole he was making his selection from an excellent class, and stood a better chance of being served well than if he trusted to the ordinary modes."

In this passage the Nation exhibits less than its usual shrewdness and insight in commenting on men and things. There would not even be a temporary gain in making church membership a necessary qualification for office, so far as official and business integrity are concerned. Instead of assuming off-hand, without investigation, that "there is no question that, taken as a whole, the members of churches are more likely to be honest, upright, and trustworthy than the rest of the community," the Nation will find (if it makes inquiry) that there is a great deal of "question" as to this assumed fact, even among those who have no particular sympathy with liberal opinions on religious matters. Whether with or without reason, the statement that "So-and-so is a church-member," unsupported by positive evidence as to his good moral character, creates no presumption of it in the minds of a very respectable portion of the community, but rather puts them on their guard and leaves the impression that he will "bear watching." Church-membership has no effect on the world at large in raising a man's business credit; which it would do, if the average business character of church-members stood any higher than that of their neighbors. Business men, as a rule, are exceedingly shy of any claims to confidence made on such grounds; they do not, with the Nation, take it for granted that "the members of churches are more likely to be honest, upright, and trustworthy than the rest of the community"; they know perfectly well that honesty, uprightness, and trustworthiness are not the qualities on which the churches lay their chief emphasis or which they make their chief exertions to promote; they have seen too much of "Christian statesmen" and "Christian merchants" to risk any money on anybody's Christ-ianity; they have learned by experience that there are just as many rogues in the churches per capita as there are out of them, and take it as a very bad and suspicious sign when any man shows the least disposition to rely on his church-membership in business dealings. These statements the Nation can verify any day, if it chooses to institute inquiries on the subject. Church-membership does not, in the actual judgment of men of affairs, constitute in any degree prima facie evidence of official integrity or business honesty; and this it would certainly do, if, as the Nation assumes, it really implied on the average a higher moral character than that of the community at large. Hence we deny the Nation's assumption that there would be even a temporary moral gain in selecting "Christians" to fill official positions.

But let us look a little closer at the "three classes" into which the Nation divides church-members, and inquire whether there is any rational ground for expecting of them a higher than the average "honesty, uprightness, and trustworthiness."

"(1.) Really spiritually-minded persons of pure lives, who have a longing for communion with God, which finds expression and satisfaction in the public worship and various other ministries of a religious organization." We are not exactly clear how much the Nation intends to include under the terms "spiritually-minded" and "pure lives." If it means to include business and official honesty, which is the point at issue, it uses the terms in a very unusual sense, and begs the question at the same time; for, of course, if it means by its first class all the really honest persons among church-members, there would be sheer tautology in its saying of this class that "church-membership is unquestionably a means and a sign of a higher than the average [business] morality." But we do not suppose that the Nation used the terms in question in so broad a sense as to cover this point of business morality. If its argument means anything, it is that spiritual aspiration and purity, longing for communion with God,—in a word, a strong religious sentiment,—has a direct tendency to produce integrity in money matters and fidelity to all official trusts. It may provoke a little mirthfulness in some quarters to see the Nation placing so high an estimate on the business value of mere "sentiment"; nevertheless, we agree with it in doing so. For sincere religious sentiment we have great reverence, and believe it to be especially friendly to virtue in all the relations of life. At the same time it may, and often does, coexist with a very feeble moral nature; and the history of the Church shows that there is no necessary connection between religious sentiment, even in its strongest manifestations, and practical morality. That the real root of honesty, uprightness, and trustworthiness (let it not be forgotten that these are the only virtues now concerned) can be found anywhere except in the consciousness of naked moral obligation to be honest, upright, and trustworthy,—that the religious sentiment as such can be made to do the work of conscience,—or that energy of conscience depends either on religious belief or religious sentiment,—we totally disbelieve; and we claim that the experience of mankind overwhelmingly sustains this disbelief. Accordingly, while we agree with the Nation in expecting a "higher than the average [business] morality" from its first class of church-members, we are prepared to find even among them a considerable percentage of business and official rascality. Even were the civil service to draw exclusively upon this first class of church-members, it would not escape the certainty of enlisting many officials whose undoubted "spiritual-mindedness" and "longing for communion with God" would prove no protection against the fate of Colfax and Patterson.

"(2.) Persons with more or less desire for right living, but with so little strength of will and so much carnal weakness that they are constantly giving way to temptation and losing their self-respect, and join the church as a kind of external help in satisfying the demands of their own consciences." It is rather astonishing that the Nation should say of this class, as well as of the first, that "church-membership is unquestionably a means and a sign of a higher than the average morality." It is preposterous to assume that the "average" community are worse or weaker than these weaklings. Outside of the lists of church-members will be found the great bulk of the professional, business, and laboring world; and if it were in no healthier a condition than this second class, it would all go to pieces through its own rottenness. Whoever properly belongs to this second class, as the Nation describes it, is, we unhesitatingly affirm, far below even the average business morality of the community; for, of course, by "temptation" the Nation means temptation to business dishonesty, unless it has lost sight of its own argument. To select public servants exclusively from a class of persons fitly described as the Nation describes this, would probably insure as much official corruption as to go into the streets, and select at random every tenth man that passed until the offices were all filled. The description given, with the exception of the last clause, pretty fairly applies to the common run of people the world over; it is certainly not a better one than is deserved by the average man, and by no means justifies the Nation's expectation from the class described of "a higher than the average morality."

"(3.) The worldly schemers who have no religious sentiment whatever, and no belief in God or devil, but have acquired skill in the use of religious terminology, and see, or think they see, that religious professions is a powerful help in trade and commerce." "The powerful restraint" imposed on this third class by church-membership we consider to be a mere figment of the imagination. Rascals don't want to get into "jail," whether they belong to the church or not; and the addition of hypocrisy to their other vices does but exasperate their moral malady. Such characters as these are the worst possible class of the community to furnish public officials, for they only make religion a cloak to cover up what villainies they practise, and by the skill in dissimulation acquired in cheating their brother church-members they have only rendered themselves more dangerous rogues in public office. It would be better policy to nominate jail-birds outright, for the public would be warned to keep an eye on these, instead of being lulled into a false security by lying professions of religion.

Casting up the account, then, we judge that the moral interests of the civil service would be not even temporarily advanced by picking out "Christians" to fill its offices. The first class above described, according to our best observation, is a very small one compared with the other two; and, even if it were the only one, the chances of selecting dishonest and untrustworthy men from it would still be great. But, taking into consideration the numerical preponderance of the last two classes, it would seem to ensure a deterioration of the civil service even as now constituted, were the selection of officials to be made exclusively from church-members. We deny point-blank, with strong emphasis, this arrogated moral superiority of the churches. Facts give it the lie direct. It is nothing but the self-conceit of spiritual pride which intoxicates the churches with the notion that they are morally better than the rest of mankind; and we confess to some mild astonishment at seeing the Nation, usually so keen and astute, victimized and misled by so transparent a pretence. It has been deluded into conceding to the pious sentimentalism of the churches a moral protectiveness which belongs only to intelligent, honorable, proudly cherished principle—to the clear head, the bold heart, and the determined conscience of unregenerated self-respect. To be "honest, upright, and trustworthy" is not the special aim of the churches, and they very indifferently succeed in reaching it; but it is the chief end of natural virtue, and is best attained under her unsophisticated guidance.

WORK AND CRIME.

"Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do." That is because hands and brains will not be idle; if they cannot find something useful to plan and do, then they will surely plan and do somewhat that is mischievous.

I doubt if there be any such thing as pure laziness, as there is no such thing as absolute rest. Every atom of the material universe is always in motion, the philosophers tell us. All is in process of dissolution or evolution. Every natural force is always working either to construct or destroy. This force which has got embodied in what we call a man is no exception to the rule. This too is ever acting; ever gathering or scattering, ever creating or spending, ever asking or giving, ever doing good or evil. Every man and child presents himself at the door of society, and says, "I am here for something, not for nothing. I am here to be and do; show me what I shall be and do."

This, I take it, is just the function which society has to perform towards the individual. It has to give him a chance to be and do; to exercise and express himself; and then to stand aloof, and see him work out his own salvation, which is identical with the salvation of the race.

If society fails to do this, then there will be trouble. If it fails to employ all the brains and hands to some good purpose, then as sure as fate (and what is surer?) those brains and hands will employ themselves to some bad purpose. The man is here. Society may have him for usefulness, if it knows how to get the useful out of him; otherwise it will have him for mischief. The individual is only one factor in the task of making him a worthy or unworthy member of society; society itself is the other factor. Neither can do much alone; together they can do everything.

Take the inmates of any State-prison; and it is safe to affirm that the reason why any one of them is there is partly because society has failed to do its whole duty towards him. It failed to help him, as it should have, to become a good citizen; and therefore he has become a criminal. He would have stayed outside in the world, and been a power for good, if every circumstance had conspired to help him; contrarywise, he has done some evil, and is now in durance vile, instead of finding usefulness and happiness in freedom. If he could have been helped to an activity which was agreeable to him; if he could have been appointed to a task which was suited to his capacity,—instead of being now an unreconciled he might have been a reconciled member of society. Society, therefore, is partly responsible for his being where he is and what he is. If this is not true in every case, it is at least true in most cases.

I know it may be said that there is work enough in the world for every man; and that if he cannot do one thing he ought to be willing to do another, and behave himself properly all the same. While this is true in a general sense, it is not true in every special one. We have to consider, not only what a man ideally ought to do, but what he actually does do; and have a philosophy and a practice which shall explain and provide for the concrete emergency as well as the abstract possibility. Each man has a choice among tasks; a choice which Nature creates in him, by virtue of the particular capacity she bestows on him. Every wise parent studies the special adaptiveness of his child, and seeks to help him to his own; seeks to aid him to find the vocation in life, which his individual nature calls for. If this be found, then, except in very abnormal instances, all goes well. Society is, in a certain sense, in loco parentis towards the individual. It must help him to find the task his special capacity craves; and it must not visit upon him unsympathetic censure, if he stumbles about while he is seeking it. The rule is that every man prefers to pursue his career in peace with his fellow-men. If instead of peace there is war, perhaps not one is to blame but all.

Besides, every time it is not true that there is work enough of some kind for each man to do. In times of general business depression, like the present, this is not the case. Seventy thousand men and women unemployed in New York; two thousand heads of families out of work in Boston,—this, we are told over and over, is the condition of affairs now. Why are these persons idle? Not because they are not seeking work, many of them with prayers and tears; not because they are naturally lazy and vicious. It is simply because business is depressed; because business men, with means, are unwilling to engage in expensive enterprises; because the currency of the country is unsound; because capital and wealth have accumulated unduly in the hands of a few, who are thus enabled to control the most vital interests of the people, and wield them to the enhancement of their own enormous profit. In such times as these that are now upon us, when work is not to be had, and the prosperity and happiness of many homes are stagnant and wasted, the adage with which this article begins is sure to be abundantly verified. If men are not allowed to work, if they are too sad and despairing to play, and especially if want and hunger and debt and starvation clamor at their doors, what wonder that some of them should turn and prey upon society which seems so cold-hearted and unsympathetic towards them?

I am now acquainted with two young men (one of them a husband and father), both of whom have been in State-prison, but are now struggling desperately to earn an honest living, and to save themselves from a return to that den of unwholesome moral influences. One of these has travelled the streets of Boston and its suburbs for weeks, in vain seeking employment, willing to work at anything which would give support to himself, his wife, and child. Meanwhile, evil associates of former times tempted him night and day to fill his pockets by crime, while naught but destitution was the possession of his family, who, from his inability to pay their lodging, were hourly threatened with being put upon the street,—from which despair a benevolent gentleman saved them by his generosity. This man, at last accounts, was still unemployed and dependent on the generosity of strangers, though still earnestly seeking for work. The other, in the midst of many discouragements and temptations, is beginning a fresh career in New York, where he is striving manfully for a living, for integrity, and for education.

If either of these men, while seeking but not finding employment, had dropped into crime again, could society wholly have excused itself of all responsibility for their fall? Happily for themselves, and for all of us, these young men, so far since their restoration to society, have persevered to seek a life of honest industry against all odds. But many have been less fortunate even than they; have failed entirely to find work, and at last have obtained by evil means what they could not by fair.

It is far cheaper for society to prevent crime, than to punish and take care of men after they have become criminals. No community can afford to let any of its members lie idle, willing and needing to work but not able to obtain employment. It had better build houses to be torn down again, dig holes in the ground only to be refilled, make shoes of spin cloth that nobody wants, than to suffer any of its men and women to become desperate and vicious because they can find no honest labor to employ their brains and hands. That community only is prosperous and happy, where industry and competency are open to all alike, where none are allowed to acquire wealth and leisure at the expense of others, but where every man can freely seek and find whatever is requisite to his comfort, his happiness, and the full development of his nature.

If any reader of THE INDEX, and friend of humanity, knows of any employment whereby one of the men above alluded to can earn his honest livelihood, I will thank such to let me know.

A. W. S.

ART EDUCATION.

"MODERN ART EDUCATION.—Its Practical and Aesthetic Character Educationally Considered by Prof. Joseph Lange, of Vienna: Being part of the Austrian Official Report on the Vienna World's Fair of 1873. Translated with Note by S. N. Koehler. With an Introduction by Charles B. Stetson. Boston: L. Prang & Co. 1875."

The appearance of this pamphlet is timely, since during the last year one may see a current of reaction setting in against the teaching of drawing in our public schools on the score of public economy. But Mr. Stetson shows very clearly that the art education of the people, by enhancing the value of all industrial labor, is a great producer of wealth, and so a measure of wise and far-seeing economy. He gives important statistics from the census to show how the want of this skill influences our relations to foreign production, as shown by our exports and imports. France affords a wonderful example of the great value of artistic education in relation to mechanical industry; and it is this circumstance which has enabled her to meet the terrific losses of the late war, and to pay off so promptly the exorbitant demands of her avaricious rival.

Prof. Lange gives a very interesting review of the condition of art education in Europe, and, incidentally, much valuable information as to methods of teaching, and the various works published for the use of the art schools. One cannot help perceiving a little tendency to take exceptions to French methods and French influence, although he is obliged to confess that the French are the masters of all Europe in technical excellence, and that the industrial results are most satisfactory.

We think he does not give sufficient credit to the study of the human figure as a means of developing the eye and mind of the artist in the best possible way. This has been a leading feature in French instruction. There is no test so nice as the change of expression in the human face and figure. As the old proverb says, "An inch in a man's nose is considerable;" and the never-failing interest of the subject leads the people to constant revision of his work, and increase of power of judging it.

Another point is of great interest. Prof. Lange constantly refers to the part which the Sunday-schools of Germany have played in the art education of the people. What stupid prejudice is it that prevents one utilizing these hours redeemed from hard labor in teaching the most beautiful and useful of arts? Why does it desecrate the day to draw more than to sing? We can have Sunday concerts, with opera airs and overtures; God be thanked that we have got so far! But the few galleries of pictures that we have must be closed on the only day when the workingman has leisure to enjoy them! When visiting a reform school for boys, the superintendent told me what a hard day Sunday was. Excepting the few hours spent in church, the boys had nothing to do; and the teachers were obliged to spend their time in reading to them. I asked him if he had ever thought of allowing the pupils to draw on Sunday, as there will always be found many who have a natural love for this pursuit. He was evidently pleased with the idea himself, but doubted whether his directors would allow it.

Those who have watched the intense enjoyment of workmen in the evening drawing-classes for adults established by the city, will not doubt that many a man would find great refreshment as well as advantage from devoting his Sunday leisure to this delightful pursuit. And if Plato's beautiful definition of art is true, that its mission is "to utter truth concerning God," how could he be more holily employed than in learning to speak the language of the Creator after him?

It is painful to read the article on America, and see how small is our present achievement in this direction; but we are making an earnest beginning, and in the right way, by introducing drawing into the common school, and giving every child some knowledge of it. There is much in our methods, even in Massachusetts, that is fairly open to criticism, and fair and impartial criticism is what all true friends of the movement will desire; but for ourselves we are too thankful for any methodical, sincere efforts in improving our art education, to feel disposed to be severe on any minor mistakes. This book will repay careful attention in comparing the progress in different countries, and by different methods.

E. D. C.

Communications.

A JAPANESE VIEW OF MIRACLES.

The following was in the Nation of July 15, 1875: "There is a good deal of discussion in the European papers as to the causes of Belgian fanaticism—why it is, for instance, that the belief in the grossest kind of miracles should be widely spread among the middle class of one of the most flourishing manufacturing countries in Europe; but we have seen nothing that can be called light yet thrown on the subject."

Now I do not propose to throw any light on the subject which would satisfy the Nation; nor do I think that the present case requires any more light than a thousand others of the same nature. Such cases as the present are by no means rare in our days. One of the most remarkable cases of this kind of anomaly is that of Crookes and Wallace. They are not only men of culture and intelligence, but stand preëminent among scientific men, yet believe in the grossest kind of spiritual manifestations; nay, one of them avows, in the name of the class to which he belongs, that they take much stock in witchcraft. While I do not propose to give any explanation for this so-called fanaticism of the Belgians, and simply state that, whatever the explanation may be, it should not be special, but general (that is to say, that the explanation should be one which would account for every case of this kind of anomaly), I wish to point out to the reader the fact that "a great deal of discussion" which is now going on in the European papers in regard to the Belgian credulity is but one of many cases where people go on wondering at others' conduct, while their own is just as much a subject of wonder to others. Who knows but that many of those who now are wondering at the Belgian credulity may themselves be most strong believers in the Katie King business? To one who pays a little attention to the subject, it is really amusing how people go on wondering at each other's belief.

For instance, one hears such remarks as the following very often: "I don't see how Mr. So-and-So, so intelligent and so cultured, could believe in such and such things." The spiritual A pities and laughs at the credulity of the Roman Catholic B, and vice versa. Dispute with a Roman Catholic the truth of the recent French miracles, and he would say that you are awfully sceptical, and ask you how you could believe in anything, if you doubt events to which there are so many witnesses. But now, if you ask him why he does not believe in spiritual manifestations, to which there are just as many witnesses as to his own miracles, he would simply tell you that spiritual manifestations are ridiculous, and need no refutation. (There are a great many Catholics who attribute these manifestations to the devil, and a few who are Spiritualists; but these are not those Catholics who make any pretension to rationality.) If now you had a talk with a Spiritualist, you would meet with no better fate.

Another point about which I want to say a few words is the apparent disbelief of Protestants in miracles. It was but a few years ago that Protestant laymen as well as clergy were unanimously incensed against Prof. Tyndall on account of his sceptical views in regard to miracles. Has so great a change been wrought in popular belief in so short time? But judging from the general outcry against cremation not a long time ago, the religious notions of Christians by no means seem to have much changed of late; and it is scarcely probable that the case of miracles should be an exception. Why is it, then, that Protestants wonder at the French and Belgian credulity, thus showing their own seeming unbelief in miracles? The problem is not so difficult to solve as it would seem at first, and the following is my explanation:—

Protestants have not lost one whit of their belief in miracles, but since the time of the Reformation they have ceased, not without good reasons, to take any stock in Roman Catholic miracles; and, as they themselves do not believe in them, they cannot see why others should. Hence the present discussion in the European papers about the so-called Belgian fanaticism. But suppose that to-morrow a case of a Protestant miracle were reported, especially if it were in connection with the Beecher-Tilton case, and were in favor of the illustrious minister, would there not be thousands, nay, millions, of Protestants who would embrace the report with tears of joy and cries of exultation, without a moment's hesitation; and would they not stigmatize whoever should doubt the truth of the event with the opprobrious name of infidel and atheist, whose only aim is to upset Christianity and lead society into darkness and anarchy? Nay, those very papers which now are wondering at the Belgian credulity, and seem themselves so rational about such matters, would perhaps be among the foremost to uphold the truth of such a Protestant miracle, and their argument would be somewhat as follows:—

"While no one who is not prejudiced against Christianity can entertain the slightest doubt of this most remarkable miracle (for among many others who had the good fortune of witnessing it there were such men as Dr. — and General —, who in veracity and intelligence are, if not superior to, at least unsurpassed by any other men), we are not ignorant that the truth of this most illustrious event in the history of Christianity will be disputed by the know-everything philosophers and their sycophants. The know-everything philosophers know a few laws of the universe, and, thinking that these few laws are all the laws of the infinite universe, they at once jump to the conclusion that anything which they cannot account for by one or another of these laws is an impossibility. They forget that those phenomena which we, being men, call miracles, are such to us only because we do not understand in the present state of our minds the laws of their performance; but with God they are no more miracles than the falling of an apple to the ground. These philosophers would have us believe that every thing which is impossible with themselves is impossible with God! It is strange that it does not occur to these men that the laws of the universe thus far revealed to man are only a minute fraction of all the laws of the universe, and that these are by no means among the greater ones. Higher and higher laws are revealed to man, just as he becomes more and more advanced in his moral and intellectual capacity. To one who believes in Christianity, while we cannot explain the laws of miracles, yet they are perfectly intelligible; for although he is ignorant of how and why, yet he knows that there is One with whom there is nothing impossible. The Christian does not lose presence of mind before miracles, but becomes more confirmed in his belief, and aspires for a higher state of existence; for he is aware that miracles are but preludes of the revelations of higher laws, for which the Almighty is preparing man. Steam-engines and telegraphs would have been miracles to the ancients; nay, they are so considered even at this very moment by more than half the world. If the history of the world is so full of wonderful discoveries and inventions, which would have been considered impossible by men of the preceding ages, why should men of the nineteenth century be so sceptical about miracles? Is it not more likely that things which occurred once should occur again, than that things which never occurred before should occur? Did not miracles occur once? Why should not they occur again? As it is the natural order of things that facts become known to men before their laws, it would not be always obligatory on those who affirm new facts or events to be able to explain their laws; much less would it be so when the facts affirmed are by no means new to human experience. It is not, then, obligatory on Christians to explain why and how miracles occur; but it is the duty of those who deny them to show us why they are impossible. Christians, let us pay no attention to that sophistry which tries to bring the Almighty God to the level of the human intellect, and deprives our religion of one of its most essential elements. The Trinity, Hell, and Miracles are three essential elements of our religion; these are the corner-stones on which it is founded, without any one of which it would not be perfect. The Trinity is the element of mystery; Hell that of fear; and Miracles that of evidence. Christianity without miracles is like a man without a head, as was once said by a learned doctor; the one is just as inconceivable as the other. Let us say in conclusion that, while we are firm believers in true miracles, we are far from affirming that every miracle which is reported should be believed. For instance: we cannot endorse such miracles as those lately reported from a certain part of France. Those who believe in Christian miracles ought to revolt from such impositions. These are no more miracles than those of Buddha or Mahomet were. They are nothing but impious deceptions of reckless impostors. While our faith in miracles should be no less than those who saw our Great Master feed five thousand men with five loaves and two fishes, let us not be deceived by wolves in sheep's clothing."

Such would be the language of those who are now wondering at the belief of Belgians in the recent miracles, if to-morrow a Protestant miracle should be reported. Then they would wonder at the incredulity of others, and would go on discussing, "Why is it that the clearest kind of miracles should not be believed by the middle class of one of the most flourishing manufacturing countries in Europe?"

Shall we believe in miracles, or shall we not believe in miracles?

M. S. TOYAMA.

ANN ARBOR, Mich., July 27.

THE HINDU IDEAL OF LOVE.

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 2, 1875.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I send a criticism on Prof. Swing's lecture. It may help to show that Pagan and Christian alike enjoy the heritage of fine emotions and noble ideas which are of and for all humanity.

It shows, too, an ideal of womanhood higher than these "outside barbarians" get credit for.

Yours truly,

G. B. STEBBINS.

PROF. SWING'S LECTURE—THE HINDU "RAMA-YANA."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DETROIT POST:—

I read a few weeks ago a report in the New York Tribune of a lecture by the Rev. Mr. Swing, of Chicago, on "The Novel," its place in literature, etc., as delivered in the Lee Avenue Church in Brooklyn. The same lecture has been given in the West, and is thoughtful, as well as eloquent and brilliant. Its gifted and erudite author, however, falls into one error, only to be accounted for by our limited knowledge of Hindu literature. After saying that woman and the sentiment of love must be part of the novel, an important and central part, indeed, he says the Hindus have no novels because their poor ideal of woman makes such productions impossible.

I have before me an English work published by MacMillan & Co., of London, a translation of part of the Ramayana, by Frederika Richardson. The Ramayana is ancient, famous, and widely read by the Hindus, as a work greatly prized and, indeed, sacred in its character. Critics vary in its probable date, from 500 B. C. to 2000 B. C. It contains twenty-four thousand verses, or slokas—a Sanscrit word for its peculiar metre, supposed to have been invented in a moment of inspiration by the poet Valmiki, and subsequently used for heroic poetry.

Miss Richardson renders into English a French translation, by M. Fauche, but has the assistance of Dr. Haas, an eminent Sanscrit scholar, and aims to keep close to the spirit and idea of the original.

The two words Rama and ayana signify the adventures of Rama, who was a hero of the warrior caste, and was also supposed to be an Avatar, or incarnation of Vishnu. His heroic and virtuous career, his meeting and marriage with the loving and beautiful Sita, her separation from him by the craft and power of Ravana, the King of the Rakshakas, or demons, her trials and temptations all overcome by the sweet dignity and lofty power of her stainless womanhood, and the strength of her love for her husband, the fierce struggles and deep-laid plans for her recovery, and their happy and safe reunion at last, make up the plot of Miss Richardson's work, which she gives the fit title of the Iliad of the East; although the faithful and noble Sita is a far more perfect woman than the beautiful but faithless Helen of the Greek poet.

The marvels of valor, the mountains torn up and tossed in the air, the magical devices and sturdy deeds of hosts of apes, demons, hags, and warriors, quite equal the exploits of Homer's gods and men on the plains of Ilium; and the serene and lofty courage of Rama is heroic indeed. Descriptions of beautiful scenery glow with the wealth of Oriental imagery, and the rare beauty of woman is told in richest poetic language.

To show the ideal of womanhood, I give a few extracts which tell of Sita's trials and deliverance.

She had an interview, in a hut in the forest, with Anasuya, the aged wife of Atri, a venerable pilgrim. He says to her: "Thou art welcome, oh Flower of Beauty. My rude hut is all unused to welcome one so lovely; but if thou wilt enter and approach my faithful consort, aged and very feeble, she will open her arms to thee tenderly, as does the waning night to the radiant star of morning." She enters, and as they converse the aged woman says: "Thy words have the fire of youth, and love sings in thy voice as through the notes of the kokila. The past comes back to me as I hear thee. The music of thy voice brings back the dead past to me. Listen, my gentle singing-bird. By virtue of my austere life I have obtained many gifts from the generous Immortals; one I have reserved for thee. Thou shalt walk adorned with celestial radiance, which shall add fresh lustre to thy surpassing beauty. The soft tints of thy raiment shall never fade, and these flowers that I twine in thy glossy hair shall never lose their sweetness." "I shall be more beautiful in his sight," whispered Sita. "Oh Pearl among ancient women, you have filled my heart with gladness." From this ideal of beauty and affection let us pass to the ideal of pure love and its conquering power over passion and pride. Sita is the captive of the evil King Ravana, and sits amidst a group of his hideous servants, waiting his dread coming.

"Like a star in the clutch of the monster Rahu, Sita sat surrounded by these hags. . . . Presently swung through the woods the sound of music and merriment; and drawing nearer the silver laughter of the dancing girls. It was the Lord of the Rakshakas. Like some beautiful wild creature brought to bay, she sprang to her feet, and shaking her long hair around her, stood beside a tall tree. As he advanced alone to her, Sita met his amorous gaze with bright, defiant eyes, and the mighty Ravana grew pale and trembled, while the frail and timorous Sita never faltered—so much more powerful is love than fear." As he pleaded with her in impassioned language to be his bride, and said, "Come to my heart, my beloved, and I will set thy beauty on a throne whither it shall draw to the light scorn of thy small feet the adoring homage of the universe," the clear gaze of Sita seemed to look far into the sunlit distance, and to lose the dark Ravana, as he stood shaken by his strong emotion. She said: "You speak to me of passion and fire. Love has another sense. It is a radiance, not a flame; light rather than heat. If it burn, it is that it may shine the more; passion is only love's minister. Think you to waken unholy fire in the breast where reigns a star; to tempt one who has known the glory of love that Brahm has made the heaven of life, where luminous souls flash out like suns, letting day in upon the gloom?"

The baffled Ravana leaves her, and his hags fill the air with fearful threats; until one of them, awed by Sita's serene aspect, says: "Beware. I dreamed last night that Rama slew all who tormented Sita. Watch her, intently listening to the singing-bird; the Immortals give the lower creatures power to converse with her, a proof that they regard her with favor."

At last she is brought back to Rama, who professes to doubt her, and she ascends a funeral pyre, seeking death by fire rather than her husband's doubt. As the flames creep toward her she prays:—

"Agni, God of Purity and Light! If I am true and bright of soul as Thou, prove my innocence to Rama and all this host." A golden flame, clear as the sun, swam around her. Then from the midst sprang Agni, the resplendent God, bearing the princess from the pyre, and placing her in Rama's arms. "I hold thee," he cried, "my own, my love," and wept for joy. "Didst thou doubt me, Rama?" she asked. "Nay, or I had not trusted thee to the God of Fire! But it was needful there should be no speck on thy soul's whiteness—for thy own sake first, then for the sake of all here,—that they might learn that loveliness of outward form cannot make vice more tolerable; and that where is not utter reverence is no true love! Dost thou forgive me, oh my Queen?"

She answered not in words, but clung more closely to him.

Fifty closes this marvellous story by the coming of a "cloud-chariot gilded by the sun," wherein sits Dasratha, the father of Rama, who comes from the supernal realms to bless his children. Had the gifted lecturer read this work, he would hardly have said that the Hindus had no ideal of woman fit to be the inspiration of a story.

G. B. S.

DETROIT, July 31, 1875.

THE TEAPOT TEMPEST IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

In an editorial on "Mr. Gladstone's Letter," the Church Journal, published in New York, in its issue of July 22, says:—

"In England, from one end of the Church to the other, the most bitter controversy has been waged upon eucharistic vestments, but chiefly upon the position of the priest in the celebration of the Holy Communion—whether he should in the act of consecration face the east or the south."

Had this statement appeared in THE INDEX, the Investigator, or any other paper of the same school of thought, it would have been set down as "an infidel lie"—a slander upon the Church of God for which Christ died. But it is made by an eminent Episcopal minister himself in "The Church" Journal, and is therefore absolute authority as to the matter of fact.

Here, then, is the Church of England, with more than twenty thousand clergymen, archbishops, bishops, priests, and deacons, all educated in the universities, and all supported at vast public expense, agitated "from one end to the other," with the "most bitter controversy" on the question whether the priest in the "Holy Communion" should in the act of consecration face the east or the south!!!

Will any one after this dare to smile incredulously and irreverently, when he sees the devout Catholic, with streaming eyes, adoring the holy casket which contains the sacred toe-nails of Saint Bridget? Will any one sigh with pity when he reads of the giant intellects of the Schoolmen being agitated for generations in solving the most puerile questions,—as, for instance, how many angels could dance on the point of a needle without jostling each other? Is it at all strange that Moody and Sankeyism should have run such a course as it did in London? Is not English society generally, from Mr. Gladstone down to the drooling, intoning priest, permeated with the most childish superstition, that wastes the people's money by the million in perpetuating a contemptible, religious doll-babyism, worthy only of the Middle Ages?

The Church Journal editor goes on to say that "it would be next to impossible (not impossible, but only next to it) to get up a serious discussion upon this subject" among the American Episcopalians. I hope so most sincerely, and shall watch the progress of Moody and Sankeyism when it lands at New York, to see whether the editor's judgment is correct.

Any one who reads the New Testament can see that the "Mass," the "Holy Communion," or "Lord's Supper," was an observance meant to be a bond of union among the disciples of Christ until he should come the second time in the clouds of heaven, to set up his kingdom on the earth; and that this second coming would take place in the generation then existing. But Christ has never yet come the second time. Whenever, therefore, in Catholic or Protestant churches, the Mass, Holy Communion, or Lord's Supper, is "celebrated," it proves one of two things: either that Christ was mistaken in predicting his second coming, since he never yet has come; or, that the Evangelists who reported him as saying so were mistaken; in either case, that the New Testament is not infallibly inspired. And yet this unmeaning ceremonial—a ceremonial that proves, wherever it occurs, to every beholder that either Christ or the Evangelists were totally mistaken as to the matter of fact—is kept up by the Church to this day as proof of her divine origin, and the infallibility of the Scriptures! Was there ever a greater delusion? And when we see how thousands are deluded, does it not seem to be a truthful remark that "men like to be humbugged"? A. B. B.

THE PRESSURE IN BROOKLYN.

NEW YORK, July 30, 1875.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Dear Sir,—Many desire to think Mr. Beecher innocent, but after careful examination of the evidence cannot doubt his guilt. Yet, could you be in Brooklyn a little while, and be thrown among those who do assert his innocence, and there express your doubt, you would realize fully the need of courage. I never heard of any one losing place or power because of saying Mr. Tilton was a bad man; but, under certain circumstances, and among some people, should a person say Mr. Beecher was guilty, no words would express the risk taken.

For this reason, if for no other, I am glad THE INDEX views the question as it does. It is hard for those who, from childhood, have been told that Henry Ward Beecher was noble, true, and have felt that, when he was with them, all would go well, to realize that their idol is but of clay. And we must bear with those who cling to his fame so earnestly, and, though having eyes, will not see.

Many such there are, and so earnest, too, that the mere mention of the subject brings tears to the eyes and sadness to the heart. Yet why should we expect any human being to be perfect? None is, neither will be.

Time, the righter of all things, will make the truth more clear. Now we can know at least that reverence for the clergy, as such, is not so strong an element in the general public mind as formerly; and we may realize, too, that the world is quick to see to it that there is fair play, even if a "Reverend" battles with a simple ultra-minded citizen.

You say: "Despite all temporary seeming, Henry Ward Beecher is dead." Indeed he is, and was, from the moment he decided to maintain a "policy of silence."

Step by step we journey through the paths of doubt, of hesitation, till at last we see the promised land; where no church, no creed, neither place nor power, nor the seeming goodness of any man, will hide from our sight the vision of truth. Only true character, noble actions, pure lives, are required of us. Beliefs are as nought, actions everything. "A."

ORTHODOX BIGOTRY IN VERMONT.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

An incident has just occurred in this town which proves that the law of evolution has its exceptions; that there are still enemies of progress and light; and we yet have the old spirit of bigotry and intolerance among us.

For nearly a year past, the Orthodox Congregational Society of the place have had in their pulpit a man of uncompromising bigotry, preaching the theology of the Middle Ages. He has worked with Jesuitical zeal to carry the church and community backward to mediæval times, and has partially succeeded. He excels, in this respect, a long line of predecessors, worthy and able gentlemen, who, for fifty years and more, have ministered in the town with becoming deference to the consciences and rights of other people.

At this time a part of the church and society, the more intelligent and thinking part, believe there is more truth and light than the Rev. Mr. Sherrill is willing they should have. These persons, including the two deacons and the best men of the church, desired to open their meeting-house on a few Sunday afternoons, at an hour not at all interfering with the regular services, to give the public an opportunity to hear a higher order of exposition of religious truth; and, one of the society's committee having assented to the arrangement, it was published that Rev. K. C. Anderson, of Milwaukee, would preach in the house for a few Sundays.

Mr. Anderson is himself a Congregational minister, a graduate of Middlebury College, and a young man of marked and brilliant powers. He preached in this same pulpit for about a year, and was ordained in it about two years ago. He has many friends in the town, with whom he is spending a few weeks of vacation, and they were naturally anxious to hear him preach.

The Rev. Mr. Sherrill considered that it was an encroachment upon his territory and privileged rights; he claimed that Mr. Anderson ought not to be admitted to the pulpit, and called on the committee to shut the doors on him. It was not believed that they would venture to do it, as so many of the pew-owners wanted the house, and it had been customary for the committee to allow the use of it to other denominations.

Mr. Anderson was consulted, and asked to withdraw or decline to preach. He was then told that the committee and their pastor, Mr. Sherrill, disapproved his doctrine. Accordingly, on Saturday evening, the committee placed in the hands of the janitor the following paper, verbatim:—

"MR. —:—Posters have been put up around town, saying that Rev. K. C. Anderson will preach in the Congregational Church to-morrow, at 4 o'clock, and several Sabbaths following at the same hour. The committee of said church do not sanction any such arrangement. We therefore forbid you as sexton opening the house for any such occasion."

"H. G. BARBER,
"N. R. REED,
"M. MAYNARD, } Committee."

We think the document worthy to be preserved, as an illustration of what men will resort to in order to suppress liberal thought.

The result, in this case, was that the rooms of the high-school building were opened, and a large congregation assembled, and listened with delight to a bold and eloquent discourse on the liberalizing tendencies and ideas of the age. A. H. A.

FAIR HAVEN, Vt., Aug. 2, 1875.

CHRISTIANITY VERSUS LIBERALITY.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I rise not to a point of order, but consistency. Your correspondent "Z," no doubt, considers himself a very liberal brother; but, in his letter on "Sunday-schools versus the Gallows," there is painfully apparent a spirit that, were we to find it in the "screaming" Baptist of Tremont Temple, we should without any hesitancy call by its proper name—bigotry. When we read such articles (and we are sorry to find them quite frequently), we cannot help thinking, with Parker Pillsbury, that "avowed liberals are the most intolerant people on earth." "Z," argues from premises, the correctness of which we cannot deny; but his deductions from these premises are in my opinion entirely and absolutely wrong, while the inferences of his article are subtle and unjust. While "Z," has selected half a dozen extreme cases in support of his position, we think it would be no very difficult task to find a corresponding number, on the other side, of men who profess to no settled religious convictions; or, perhaps, boasting in the name of "infidel," who have committed the highest crime known to law, and that while listening each week to the platform teachings of the most enlightened and liberal men. Christianity and the creeds may be no preventive of crime, but they are surely not conducive to it; and this inference, I submit, is as unwise and as unfair as that of the religious press of Boston, in 1857, that criminals were bred under the ministrations of Theodore Parker.

No one will accuse the murderer of our martyr-President with being a "Sunday-school graduate"; but we have yet to find the man who will affirm that his crime was any less atrocious on that account. But there were some, both in the press and the pulpit, who hinted as far as they then dared that, if his victim had kept away from the sinful play-house, his valuable life would have been saved; which is exactly the position assumed by "Z," only at the other extreme. To hint a connection between crime and "infidelity" is the oldest and most disreputable trick of our Christian opponents, which we are not slow to denounce as contemptible, untruthful, and mean; and we are somewhat surprised that a writer in THE INDEX should allow them so good an opportunity to retort, and throw back the arguments with well-timed sneers. This assertion that criminals are bred under the ministry of free thinkers, and the liberal (?) retort that "peculiarly diabolical murderers" are your Sunday-school graduates, are as laughable as they are absurd, inasmuch as there is no particle of truth on either side. We well know that the assertion made from a thousand pulpits and their supporters of the press concerning us are false; and, when we return the insult, we speak what is equally false. No lie from Christian press or pulpit do we hold in such contempt as that evil and crime are the legitimate offspring of "infidelity." Let us be honest. Except in time of religious war or riot, there is little, if any, connection between the murderer's religious proclivities and his crime. It is absurd to suppose that the shrieking of the T. T. D. had anything to do with the vile crime of George Pemberton; and equally contrary to common sense is it to assert that Piper's very clear conception of "the elevating and impressive truths," of which it is asserted he knew so much, had the most remote connection with his dreadful murder of the innocent little Sunday-school scholar.

There is something infinitely more to be deplored than "the shocking absurdities of Christian dogma," and that is to see a self-styled liberalist still clothed in the "filthy rags" of Church intolerance.

My point of consistency, Mr. Editor, is just this: let your correspondent learn the great meaning of "liberal" before he claims the name. I am no doubt as radical as my brother "Z," but I trust too liberal to assert of others that which I so emphatically deny of myself. PENDRAGON.

BOSTON.

METTERNICH is credited with saying: "I have had to struggle against the greatest of soldiers, and to maintain harmony between the emperors, a czar, a sultan, a pope, kings, princes, and republics; to untangle twenty times and tangle also court intrigues; but the thing that gave me most threat to unravel was a little scoundrel of an Italian,—thin, pale, uncombed, sloven, but eloquent as a tempest, stormy as an apostle, cunning as a thief, ready as a comedian, and indefatigable as a lover. They called him Joseph Mazzini."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
 has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAHAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. ABBOT, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interest in Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution", by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath", by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education", by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. ABBOT. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. ABBOT. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5. PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. ABBOT, D. A. WASSON, T. W. HIGGINSON, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. WASSON on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. ABBOT, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. WASSON on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. CHENEY on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. ABBOT on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. HIGGINSON on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. CHANNING on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. POTTER on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. VICKERS, S. R. CALTHROP, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. CHADWICK on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. MILLS on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. ALCOCK, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. GANNETT, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. HIGGINSON, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. THOMSON, F. E. ABBOT, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, ABBOT, and HIGGINSON of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. WASSON.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. CHANNING. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. POTTER. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. PARTON. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. E. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets	1.50
Concord Days	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl	1.50
Little Men	1.50
My Boys, &c.	1.00
Shawl-Straps	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism	2.00
New Poems	2.00
Literature and Dogma	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. 1 vol.	1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine	2.00
Edelweiss	1.00
German Tales	1.00
BACON'S Essays	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution	2.25
Physics and Politics	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls	1.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary	2.25
The World-Priest	2.25
The Tall Student	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France. Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays. The Religious Demands of the Age	3.00
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Paraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, May, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies"	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor"	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.	4.00
Journal of Researches	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each	1.00
Comprising:
Adam Bede
Romola
The Mill on the Floss
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series	2.00
Essays. Second Series	2.00
Miscellanies	2.00
Representative Men	2.00
English Traits	2.00
Conduct of Life	2.00
Poems. With Portrait	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold	1.50
Prose Works	5.00
Society and Solitude	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the Branch of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers	.20
Child's Book of Religion	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.	5.00
Elective Affinities	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments	2.00
Creed of Christendom	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France	1.50
Thoughts about Art	2.00
The Unknown River	6.00
The Intellectual Life	2.00
Chapters on Animals	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second	1.00
Child World. Part First	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures
1. Metaphysical Lectures	3.50
2. Logical Lectures	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.	2.00
Twice-Told Tales
Mosses from an Old Manse
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image
The Marble Faun
The English Note-Books
The American Note-Books
The French and Italian Note-Books
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment	1.50
Atlantic Essays	2.00
Oldport Days	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey	2.00
Suburban Sketches	2.00
Venetian Life	2.00
Italian Journeys	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three"	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses	1.25
Bits of Travel	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature	1.25
On the Origin of Species	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen	1.50
Songs of Seven	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skel-
Studies for Stories	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy. A Story	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect	.50
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.
No. I. Formation of Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion, or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series	1.50
Among my Books	2.00
My Study Windows	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.	8.00
Elements of Geology	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education	3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.	2.50
Representative Government	1.50
Autobiography	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works	1.0
Three Essays on Religion	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series	2.50
The Same. Second Series	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume	2.00
Lectures on the Science of Religion	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle	1.50
Eekoes from Kentucky	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy	4.50
Phases of Faith, or, Passages from the History of my Creed	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy	2.00
Theism, Doctrine, and Practical	1.75
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism	4.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion	.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings	1.50
Historic Americans. Franklin, Washington, Adams, Jefferson, with an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defence	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar	1.50
The Trotty Book	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts	1.50
Heged in	1.50
The Silent Partner	1.50
What to Wear?	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: The Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects	1.75
Nature of Phenomena: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante	2.50
SCHLELLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jeas. Second Edition	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical	1.25
First Principles	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.	5.00
Philosophy of Style	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition	2.00
Sociology	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin	.90
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.	1.25
Vanity Fair
The Newcomes
Adventures of Philip Pendennis
The Virginians
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.	1.2
This edition includes all the matter in the latest editions, with many additional changes making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait	2.00
The Maine Woods	2.00
Cape Cod	2.00
Letters	2.00
A Yankee in Canada	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People	1.25
Light and Electricity	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion	2.00
On Sound	2.00
Radiant Heat	5.00
Forms of Water	1.50
Lectures on Light	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each	3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each	3.75
The Voyage Appeal	.50
Voysey's Defence at York	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden	1.00
Saunterings	1.50
Back-Log Studies	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life	1.50
Essays and Reviews	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth	1.50
Success and its Conditions	1.50
Washington and the Revolution	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story	1.50
Rebels and Rebels	1.50
The Other Girls	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.	4.00
Child Life	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

1 Tremont Place Boston

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.

Address
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES, IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.

Address
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's
TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.
For sale by
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

B O O K ,

Card,

—AND—

Job

PRINTING,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 TREMONT PLACE,
BOSTON.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price.
Address
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform.

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Edward D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by
THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247. Send for Circular.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address
THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEXIN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.

Address
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTONEnglish and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

REASONS FOR USING THEEUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,
BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY
335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods, 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address
THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL, for both sexes, MERIDEN, CONN. EMILY J. LEONARD, Principal.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

FRED GRANT & CO.

A capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

MORSE'S PAINE.PHOTOGRAPHS

For sale at the office of THE INDEX.

Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cts.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS. Address
THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

R E P O R T S ,SERMONS,

ESSAYS,

and PAMPHLETS,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly printed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 Tremont Place,
BOSTON.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address
THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address
THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

FOR SINGING SCHOOLS.

No book can be better fitted to provide agreeable musical entertainment mingled with instruction than the

!! SONG MONARCH!!

By H. R. PALMER, assisted by L. O. EMERSON. Price 75 cts.

It contains the Singing-school Course, usual in Church Music Books, with abundant exercises, etc.; and, in addition, a fine collection of cheerful Easy Glees for practice, thus rendering it quite as interesting as a good easy Glee Book.

Musical Societies will bear in mind our new CHORUS CHOIR ($18. per doz., by Dr. Tourjée; also, Perkins' Anthem Book ($1.50); both fine collections for Choral Associations and for Choirs.

FOR CHOIRS!

The latest collection of Church Music by the successful compiler, H. R. Palmer, is

!! THE LEADER !!

Not quite as large nor as expensive as other recent Church Music Books, it still contains a great variety of Metrical Music, Anthems, etc., etc., in addition to the usual Singing-school Course. L. O. EMERSON contributes a large number of tunes. Price $1.38, or $12 per doz.

Sold by all Music dealers. Sent, post-free, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, AUGUST 26, 1875.

WHOLE No. 296.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———.

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSES.

THE INSURRECTION in Herzegovina originated in ill-feeling between the Christians and the Turkish Mohammedans. What a sorry commentary on "the sympathy of religions"!

THE NEW BUILDING of the Young Men's Christian Association at Philadelphia is to cost $420,000, at least. Great revenues are anticipated from the rents of its stores and offices. How about taxes in this connection? Are they only for sinners?

MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD will speak at Paine Hall next Sunday, Aug. 29, at 10:30 A. M. His subject will be "Modern Spiritualism from a Materialistic Stand-point." At 2:30 P. M., there will be a free discussion on the same subject.

A HIGH-CHURCH English paper puts this under the head of "Sporting Intelligence": "First of July.—Parson-hauling begins. Church Association hounds meet at Lambeth. We believe the noble master will ride his own horse Disestablishment, out of Divorce."

A VERY LARGE circle of friends and admirers was shocked by the severe accident which recently happened to Edwin Booth, the foremost of American actors; but it is cause for congratulation that his injuries were not fatal. He will receive a warm welcome, when he reappears upon the stage for the first time.

"ORIENTATION" is Mr. Gladstone's new synonyme for the "eastward position" of the priest, in celebrating the Eucharist. Dean Howson argues that the authoritative allowance of "Orientation" would "shift the centre of gravity of the Church of England from its present position." What an awful shift that would be! Is not the Dean's announcement enough to upset your own gravity?

SUCH MESSAGES as this, just received, are very encouraging: "I enclose three dollars, for which please send me your paper. Long enough have I borrowed it, but have come to the conclusion that I cannot longer afford to borrow a paper which, while advocating so noble a cause, is still financially poor. Half of the few noble impulses that animate me I believe to be due to the elevating influence of THE INDEX; and I believe it is able to teach people so to live and die that Christians will one day be ashamed to repeat the absurd stories of the horrible deaths of all 'infidels.'"

THERE is a man in Pittston, Pa., by the name of L. Weedstrad, who thinks he is bewitched by a Meadville sorceress, and has labored ineffectually to induce the United States District Attorney at Pittsburgh to prosecute his charmer. Failing in this, and having been ridiculed by a local newspaper to which he had applied for redress, he has now sued the editor for libel, and been figuratively kicked out of court, as he was literally kicked out of the attorney's office. Poor Weedstrand seems stranded in the weeds of superstition, and had better emigrate to the fifteenth century.

IT is a pity that candor requires the retraction of the praise bestowed on Duncan, Sherman & Co. at the time of their failure. We wish they had deserved it, but later revelations show that they did not. The issuing of "accommodation paper" after the firm had learned their own insolvency, but before they had informed the public of it, and the secret conveyance of real estate to Mr. Alexander Duncan while the public were left to suppose it still the property of the firm, were transactions wholly unjustifiable. "Fraud," says the Boston Advertiser, "is a hard word to use in connection with a firm which has borne such a reputation as this one had. But that is the name given to transactions of this kind when they are carried on by men who have no reputations to suffer by them."

AT THE great Mohammedan Azar, or University in Cairo, Egypt, which was founded in the year 970, and still constitutes the great "Propaganda" of Islam, three hundred and fourteen professors devote themselves without salary, receiving only the small gifts of their students, to instruction in the Koran. Ten thousand missionaries at a time are thus preparing to preach Islamism throughout Asia and Africa. There are no endowments, scholarships, stipends, dormitories, or refectories; but "the students, some of whom have come," says Dr. Ellinwood, "from Morocco and Algeria, from Soudan and Darfour, Zanzibar and the Vales of Yemen, Persia and Turkestan, India, and Malaya, simply buy their coarse Arab bread in the larger court fronting the great hall, and for lodgings roll themselves in their blankets, and lie down upon the same matted floor upon which their work is done." What wonder that Mohammedanism is spreading throughout the Orient?

THE CHIEF JUSTICE of Arizona, being an Ultramontane Catholic, delivered recently a lecture against the American school system in the Legislative Hall at Tucson, the capital. A bill was soon after introduced in the Council of the Territory establishing sectarian schools and abolishing the common schools, and was only defeated by a single vote. Eugene Lawrence, in Harper's Weekly, complains of the Chief Justice for giving this lecture, to which he attributes great influence. We consider the complaint unreasonable. Let both sides be heard, and let everybody be welcome to plead either. If ignorance and sectarianism can beat knowledge and liberality in fair debate, the country must make the best of it. No one ought to blame the Chief Justice for arguing against the school system, who would have applauded him for arguing in its favor; and the subject is one which is as free to a Chief Justice as to any other. But those who believe in the common schools should see to it that their cause is not suffered to go by default. We are sorry to know that Arizona has so many dull brains or lazy mouths. Why did not somebody refute the Chief Justice? Mr. Lawrence should distribute his censure among those who neglected their duty by silence, and not bestow it upon him who discharged his own duty according to the little light that was in him.

THE IRREPRESSIBLE Catholic conflict has broken out in Montreal, and turns, as in Europe, on the same question of supremacy as between Church and State. M. Joseph Guibord was a Catholic, and a prominent member of the Canadian Institute, a literary and scientific society. The Bishop of Montreal wanted to dictate what books should be admitted into the Institute's library, which contained Voltaire. The Institute refused to submit to his dictation. The Bishop appealed to Rome, and obtained a decree forbidding any person to belong to the rebellious organization. Suddenly M. Guibord died; and, acting under orders, M. Rousselot, the curate, refused to bury him in his own lot in the Catholic cemetery. Madame Guibord appealed to the courts. The case was at last carried up to Her Majesty's Privy Council; but by this time the widow had died too, and the Institute, as devisees of her property, were substituted as appellants. The Privy Council decided in favor of the latter, chiefly on the ground that to refuse their suit would invest the Bishop with a sort of moral dictatorship fatal to the laws, and advised Her Majesty to issue a writ of mandamus for M. Guibord's burial in the cemetery. But the curate, under orders again, has refused to obey the decree of the Privy Council; and so the matter now stands. In all such cases, which are multiplying on every hand, the issue is between Church and State: which shall be supreme? Our turn is coming. Are we ready?

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBOO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carrie S. Burnham, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

Daniel O'Connell.

AN ORATION BEFORE THE PEOPLE OF BOSTON, IN MUSIC HALL, ON THE CENTENNIAL ANNIVERSARY OF O'CONNELL'S BIRTH.

BY WENDELL PHILLIPS.

A hundred years ago to-day Daniel O'Connell was born. The Irish race, wherever scattered over the globe, assembles to-night to pay fitting tribute to his memory: one of the most eloquent men, one of the most devoted patriots, and the most successful statesman which that race has given to history. We of other races may well join you in that tribute,—since the cause of constitutional government owes more to O'Connell than to any other political leader of the last two centuries. The English-speaking race, to find his equal among its statesmen, must pass by Chatham and Walpole, and go back to Oliver Cromwell, or the able men who held up the throne of Queen Elizabeth. If to put the civil and social elements of your day into successful action, and plant the seeds of continued strength and progress for coming times,—if this is to be a statesman, then most emphatically was O'Connell one. To exert this control and secure this progress, while and because ample means lie ready for use under your hand, does not rob Walpole and Colbert, Chatham and Richelieu, of their title to be considered statesmen. To do it, as Martin Luther did, when one must ingeniously discover or invent his tools, and while the mightiest forces that influence human affairs are arrayed against him,—this is what ranks O'Connell with the few masterly statesmen the English-speaking race has ever had. When Napoleon's soldiers bore the negro chief, Toussaint L'Ouverture, into exile, he said, pointing back to San Domingo, "You think you have rooted up the tree of liberty. But I am only a branch. I have planted the tree itself so deep that ages will never root it up." And whatever may be said of the social or industrial condition of Hayti during the last seventy years, its nationality has never been successfully assailed.

O'Connell is the only Irishman who can say as much of Ireland. From the peace of Utrecht, 1713, till the fall of Napoleon, Great Britain was the leading state in Europe, while Ireland, a comparatively insignificant island, lay at its feet. She weighed next to nothing in the scale of British politics. The continent pitied and England despised her. O'Connell found her a mass of quarrelling races and sects, divided, dispirited, broken-hearted, and servile. He made her a NATION, whose first word broke in pieces their iron obstinacy of Wellington, tossed Peel from the Cabinet, and gave the government to the Whigs; whose colossal figure, like the helmet in Walpole's romance, has filled the political sky ever since; whose generous aid thrown into the scale of the three great British reforms, the ballot, the corn laws, and slavery, secured their success; a nation whose continued discontent has dragged Great Britain down to be a second-rate power on the chess-board of Europe. I know other causes have helped in producing this result. But the nationality which O'Connell created has been the main cause of this change in England's importance. Dean Swift, Molyneux, and Henry Flood thrust Ireland for a moment into the arena of British politics, a sturdy suppliant clamoring for justice; and Grattan held her there an equal, and, as he thought, a nation, for a few years. But the unscrupulous hand of William Pitt brushed away in an hour all Grattan's work. Well might he say of the Irish Parliament which he brought to life, "I sat by its cradle, I followed its hearth"; since after that famous union, which Byron called a "union of the shark with its prey," Ireland sank back, plundered and helpless. O'Connell lifted her to a fixed and permanent place in English affairs—no suppliant, but a conqueror dictating her terms.

HOW TO JUDGE OF O'CONNELL'S WORK.

This is the proper stand-point from which to look at O'Connell's work. This is the consideration that ranks him, not with founders of States, like Alexander, Caesar, Bismarck, Napoleon, and William the Silent, but with men who, without arms, by force of reason, have revolutionized their times,—with Luther, Jefferson, Mazzini, Samuel Adams, Garrison, and Franklin. I know some men will sneer at this claim,—those who have never looked at him except through the spectacles of English critics, who despised him as an Irishman and a Catholic until they came to hate him as a conqueror. As Grattan said of Curran, "The curse of Swift was upon him, to have been born an Irishman and a man of genius, and to have used his gifts for his country's good." Mark what measure of success attended the able men who preceded in circumstances as favorable as his, perhaps even better; then measure him by comparison.

THE MEASURE OF HIS SUCCESS.

An island soaked with the blood of countless rebellions; oppression such as would turn cowards into heroes; a race whose disciplined valor had been proved on almost every battle-field in Europe, and whose reckless daring lifted it, any time, in arms against England, with hope or without. What inspired them? Devotion, eloquence, and patriotism seldom paralleled in history. Who led them? Dean Swift; according to Addison, "the greatest genius of his age"; called by the Pope "the incomparable"; a man fertile in resources, of stubborn courage and tireless energy; master of an English style unequalled, perhaps, for its purpose then or since; a man who had twice faced England in her angriest mood, and by that masterly pen subdued her to his will: Henry Flood, eloquent even for an Irishman, and sagacious as he was eloquent; the eclipse of that brilliant life one of the saddest pictures in Irish biography: Grattan, with all the courage, and more than the eloquence, of his race; a statesman's eye quick to seize every advantage; boundless devotion; unspotted integrity; recognized as an equal by the world's leaders, and welcomed by Fox to the House of Commons as the "Demosthenes of Ireland": Emmett in the field, Sheridan in the Senate, Curran at the bar,—and, above all, Edmund Burke, whose name makes eulogy superfluous, more than Cicero in the Senate, almost Plato in the Academy. All these gave their lives to Ireland,—and when the present century opened where was she? Sold like a slave in the market-place by her perjured master, William Pitt. It was then that O'Connell flung himself into the struggle, gave fifty years to the service of his country; and where is she to-day?

Not only redeemed, but her independence put beyond doubt or peril. Grattan and his predecessors could get no guarantees for what rights they gained. In that sagacious, watchful, and almost omnipotent public opinion, which O'Connell created, is an all-sufficient guarantee of Ireland's future. Look at her: almost every shackle has fallen from her limbs; all that human wisdom has as yet devised to remedy the evils of bigotry and misrule has been done. O'Connell found Ireland a "hissing and a by-word" in Edinburgh and London. He made her the pivot of British politics; she rules them, directly or indirectly, with as absolute a sway as the slave question did the United States from 1850 to 1865. Look into Earl Russell's book, and the history of the reform bill of 1832, and see with how much truth it may be claimed that O'Connell and his fellows gave Englishmen the ballot under that act. It is by no means certain that the corn-laws could have been abolished without their aid. In the anti-slavery struggle O'Connell stands in influence and ability equal with the best. I know the credit all those measures do to English leaders. But, in my opinion, the next question will test the statesmanship of Peel, Palmerston, Russell, and Gladstone, almost entirely by their conduct of the Irish question. All the laurels they have hitherto won in that field are wasted in ideas which Grattan and O'Connell urged on reluctant hearers for half a century. Why do Bismarck and Alexander look with such contemptuous indifference on every attempt of England to mingle in European affairs? Because they know they have but to lift a finger, and Ireland stabs her in the back. Where was the statesmanship of English leaders when they allowed such an evil to grow so formidable? This is Ireland to-day. What was she when O'Connell undertook her cause? The saddest of Irish poets has described her:—

"Oh Ireland! my country, the hour of thy pride and splendor hath passed;
 The chain that was spurned in thy moments of power
 Hangs heavy around thee at last;
 There are marks in the fate of each clime, there are turns
 In the fortunes of men,
 But the changes of realms or the chances of time shall Never restore thee again.

"Thou art chained to the wheel of the foe by links which a world cannot sever;
 With thy tyrant through storm and through cloud thou
 Shalt go, and thy sentence is bondage forever.
 Thou art doomed for the thankless to toil, thou art left for
 The proud to disdain;
 The blood of thy sons and the wealth of thy soil shall be Lavished, and lavished in vain.
 Thy riches with taunts shall be taken, thy valor with coldness be paid,
 And of millions who see thee thus sunk and forsaken, not one shall stand forth in thy name.

In the nations thy place is left void, thou art lost in the list of the free.
 Even realms by the plague and the earthquake destroyed
 May revive; but no hope is for thee."

It was a community impoverished by five centuries of oppression—four millions of Catholics robbed of every acre of their native land; it was an island torn by race-hatred and religious bigotry, her priests indifferent, and her nobles hopeless or traitors. The williest of her enemies, a Protestant Irishman, ruled the British Senate; the sternest of her tyrants, a Protestant Irishman, led the armies of Europe; Puritan hate, which had grown blinder and more bitter since the days of Cromwell, gave them weapons. Ireland herself lay bound in the iron links of a code which Montesquieu said could have been "made only by devils, and should be registered only in hell." Her millions were beyond the reach of the great reform engine of modern times, since they could neither read nor write.

In this mass of ignorance, weakness, and quarrel, one keen eye saw the hidden, the elements of union and strength. With rarest skill he called them forth, and marshalled them into rank. Then this one man, without birth, wealth, or office, in a land ruled by birth, wealth, and office, moulded from those unsuspected elements a power which, over-awing king, senate, and people, wrote his single will on the statute-book of the most obstinate nation in Europe! Safely to emancipate the Irish Catholics, and, in spite of Saxon, Protestant hate, to lift all Ireland to the level of British citizenship,—this was the problem which statesmanship and patriotism had been seeking for two centuries to solve. For this, blood had been poured out like water. On this, the genius of Swift, the learning of Molyneux, and the eloquence of Bushe, Grattan, and Burke had been wasted. English leaders ever since Fox had studied this problem anxiously. They saw that the safety of the empire was compromised. At one or two critical moments in the reign of George the Third, one signal from an Irish leader would have snapped the chain that bound Ireland to his throne. His ministers recognized it, and they tried every expedient, exhausted every device, dared every peril, kept oaths, or broke them, in order to succeed. All failed; and not only failed, but acknowledged they could see no way in which success could ever be achieved.

O'Connell achieved it! Out of this darkness he called forth light. Out of this most abject, weak, and pitiable of kingdoms he made a power, and, dying, he left in Parliament a spectre which, unless appeased, pushes Whig and Tory ministers alike from their stools!

O'CONNELL NOT A DEMAGOGUE.

But Brougham says he was a demagogue! Fie on Fox and Pitt, Wellington, Derby, Peel, Palmerston, Liverpool, Russell, and Brougham, to be fooled and ruled by a demagogue! What must they, the subjects be, if O'Connell, their king, be only a bigot and a demagogue? A demagogue rides the storm. He has never really the ability to create one. He uses it narrowly, ignorantly, and for selfish ends. If not crushed by the force which, without his will, has flung him into power, he leads it with ridiculous miscalculation against some insurmountable obstacle which scatters it forever. Dying, he leaves no mark on the elements with which he has been mixed. Robespierre will serve for an illustration. It took O'Connell thirty years of patient and sagacious labor to mould elements whose existence no man, however wise, had ever discerned before. He used them unselfishly, only to break the yoke of his race. Nearly fifty years have passed since his triumph; but his impress still stands forth clear and sharp on the empire's policy. Ireland is wholly indebted to him for her political education. Responsibility educates. He lifted her to broader responsibilities. Her possession of power makes it the keen interest of other classes to see she is well informed. He associated her with all the reform movements of Great Britain. This is the education of affairs, broader, deeper, and more real than what school or college can give. This and power—his gifts—are the lever which lifts her to every other right and privilege. How much England owes him we can never know, since how great a danger and curse Ireland would have been to the empire, had she continued the chapter Pitt and Castlereagh left her,—a chapter of history which, fortunately, can never be written. No demagogue ever walked through the streets of Dublin, as O'Connell and Grattan did more than once, hooted and mobbed because they opposed themselves to the mad purpose of the people, and crushed it by a stern resistance. No demagogue would have offered himself to a race like the Irish as the apostle of peace; pledging himself to the British government that in the long agitation before him, with brave millions behind him, spilling for a fight, he would never draw a sword.

I have purposely dwelt long on this view, because the extent and the far-reaching effects of O'Connell's work, without regard to the motives which inspired him or the methods he used, have never been fully recognized.

Briefly stated, he did, what the ablest and bravest of his forerunners had tried to do, and failed. He created a public opinion and a unity of purpose (no matter what be now the dispute about methods) which make Ireland a nation; he gave her British citizenship and a place in the Imperial Parliament; he gave her a press and a public; with these tools her destiny is in her own hands. When the abolitionists got for the negro schools and the vote, they settled the slave question, for they planted the sure seeds of civil equality. O'Connell did this for Ireland—this, which no Irishman before had even dreamed of attempting. Swift and Molyneux were able; Grattan, Bushe, Saurin, Burrows, Plunket,

Jurran, Burke, were eloquent; throughout the island courage was a drug; they gained now one point and now another; but, after all, they left the helm of Ireland's destiny in foreign and hostile hands. O'Connell was brave, sagacious, eloquent, but more than all he was a statesman; for he gave to Ireland's own keeping the key of her future. As Lord Bacon marches down the centuries, he may lay one hand on the telegraph, and the other on the steam-engine, and say, "These are mine, for I taught you how to study Nature." In a similar sense, as shackle after shackle falls from Irish limbs, O'Connell may say, "This victory is mine, for I taught you the method, and I gave you the arms."

SUCCESS ACHIEVED BY BLOODLESS MEASURES.

I have hitherto been speaking of his ability and success; by-and-by we will look at his character, motives, and methods. This unique ability even his enemies have been forced to confess. Harriet Martineau, in her incomparable history of the Thirty Years' Peace, has, with Tory hate, misconstrued every action of O'Connell, and invented a bad motive for each one. But even she confesses that "he rose in power, influence, and notoriety to an eminence such as no other individual citizen has attained in modern times" in Great Britain; and one of his biographers has well said: "Any man who turns over the magazines and newspapers of that period will easily perceive how grandly O'Connell's figure dominated in politics, how completely he had dispelled the indifference that had so long prevailed on Irish questions, how clearly his agitation stands forth as the great fact of the time. . . . The truth is, his position, so far from being a common one, is absolutely unique in history. We may search in vain through the records of the past for any man who, without the effusion of a drop of blood, or the advantages of office or rank, succeeded in governing a people so absolutely and so long, and in creating so entirely the elements of his power. . . . There was no rival to his supremacy, there was no restriction to his authority. He played with the fierce enthusiasm he had aroused with the negligent ease of a master; he governed the complicated organization he had created with a sagacity that never failed. He made himself the focus of the attention of other lands, and the centre around which the rising intellect of his own revolved. He had transformed the whole social system of Ireland; almost reversed the relative positions of Protestants and Catholics; remodelled by his influence the representative ecclesiastical and educational institutions, and created a public opinion that surpassed the wildest dreams of his predecessors. Can we wonder at the proud exultation with which he exclaimed, 'Grattan sat by the cradle of his country, and followed her hearse; it was left for me to sound the resurrection trumpet and to show she was not dead but sleeping?'"

But the method by which he achieved this success is perhaps more remarkable than even the success itself. An Irish poet, one of his bitterest assailants thirty years ago, has laid a chaplet of atonement on his altar, and one verse runs:—

"Oh great World-Leader of a mighty age!
Praise unto thee let all the people give;
By thy great name of LIBERATOR live
In golden letters upon history's page.
And this thy epitaph while Time shall be:
He found his country chained, but left her free."

O'CONNELL AS AN AGITATOR, AND THE POWER OF AGITATION.

It is natural that Ireland should remember him as her LIBERATOR. But, strange as it may seem to you, I think Europe and America will remember him by a higher title. I said in opening that the cause of constitutional government is more indebted to O'Connell than to any other political leader of the last two centuries. What I mean is, that he invented the great method of constitutional agitation. AGITATOR is a title which will last longer, which suggests a broader and more permanent influence, and entitles him to gratitude of far more millions than the name Ireland loves to give him. The first great agitator is his proudest title to gratitude and fame. Agitation is the method that plants the school by the side of the ballot box. The FREMONT canvass was the nation's best school. Agitation prevents rebellion, keeps the peace, and secures progress. Every step she gains is gained forever. Muskets are the weapons of animals. Agitation is the atmosphere of brains. The old Hindu saw, in his dream, the human race led out to its various fortunes. First, men were in chains which went back to an iron hand. Then he saw them led by threads from the brain which went upward to an unseen hand. The first was despotism, iron, and ruling by force. The last was civilization, ruling by ideas.

Agitation is an old word with a new meaning. Sir Robert Peel, the first English leader who felt he was its tool, defined it to be "the marshalling of the conscience of a nation to mould its laws." O'Connell was the first to show and use its power, to lay down its principles, to analyze its elements, and mark out its metes and bounds. It is voluntary, public, and above board; no oath-bound secret societies like those of old time in Ireland and of the continent to-day. Its means are reason and argument, no appeal to arms. Wait patiently for the slow growth of public opinion. The Frenchman is angry with his government; he throws up barricades, and shots his gun to the lips. A week's fury drags the nation ahead a hand's breadth; reaction lets it settle half-way back again. As Lord Chesterfield said a hundred years ago: "You Frenchmen erect barricades, but never any barriers." An Englishman is dissatisfied with public affairs. He brings his charges, offers his proof, waits for prejudice to relax, for public opinion to inform itself. Then every step taken is taken forever; an abuse once removed never reappears in history. Where did he learn this method? Practically speaking, from O'Connell. It was he who planted its corner-stone. Argument, no violence. No political change is worth a drop of human blood. His other motto was, "Tell the whole truth." No concealment of half of one's convictions to make the other half more acceptable. No denial of one truth to gain hearing for another. No compromise, or, as he phrased it, "nothing is politically right which is morally wrong."

Above all, plant yourself on the millions; the sympathy of every human being, no matter how ignorant, or how humble, adds weight to public opinion. At the outset of his career the clergy turned a deaf ear to his appeal. They had seen their flocks led up to useless slaughter for centuries, and counselled submission. The nobility repudiated him; they were either traitors or hopeless. Protestants had touched their ultima Thule with Grattan, and seemed settling down in despair. English Catholics advised waiting till the tyrant grew merciful. O'Connell, left alone, said, "I will forge these four millions of Irish hearts into a thunderbolt which will suffice to dash this despotism to pieces." And he did it. Living under an aristocratic government, himself of the higher class, he anticipated Lincoln's wisdom, and framed his movement, "for the people, of the people, and by the people."

It is a singular fact, that the freer a nation becomes, the more utterly democratic the form of its institutions. The necessity of this outside agitation, this pressure of public opinion to direct political action, becomes more and more necessary. The general judgment is that the freest possible government produces the freest possible men and women, the most individual, the least servile to the judgment of the other. But a moment's reflection will show any man that this is an unreasonable expectation; and that, on the contrary, entire equality and freedom in political forms almost inevitably tend to make the individual subside into the mass, and lose his identity in the general whole. Suppose we stood in England to-night. There is the nobility and here is the Church. There is the trading class and here is the literary. A broad gulf separates the four, and provided a member of either can conciliate his own section, he can afford in a very large measure to despise the judgment of the other three. He has, to some extent, a refuge and a breakwater against the tyranny of what we call public opinion. But in a country like ours, of absolute democratic equality, public opinion is not only omnipotent, it is omnipresent. There is no refuge from its tyranny. There is no hiding from its reach. And the result is, that if you take the old Greek lantern, and go about to seek among a hundred, you will find not one single American who really has not, or who does not fancy at least that he has, something to gain or to lose in his ambition, his social life, or his business, from the good opinion and the votes of those about him. And the consequence is that, instead of being a mass of individuals, each one fearlessly blurring out his own convictions, as a nation, compared with other nations, we are a mass of cowards. More than all other people, we are afraid of each other. If you were a caucus to-night, Democratic or Republican, and I were your orator, none of you could get beyond the necessary and timid limitations of party. You not only would not demand, you would not allow, me to utter one word of what you really thought, and what I thought. You would demand of me—and my value as a caucus speaker would depend entirely on the adroitness and the vigilance with which I met the demand—that I should not utter one single word which would compromise the vote of next week. That is politics. So with the press. Seemingly independent, and sometimes really so, the press can afford only to mount the cresting wave, not go beyond it. The editor might as well shoot his leader with a bullet as with a new idea. [Laughter and cheers.] He must hit the exact line of the opinion of the day. I am not finding any fault with him. I am only describing him. Some three years ago, I took to one of the freest of the Boston journals a letter, and by appropriate consideration induced its editor to print it. And, as we glanced along its contents, and came to the concluding statement, he said, "Couldn't you omit that?" I said, "No, I wrote it for that; it is the gist of the statement." "Well," said he, "it is true; there is not a boy in the streets that does not know it is true; but I wish you could omit it." I insisted, and the next morning, fairly and justly, he printed the whole; side by side he put an article of his own, in which he said: "We copy in the next column an article from Mr. Phillips, and we only regret the absurd and unfounded statement with which he concludes it." He had kept his promise by printing the article; he saved his reputation by printing the comment. And that again is the inevitable, the essential, limitations of the press in a republican community. Our institutions, floating unanchored on the shifting surface of popular opinion, cannot afford to hold back or to draw forward a hated question, and compel a reluctant public to look at it and to consider it. Hence, as you see at once, the moment a large issue, twenty years ahead of its age, presents itself to the consideration of an empire or of a republic, just in proportion to the freedom of its institutions is the necessity of a platform outside of the press, of politics, and of its Church, whereon to stand men with no candidate to elect, with no plot to carry, with no reputation to stake, with no object but the truth, no purpose but to tear the question open, and let the light through it. So much in explanation of a word infinitely hated—agitation and agitators,—but an element which the progress of modern government has developed more and more every day.

This great invention we trace, in its twilight and seed, to the days of the Long Parliament. Defoe and LeStrange, later down, were the first prominent Englishmen to fling pamphlets at the House of Commons. Swift ruled England by pamphlets. Wilberforce summoned the Church, and sought the alliance of influential classes. But O'Connell first showed a profound faith in the human tongue; he desisted afar off the coming omnipotence of the press. He pulled the millions to his side, appreciated the infinite weight of the simple human heart and conscience, and grafted democracy into the British empire. The later abolitionists, Buxton, Sturge, and Thompson, borrowed his method. Cobden flung it in the face of the almost omnipotent landholders of England, and broke the Tory party forever. They only haunt upper air now in the stolen garments of the Whigs. The English administration recognizes this new partner in the government, and waits to be moved on. Garrison brought the new weapon to our shores. The only wholly useful and thoroughly defensible war Christendom has seen in this century, the greatest civil and social change the English race ever saw, are the result.

This great servant and weapon, peace and constitutional government owe to O'Connell. Who has given progress a greater boon? What single agent has done as much to bless and improve the world for the last fifty years?

THE PLAINNESS OF HIS SPEECH.

O'Connell has been charged with coarse, violent, and intemperate language. The criticism is of little importance. Stupor and palsy never understand life. White-livered indifference is always disgusted and annoyed by earnest conviction. Protestants criticised Luther in the same way. It took three centuries to carry us far off enough to appreciate his colossal proportions. It was a hundred years to-day since O'Connell was born. It will take another hundred to put us at such an angle as will enable us correctly to measure his stature. Premising that it would be folly to find fault with a man struggling for life because his attitudes were ungraceful; remembering the Scythian king's answer to Alexander criticising his strange weapon, "If you knew how precious freedom was, you would defend it even with axes,"—we must see that O'Connell's own explanation is evidently sincere and true. He found the Irish heart so cowed, and Englishmen so arrogant, that he saw it needed an independence verging on insolence, a defiance that touched extremest limits, to breathe self-respect into his own race, teach the aggressor manners, and sober him into respectful attention. It was the same with us abolitionists. Webster had taught the North the bated breath and crouching of a slave. It needed, with us, an attitude of independence that was almost insolent; it needed that we should exhaust even the Saxon vocabulary of scorn, to flit utter the righteous and haughty contempt that honest men had for man-stealers. Only in that way could we wake the North to self-respect, or teach the South that, at length, she had met her equal, if not her master. On a broad canvas, meant for the public square, the tiny lines of a Dutch interior would be invisible. In no other circumstance was the French maxim, "You can never make a revolution with rose-water," more profoundly true. The world has hardly yet learned how deep a philosophy lies hid in Hamlet's

"Nay, an thou'lt mouth,
I'll rant as well as thou."

O'Connell has been charged with insincerity in urging repeal; and those who defended his sincerity have leaned toward allowing that it proved his lack of common sense. I think both critics mistaken. His earnest speeches point to repeal as his ultimate object,—indeed, he valued emancipation largely as a means to that end. No fair view of his whole life will leave the slightest ground to doubt his sincerity. As for the reasonableness and necessity of the measure, I think every year proves them. Considering O'Connell's position, I wholly sympathize in his profound and unshaken loyalty to the empire. Its share in the British empire makes Ireland's strength and importance. Standing alone among the vast and massive sovereignties of Europe, she would be weak, insignificant, and helpless. Were I an Irishman, I should cling to the empire.

Fifty or sixty years hence, when scorn of race has banished, and bigotry is lessened, it may be possible for Ireland to be safe and free while holding the relation to England that Scotland does. But during this generation and the next, O'Connell was wise in exclaiming that Ireland's rights would never be safe without "home rule." A substantial repeal of the Union should be every Irishman's earnest aim. Were I their adviser, I should constantly repeat what Grattan said, in 1810: "The best advice, gentlemen, I can give on all occasions is, 'Keep knocking at the Union.'"

HIS PATIENCE THE MOST REMARKABLE OF HIS GIFTS.

We imagine an Irishman to be only a zealot on fire. We fancy Irish spirit and eloquence to be only blind, reckless, headlong enthusiasm. But in truth Grattan was the soberest leader of his day; holding scrupulously back the disorderly elements which fretted under his curb. There was one hour at least when a word from him would have lighted a democratic revolt throughout the empire. And the most remarkable of O'Connell's gifts was neither his eloquence nor his sagacity; it was his patience—"patience, all the passion of great souls,"—the tireless patience, which, from 1800 to 1820, went from town to town, little aided by the press, to plant the seeds of an intelligent and united, as well as hot, patriotism. Then after many years and long toil, waiting for rivals to be just, for prejudice to wear out, and for narrowness to grow wise, using British folly and oppression as his wand, he moulded the enthusiasm of the most excitable of races—the just and inevitable indignation of four millions of Catholics, the hate of plundered poverty, priest, noble, and peasant,—into one fierce, though harmonious, mass. Then he held it in careful check, with sober moderation, watching every opportunity, attracting ally after ally, never forfeiting any possible friendship; allowing no provocation to stir him to anything that would not help his cause; compelling each hottest and most ignorant of his followers to remember that “he who commits a crime helps the enemy.” At last, when the hour struck, this power was made to achieve justice for itself and put him in London; him, this despised Irishman, this hated Catholic, this mere demagogue and man of words; him to hold the Tory party in one hand and the Whig party in the other; all this without shedding a drop of blood, or disturbing for a moment the peace of the empire. While O’Connell held Ireland in his hand, her people were more orderly, law-abiding, and peaceful than for a century before, or during any year since. The strength of this marvellous control passes comprehension. Out West I met an Irishman whose father held him up to see O’Connell address the two hundred thousand men at Tara; literally to see, not to hear him. I said, “But you could not all hear even his voice.” “Oh no, sir! only about fifty thousand could hear him. But we all kept as still and silent as if we did!” With magnanimous frankness, O’Connell once said, “I never could have held those monster meetings without a crime, without disorder, tumult, or quarrel, except for Father Mathew’s aid.” Any man can build a furnace, and turn water into steam,—yes, if careless, make it rend his dwelling in pieces. Genius builds the locomotive, harnesses this terrible power in iron traces, holds it with master-hand in useful limits, and gives it to the peaceable service of man. The Irish people were O’Connell’s locomotive; sagacious patience and moderation the genius that built it; Parliament and justice the station he reached.

HIS RECORD BROAD AND BRAVE.

Every one who has studied O’Connell’s life sees his marked likeness to Luther; the unity of both their lives, their wit, the same massive strength, even if coarse-grained; the ease with which each reached the masses, the power with which they wielded them; the same unrivalled eloquence, fit for any audience; the same instinct of genius that led them constantly to acts which, as Voltaire said, “foolish men call rash, but wisdom sees to be brave”; the same broad success. But O’Connell had one great element which Luther lacked,—the universality of his sympathy; the far-reaching sagacity which discerned truth afar off, just struggling above the horizon; the loyal, brave, and frank spirit which acknowledged and served it; the profound and rare faith which believed that “the whole of truth can never do harm to the whole of virtue.”

From the serene height of intellect and judgment to which God’s gifts had lifted him, he saw clearly that no one right was ever in the way of another; that injustice harms the wrong-doer even more than the victim; that whoever puts a chain on another fastens it also on himself. Serenely confident that the truth is always safe, and justice always expedient, he saw that intolerance is only want of faith. He who stifles free discussion secretly doubts whether what he professes to believe is really true. Coleridge says, “See how triumphant in debate and action O’Connell is! Why? Because he asserts a broad principle, acts up to it, rests his body on it, and has faith in it.”

Co-worker with Father Mathew, champion of the dissenters, friend of the Chartist, foe of the corn-laws, battling against slavery, whether in India or the Carolinas; the great Democrat who in Europe, seventy years ago, called the people to his side; starting a movement of the people, for the people, by the people,—show me another record as broad and brave as this in the European history of our century! Where is the English statesman, where the Irish leader, who can claim one? No wonder every Englishman hated and feared him. He wounded their prejudices at every point. Whig and Tory turned liberal, narrow dissenter, bitter radical, all feared and hated this broad, brave soul, who dared to follow Truth wherever he saw her; whose toleration was broad as human nature, and his sympathy boundless as the sea.

THE FRIEND OF THE COLORED SLAVE.

To show you that he never took a leaf from our American gospel of compromise; that he never filed his tongue to silence on one truth, fancying so to help another; that he never sacrificed any race to save even Ireland,—let me compare him with Kossuth, whose only merits were his eloquence and his patriotism. When Kossuth was in Faneuil Hall he exclaimed, “Here is a flag without a stain, a nation without a crime!” We abolitionists appealed to him: “Oh, eloquent son of the Magyar, come to break chains, have you no word, no pulse-beat, for four millions of negroes bending under a yoke ten times heavier than that of Hungary?” He answered, “I would forget anybody, I would praise anything, to help Hungary!”

O’Connell never said anything like that. When I was in Naples, I asked Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, a Tory, “Is O’Connell an honest man?” “As honest a man as ever breathed,” said he; and then told me this story: “When, in 1830, O’Connell entered Parliament, the antislavery cause was so weak that it had only Lushington and myself to speak for it; and we agreed that when he spoke I should cheer him, and when I spoke he should cheer me; and these were the only cheers we ever got. O’Connell came with one Irish member to support him. A large number of members [I think Buxton said twenty-seven], whom we called the West-India interest, the Bristol party, the slave party, went to him, saying, ‘O’Connell, at last you are in the House, with one helper. If you will never go down to Freemason’s Hall with Buxton and Brougham, here are twenty-seven votes for you on every Irish question. If you work with those abolitionists, count us always against you.’”

It was a terrible temptation. How many a so-called statesman would have yielded! O’Connell said, “Gentlemen, God knows I speak for the saddest people the sun sees. But may my right hand forget its cunning, and my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth, if to save Ireland, even Ireland, I forget the negro for one single hour.” “From that day,” said Buxton, “Lushington and I never went into the lobby that O’Connell did not follow us.”

And right in this connection let me read the following dispatch:—

CINCINNATI, O., August 5.

WENDELL PHILLIPS, Boston:—

The national conference of colored newspaper men to the O’Connell celebration, greeting:—

Resolved, That it is befitting a convention of colored men assembled on the centennial anniversary of the birth of the liberator of Ireland and friend of humanity, Daniel O’Connell, to recall with gratitude his eloquent and effective pleas for the freedom of our race; and we earnestly commend his example to our countrymen.

J. C. JACKSON, Secretary.
PETER E. CURRER, President.
GEORGE T. RUBY.
LEWIS D. EASTON.

HIS RELIGIOUS TOLERATION.

Learn of him, friends, the hardest lesson we ever have set us, that of toleration. The foremost Catholic of his age, the most stalwart champion of the Church, he was also broadly and sincerely tolerant of every faith. His toleration had no limit and no qualification.

I scorn and scout the word “toleration.” It is an insolent term. No man, properly speaking, tolerates another. I do not tolerate a Catholic, neither does he tolerate me. We are equal, and acknowledge each other’s rights; that is the correct statement.

That every man should be allowed freely to worship God according to his conscience; that no man’s civil rights should be affected by his religious creed, were both cardinal principles of O’Connell. He had no fear that any doctrine of his faith could be endangered by the freest possible discussion. Learn of him, also, sympathy with every race, and every form of oppression. No matter who was the sufferer, or what the form of the injustice,—starving Yorkshire peasant, imprisoned Chartist, persecuted Protestant, or negro slave; no matter of what right, personal or civil, the victim had been robbed; no matter what complexion incompatible with freedom an African or an Indian sun had burned upon him; no matter what religious pretext or political juggle alleged “necessity” as an excuse for his oppression; no matter with what solemnities he had been devoted on the altar of slavery,—the moment O’Connell saw him, the altar and the God sank together in the dust; the victim was acknowledged a man and a brother, equal in all rights, and entitled to all the aid the great Irishman could give him.

O’CONNELL AS AN ORATOR.

I have no time to speak of his marvellous success at the bar; of that profound skill in the law which enabled him to conduct such an agitation, always on the verge of illegality and violence, without once subjecting himself or his followers to legal penalty; an agitation under a code of which Brougham said “no Catholic could lift his hand under it without breaking the law.” I have no time to speak of his still more remarkable success in the House of Commons. Of Flood’s failure there, Grattan had said: “He was an oak of the forest, too old and too great to be transplanted at fifty.” Grattan’s own success there was but moderate. The power O’Connell wielded, against varied, bitter, and unscrupulous opposition, was marvellous. I have no time to speak of his personal independence, his deliberate courage, moral and physical, his unspotted private character, his unfailing hope, the versatility of his talent, his power of tireless work, his ingenuity and boundless resource, his matchless self-possession in every emergency, his ready and inexhaustible wit. But any reference to O’Connell that omitted his eloquence would be painting Wellington in the House of Lords without mention of Torres Vedras, or Waterloo.

Broadly considered, his eloquence has never been equalled in modern times, certainly not in English speech. Do you think I am partial? I will vouch John Randolph of Roanoke, the Virginia slaveholder, who hated an Irishman almost as much as he hated a Yankee; himself an orator of no mean level. Hearing O’Connell, he exclaimed, “This is the man, these are the lips, the most eloquent that speak English in my day.” I think he was right. I remember the solemnity of Webster, the grace of Everett, the rhetoric of Choate; I know the eloquence that lay hid in the iron logic of Calhoun; I have melted beneath the magnetism of Henry Clay. Prentiss of Mississippi wielded a power few men ever had. It has been my fortune to sit at the feet of the great speakers of the English tongue on the other side of the ocean. But I think all of them together never surpassed, and no one of them ever equalled, O’Connell. Nature intended him for our Demosthenes. Never since the great Greek has he sent forth any one so lavishly gifted for his work as a tribune of the people. In the first place, he had a magnificent presence, impressive in bearing, massive like that of Jupiter; Webster himself hardly outdid him in the majesty of his proportions. To be sure, he had not Webster’s craggy face and precipice of brow; nor his eyes glowing like anthracite coal. Nor had he the lion roar of Mirabeau. But his presence filled the eye. A small O’Connell would hardly have been an O’Connell at all. These physical advantages are half the battle. I remember Russell Lowell telling us that Mr. Webster came home from Washington at the time the Whig party thought of dissolution, a year or two before his death, and went down to Faneuil Hall to protest; drawing himself up to his loftiest proportion, his brow clothed with thunder, before the listening thousands, he said, “Well, gentlemen, I am a Whig, a Massachusetts Whig, a Faneuil Hall Whig, a revolutionary Whig, a constitutional Whig. If you break the Whig party, sir, where am I to go?” And says Lowell, “We held our breath, thinking where he could go.” If he had been five feet three, we should have said, “Who cares where you go?” So it was with O’Connell. There was something majestic in his presence before he spoke, and he added to it what Webster had not—what Clay might have lent,—grace. Lithe as a boy at seventy, every attitude a picture, every gesture grace, he was still all Nature; nothing but Nature seemed to speak all over him. Then he had a voice that covered the gamut. The majesty of his indignation fitly uttered in tones of superhuman power made him able to “indict” a nation, spite of Burke’s protest.

I heard him once say, “I send my voice across the Atlantic, careering like the thunder-storm against the breeze, to tell the slave-holder of the Carolinas that God’s thunderbolts are hot, and to remind the bondman that the dawn of his redemption is already breaking.” You seemed to hear the tones come echoing back to London from the Rocky Mountains. Then with the slightest possible Irish brogue he would tell a story, while all Exeter Hall shook with laughter. The next moment, tears in his voice like a Scotch song, five thousand men wept. And all the while no effort. He seemed only breathing:—

“As effortless as woodland nooks
Send violets up, and paint them blue.”

We used to say of Webster, This is a great effort; of Everett, It is a beautiful effort; but you never used the word “effort” in speaking of O’Connell. It provoked you that he would not make an effort. And this wonderful power, it was not a thunder-storm; he flanked you with his wit, he surprised you out of yourself; you were conquered before you knew it. His marvellous voice, its almost incredible power and sweetness, Bulwer has well described:—

“Once to my sight that giant form was given,
Walled by wide air, and roofed by boundless heaven;
Beneath his feet the human ocean lay,
And wave on wave rolled into space away.
Methought no clarion could have sent its sound
Even to the centre of the hosts around;
And, as I thought, rose the sonorous swell,
As from some church-tower swings the silvery bell.
Aloft and clear, from airy tide to tide
It glided, easy as a bird may glide.
Even to the verge of that vast audience sent,
It played with each wild passion as it went;
Now stirred the uproar, now the murmur stilled,
And sob or laughter answered as it willed.”

Webster could awe a senate, Everett could charm a college, and Choate cheat a jury; Clay could magnetize the million, and Corwin lead them captive. O’Connell was Clay, Corwin, Choate, Everett, and Webster in one. Before the courts, logic; at the bar of the senate, unanswerable and dignified; on the platform, grace, wit, and pathos; before the masses, a whole man. Carlyle says: “He is God’s own anointed king whose single word melts all wills into his.” This describes O’Connell. Emerson says: “There is no true eloquence unless there is a man behind the speech.” O’Connell was listened to because every Irishman and every Englishman knew there was a man behind the speech; one who could be neither bought, bullied, nor cheated. He held the masses, free but willing subjects, in his hand.

HIS COURAGE.

He owed this power to the courage that met every new question frankly, and concealed none of his convictions; to an entireness of devotion that made the people feel he was all their own; to a masterly brain that made them sure they were always safe in his hands. Behind them were ages of bloodshed; every rising had ended at the scaffold; even Grattan brought them to 1798. O’Connell said: “Follow me; put your feet where mine have trod, and a sheriff shall never lay hand on your shoulder.” And the great lawyer kept his pledge.

This unmatched, long-continued power almost passes belief. You can only appreciate it by comparison. Let me carry you back to the mob-year of 1835, in this country, when the abolitionists were hunted; when the streets roared with riot; when from Boston to Baltimore, from St. Louis to Philadelphia, a mob took possession of every city; when private houses were invaded, and public halls were burned, press after press was thrown into the river, and Lovejoy baptized freedom with his blood; you remember it. Respectable journals warned the mob that they were playing into the hands of the abolitionists. Webster and Clay and the staff of Whig statesmen told the people that the truth floated further on the shouts of the mob than the most eloquent lips could carry it. But law-abiding, Protestant, educated America could not be held back. Neither Whig chiefs nor respectable journals could keep these people quiet. Go to England. When the reform bill of ’31 was thrown out from the House of Lords, the people were tumultuous, and Melbourne and Grey, Russell and Brougham, Landdowne, Holland, and Macaulay, the Whig chiefs, cried out, “Don’t violate the law; you help the Tories! Riot puts back the bill.” But quiet, sober John Bull, law-abiding, could not do without it. Birmingham was three days in the hands of a mob. Castles were burned. Wellington ordered the Scotch Greys to rough-grind their swords as at Waterloo. This was the Whig aristocracy of England. O’Connell had neither office nor title. Behind him were three million people steeped in utter wretchedness, sore with the oppression of centuries, ignored by statute. For thirty restless and turbulent years he stood in front of them, and said: "Remember, he that commits a crime helps the enemy." And during that long and fearful struggle not one Irishman broke the law. There is no such record in our history. Neither in classic nor in modern times can the man be produced who held a million of people in his right hand so passive. It was due to the consistency and unity of a character that had hardly a flaw. I do not forget your soldiers, orators, or poets,—any of your leaders. But when I consider O'Connell's personal disinterestedness—his rare, brave fidelity to every cause his principles covered, no matter how unpopular or how embarrassing to his main purpose,—that clear, far-reaching vision and true heart which, on most moral and political questions, set him so much ahead of his times; his eloquence, almost equally effective in the courts, in the senate, and before the masses; that sagacity, which set at naught the malignant vigilance of the whole imperial bar, watching thirty years for a misstep; when I remember that he invented his tools, and then measure his limited means with his vast success, bearing in mind its nature; when I see the sobriety and moderation with which he used his measureless power, and the lofty, generous purpose of his whole life,—I am ready to affirm that he was, all things considered, the greatest man the Irish race ever produced.

PRIESTS AND PARSONS.

But human nature was not so easily recovered from the pomp and display of a priesthood. The Roman Catholic Church claims that its clergy are the regular successors of Aaron and the Levites. Accordingly they affect all the pomp and splendor of the Jewish priesthood, and stand squarely in the road to heaven, intercepting those who journey thither, and claiming the authority to bind and loose. In this regard they are faithfully imitated by the Greek Church and the High Church Episcopalians, whose ritualism, far from being a mere matter of taste, is a dramatic proclamation of a Christian priesthood.

Now I shall not insult your reason by demolishing these pretensions. But I do most emphatically protest against those milder forms of the same spirit existing in all the Christian sects, and which might probably be properly styled unconscious priestcraft. I mean the priestcraft of garb and manner. I protest, with all my soul, against anything in a man's clothes, or in his walk or speech, which betrays his calling as a preacher. It is well known that clerical costume exists in a direct ratio to priestly pretensions, ranging all the way from the Baptist minister with a military coat up to a Roman Catholic bishop covered from head to foot with satin, and all ablaze with jewels. The venomous persistency with which the Puritans of England fought for the abolition of these vestments was not a whit too venomous. They called them the "rags of popery," and so they are. The papal pretensions could not exist a month if the Catholic Church were deprived of its millinery. Then let us away with it altogether, and not retain any dilution or attenuation of it. For a Christian minister to wear a military coat or a white cravat is simply to solicit extra respect from others, and that is really vulgar. Why not rely on a holy life or benevolent deeds for this? Why rest it altogether on cloth and starch?

Sitting in my law-office on yesterday, my partner, who was looking out of the window, cried out suddenly to me, "Look, look, look; who is that man?" I went to the window, and looked out, and on the opposite side of the street I saw a North-side clergyman who was truly a sight to look upon. He was a very tall man, with saintly side-whiskers, a rapid, dashing gait, white cravat, and otherwise enveloped in the densest black. But what was most noticeable was a black alpaca sack coat, with a tail long enough to sweep the pavement, but which, in the high wind then prevailing, took up most of the sidewalk. I looked at him in perfect horror and disgust, as he strode along in evident pride of the figure he was cutting; and when the spectre vanished from sight I sat down, and groaned within myself, and muttered, "My God, is it possible that such creatures must be accepted as representatives of the religion of Jesus Christ!" And yet he was only a grotesque exaggeration of what we behold every day.—Rev. Florence McCarthy, of Chicago.

A HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES.

Professor Joseph T. Derry, of Augusta, Georgia, through the press of J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia, has just published what is called A History of the United States, for Schools and Academies. The history is written in the form of alternate questions and answers, agreeable to Southern sentiments, and reads like a catechism for a child's first communion with treason. We give specimen bricks:

"What occurred on the seventeenth of October, 1859?"

"The celebrated John Brown raid."

"Give an account of this?"

"John Brown, a notorious Kansas ruffian, urged on by abolition agitators, and furnished by them with money, raised arms and men, and seized the United States arsenal at Harper's Ferry, in Virginia."

"What became of him?"

"His forces were scattered by the United States marines, led by Col. Robert E. Lee, and he himself was captured, tried under the laws of Virginia, and met upon the gallows the fate he richly merited."

"Which are the most prosperous of the Southern States?"

"Virginia, Tennessee, Georgia, Texas, and North Carolina."

"To what do they owe their prosperity?"

"To the fact that the white population in those States is largely in excess of the negro population, and hence their State governments are entirely in the hands of the whites, the only race that ought ever to bear rule in this country."

"What is one of the most important measures of Grant's administration?"

"The adoption of the Fifteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, which, like the Fourteenth Amendment, was carried through by force and usurpation."

"What does the Fifteenth Amendment declare?"

"It declares that the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or by any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

"What more can you say of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments?"

"They have served to keep alive a bitterness of feeling which but for them would have long since died out."

There is much more of this stuff called history. It is a sort of history such as repeats itself, and expresses more opinions than facts. It might be called the "Caucus Hand-Book." The dialogue of the war is amusing. The Confederates were successful throughout to such a degree that their surrender becomes a matter of surprise. The "history" ends with the defeat of Mr. B. G. Brown, candidate for Vice-President, and the death of Horace Greeley. The inference is that since then there has been no history. We certainly have seen none like Schoolmaster Derry's.—N. O. Republican.

HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN.

The cable despatch announcing the death of Hans Christian Andersen gives the final intelligence of a career which, on the whole, was singularly fortunate and happy. We have indeed his own word for this, for in one of his books he has made the remarkable statement that were his life to be lived over again he could not ask that anything in it should be altered; yet his life was no exception to the general rule that the penalty of genius is suffering. Though he could look back on his early years with that pure content inspired by a true religious sense, there is no doubt that his childhood and first years of youth were only prevented from being profoundly unhappy by the soundness of his disposition and the buoyancy of his hopes of the future. His father belonged to a family that had once been rich; but for all that his child was the son of a poor shoemaker discontented, naturally, with his lot, and seeking relief for his feelings in telling his children and friends stories of the former splendor of the family. This was hardly the education to encourage content and submission; but, to make matters worse, the boy, who was a sensitive, delicate, imaginative child, lost his father when he was only nine years old. He learned to read and write, and but little more, at a charity-school; and after his father's death he was sent to work in a factory, where he made his first acquaintance with the coldness and ingratitude of the world,—the workmen, whom he tried to amuse by singing and reciting passages of poetry, giving him abuse and blows in return. Notwithstanding the aptitude which he early showed for dramatic literature, his mother determined to apprentice him to a tailor, while he, on his part, was trying to get some common employment about the theatre at Copenhagen. Misfortune seemed, however, to cling fast to him, and he was rejected on account of his awkwardness and ignorance, and obliged to apply to a joiner for employment. This occupation, for some reason, soon came to an end, and Andersen was thrown upon the world in a strange city at the age of fourteen, without money or friends. There was nothing left to try but his voice, which was a promising one, and he applied to the director of the Royal Conservatory, who found means to have him educated as a singer for the stage. At the end of six months his voice gave out. For two years he struggled on as well as he could, when suddenly the tide turned, and, his talents of one kind and another beginning to attract attention, the director of the theatre obtained permission of the king to have the boy educated at the public expense. At the age of twenty-three his success began with the publication of A Journey on Foot to Amak. His poems and novels—particularly the Improvisatore—soon gave him a world-wide reputation; but it is probably his stories for children which have made him best known and most endeared him to people of our race. He was fortunate in having for his translator Mary Howitt, who, though she may not have caught all the delicate shades of the original—if there can be said to be any original in the case of a writer who is equally enjoyed in any language,—she certainly got the spirit of his humor, of his pathos, and his simple morality. His stories for children might be regarded, if we did not know Andersen to be a born story-teller, as wonderful tours-de-force, so remarkably do they unite the interest of the old-fashioned fairy tale handed down to us from generation to generation from our Aryan forefathers with the more subtle and refined interests that appeal to the conscience and heart. It is this last feature which makes his stories something beyond mere children's stories; so that the child who has read them may in later life read them between the lines, and find a deeper meaning in the checkered career of the little Tin Soldier, and in the wonderful adventures of the Snow Queen than he dreamed existed before. It is impossible to believe that these charming stories could have been written except by one who had in his childhood often "eaten his bread in tears"; and so we too, who have read them, may say with Andersen, though more selfishly, that we should have regretted it if even his early life had been other than what it was.—Nation, Aug. 12.

BOSWELL complained to Johnson that the noise of the company the day before had made his head ache. "No, sir, it was not the noise that made your head ache; it was the sense we put into it." "Has sense that effect upon the head?" "Yes, sir, on heads not used to it."

Poetry.

ALMA-MATER'S ROLL.

A PART OF AN HISTORICAL SPEECH AT THE PHI-BETA KAPPA DINNER AT CAMBRIDGE, JULY 1, 1875.

BY EDWARD EVERETT HALE.

I saw her scan her sacred scroll;
I heard her read her record roll;
Of men who wrought to win the right,
Of men who fought and died in fight,
When now a hundred years by-gone,
The day she welcomed Washington,
She showed to him her boys and men,
And told him of their duty then.

"Here are the beardless boys I sent,
And whispered to them my intent
To free a struggling continent.
The marks upon this scroll will show
Their word a hundred years ago."

"Otis"—no lesser death was given
To him than by a bolt from heaven!
"Quincy"—he died before he heard
The echo of his thunder word.
"And these were strippling lads whom I
Sent out to speak a nation's cry,
In 'glittering generalities'
Of living words that cannot die.
'John Hancock!' 'Here,' John Adams!' 'Here,'
'Paine, Gerry, Hooper, Williams!' 'Here,'
'My Narragansett Elery!' 'Here,'
'Sam Adams, first of freemen!' 'Here,'
My beardless boys, my gray-beard men,
Summoned to take the fatal pen
Which gave eternal rights to men!—
All present, or accounted for!"

I saw her scan again the scroll,
I heard her read again the roll;
I heard her name her soldier son,
Ward, called from home by Lexington.
He smiled, and laid his baton down,
Proud to be next to Washington!
He called her list of boys and men
Who served her for her battles then.
From North to South, from East to West,
He named the bravest and her best.

From distant fort, from bivouac near,
"Brooks, Eustis, Cobb, and Thacher!" "Here,"
—Name after name, with quick reply,
As twitched his lip, and flashed his eye.
But then he choked and bowed his head—
"Warren—at Bunker Hill he died."
The roll was closed—he only said,
"All present, or accounted for!"

That scroll is stained with time and dust;
They were not faithless to their trust.
"If those days come again—if I
Call on the grandsons—what reply?
What deed of courage new display
These fresher parchments of to-day?"

I saw her take the fresher scroll;
I heard her read the whiter roll;
And as the answers came, the while
Our mother nodded, with a smile:
"Charles Adams," "Here," "George Bancroft," "Here,"
"The Hoars," "Both here," "Dick Dana," "Here,"
"Wadsworth!" "He died at duty's call."
"Webster!" "He fell as brave men fall."
"Everett!" "Struck down in Faneuil Hall."
"Sumner!" "A nation bears his pall."
"Shaw!" "Abbot!" "Lowell!" "Savage!" "All Died there—to live on yonder wall!"
"Come East, come West, come far, come near, Lee, Bartlett, Davis, Devens!" "Here."
All present, or accounted for!

Boys, heed the omen! Let the scroll
Fill as it may, as years unroll.
But when again she calls her youth
To serve her in the ranks of Truth,
May she find all one heart, one soul:
At home, or on some distant shore,
"All present, or accounted for!"

—Scribner's Monthly, for September.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING AUG. 21.

A. S. Latty, $3.20; T. F. Thomas, $3; G. M. Wood, $5; Geo. Lewis, 70 cents; W. H. Badger, 20 cents; C. F. Brigham, 20 cents; Carl Von Bergen, 30 cents; Jas. Renwick, 50 cents; H. M. Noyes, $5.25; Robert C. Titcomb, $1.70; A. W. Stevens, $2.88; Israel Betz, 20 cents; M. E. Bird, $10; Geo. E. Allen, 20 cents; Emma B. Thompson, 30 cents; C. W. Fillmore, $3.40; W. B. Kaufman, 60 cents; H. E. Freeman, 10 cents; D. E. Matteson, 40 cents; R. P. Hall-lowell, 75 cents; C. H. Phillips, $3; P. S. Crowell, $3; F. G. Johnson, $3.20; Clarence Vail, $1.70; E. W. Abbott, 75 cents; W. F. Barr, $3.20; J. G. R. Forlong, $4; Geo. Thorn, $1; E. Steenrod, 20 cents; A. Robeson, $10; W. W. Grant, $10; A. B. Chace, $10; Justin Rideout, $50; Jno. W. Fawcett, 20 cents; C. E. Serrill, 20 cents; W. W. Spalding, $13.25; E. W. Pike, $3; L. H. Beal, 25 cents; S. B. Jenks, 50 cents; E. B. Wolcott, $3.50; G. A. & S. Hill, $3; L. E. Brockway, $23.20; E. M. Waddell, $3; L. H. Stockbridge, $3.20; D. G. Crandon, $3; Eben Turk, $1.50; Alex. Metzger, $20; J. S. Worthman, 20 cents; — Brown, 20 cents; J. S. Thompson, 25 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, AUGUST 26, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E.
D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRAN-
CIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
(England), Editorial Contributors.

ON AUGUST 15, the Philadelphia Liberal League elected the following officers for the coming year: Miss C. S. Burnham, President; Isaac Rhen, Vice-President; John S. Dye, Secretary; D. Y. Kilgore, J. B. Beam, Mrs. Dr. Caldwell, Executive Committee.

JOHN CALHOUN cannot be said to have earned the high and dignified encomium which the ancient Romans used to pronounce on an illustrious and patriotic citizen: "He has deserved well of the Republic." But he nevertheless uttered words which deserve the approbation of every virtuous citizen, when he declared in his report on Executive Patronage, in 1835: "The very essence of a free government consists in considering offices as public trusts to be bestowed for the good of the country and not for the benefit of an individual or a party; and that system of political morals which regards offices to be used and enjoyed as their proper spoils strikes a fatal blow at the very vitals of free institutions."

F. R. A. ANNUAL REPORT.

The Report, in pamphlet form, of the Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association for 1875 is now ready.

It contains an Essay by Wm. C. Gannett, on "Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and an Essay by F. E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. B. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

It can be obtained, in Boston, at A. Williams & Co.'s, and by mail by addressing "Office of Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass."

Price of single copy, 35 cents; package of four copies or more, 25 cents each.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

CALL FOR THE SEPTEMBER CONVENTION.

The Liberal Leagues throughout the country are cordially invited to send five delegates each to a Convention to be held in Philadelphia on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of September next, for the purpose of disseminating our principles and of making arrangements for a general Congress of Liberals to convene next year during the Centennial exhibition. It is very desirable that every Liberal League in America should be fully represented at the September Convention. Now is the time to work. The enemies of religious freedom are busy in preparing to utilize human ignorance and superstition for the strengthening and perpetuating of an organized system of mental repression, hostile alike to science, reason, and the right of private judgment in all matters of faith and conscience.

Let us endeavor to overcome ignorance by intelligence,—superstition by reason. Let each League send a full representation of men and women, so that from the combined wisdom of both sexes and all our societies we may be able to inaugurate a new era of impartial justice, perfect freedom, and scientific religion.

As soon as delegates are elected, Leagues are requested to notify the undersigned, and also THE INDEX.

JOHN S. DYE,
Sec'y Phila. Liberal League,
2527 Brown Street, Phila.

PHILADELPHIA, July 22, 1875.

N. B.—All Liberal Societies which sympathize with the objects of the Liberal Leagues and wish to be represented are included in the above Call.

DELEGATES REPORTED.

PHILADELPHIA LIBERAL LEAGUE.—Carrie S. Burnham (President), John S. Dye (Secretary), Isaac Rhen, Damon Y. Kilgore, Jesse B. Beam.
BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.—F. E. Abbot (President), Geo. A. Bacon (Secretary), A. Bronson Alcott, B. F. Underwood, John Wetherbee.

"THE CATHOLIC CONSPIRACY."

Mr. S. P. Putnam contributes to THE INDEX a striking article with the above heading, which will be found on a subsequent page of our present issue. Its facts and arguments are worthy of very serious consideration by the readers of this journal.

Mr. Putnam points out the vast strength of the Roman Catholic Church in this country—its 8,500,000 laity and 4,500 clergy, with its entire power concentrated in the hands of its 64 bishops, archbishops, and cardinal. In America the priests are subject to removal by the bishops without appeal; while the bishops have always an appeal to their peers, even from the Pope. But in Europe, according to the canon law there established but here not recognized, a priest cannot be removed without a judicial trial before a bishop and six of his peers. Father Stack is now contending in the Pennsylvania courts against Bishop O'Hara, to vindicate his independence as a priest under the canon law, and Mr. Putnam thinks that "in this he should have the help and sympathy of every liberal; for, if defeated, our country will be overshadowed by a despotism worse than African slavery."

With Mr. Putnam's desire that the despotic organization of Roman Catholicism in America, where the non-recognition of the canon law prevents, as it seems, some of the checks upon the bishops that obtain elsewhere, should in no way be fostered by American courts, we most unqualifiedly sympathize; and if the consequence of recognizing the canon law as part of the law of the land were to destroy the despotism of Rome, we should equally sympathize with his wish for Father Stack's success. But we doubt the probability of any such general consequence, however it might follow in part. What is the canon law?

"Canon law," says the Encyclopædia Britannica, "is a term used to denote the ecclesiastical law sanctioned by the Church of Rome, and possessing more or less direct influence in all countries which acknowledge the authority of the Pope. The word canon signifies a rule, and this word was not at first considered as too feeble to express the claims of the Church to the obedience of her children; but, in the progress of priestly usurpation, the successor of St. Peter began to arrogate a more ample and definite jurisdiction, and to extend his regulations to many causes which are not strictly ecclesiastical. The stupendous fabric of papal dominion attained its full height in the eleventh century, under the auspices of Hildebrand, who was elected in the year 1073, and assumed the name of Gregory VII. It was one of his dictates that the Church of Rome has never erred, and, according to the testimony of Scripture, never shall err; and, after this maxim was fully admitted, nothing remained to obstruct the progress of spiritual arrogance. What had formally been described as a rule was now dignified with the name of law; and from this period, a period of the deepest ignorance and superstition, the canon law obtained great influence in most countries of Europe. After the foundation of those seminaries of learning which we denominate universities, it acquired a distinguished place among the other faculties; and a knowledge of the canon law became a common road to the highest honors. It is a maxim of the commentators that a Doctor of the Canon Law is to be preferred to a Doctor of Divinity in such dioceses as do not contain many heretics. The canon law is derived from many different sources. The authority of the Scriptures cannot be entirely disregarded; but the writings of the fathers and doctors of the Church, the decrees of Councils, and the decretals of Popes, are much better adapted to the general views of the canonists. The canon is to a great extent to be considered as the spurious offspring of the civil law; what is most valuable it has derived from the Roman jurisprudence; and its own peculiar maxims and rules have all the same general tendency towards the power and aggrandizement of churchmen."

Note these concluding words, which we have italicized for the sake of emphasis. The canon law was never recognized in all its fulness in any other than the papal dominions, even when the Pope's authority was most widely extended. It exercised great influence wherever this authority was acknowledged at all; but it was always held in subordination to the civil law of the land, and was differently modified, therefore, in different countries. Hence it is a different thing in France, in Spain, in Austria, in England. Sir Matthew Hale, the famous Lord Chief Justice of England, said: "All the strength that either the papal or imperial laws have obtained in this kingdom is only because they have been received and admitted either by the consent of Parliament, and so are part of the statute laws of the kingdom, or else by immemorial usage and custom in some particular cases in courts, and no otherwise; and therefore so far as such laws are received and allowed here, so far they obtain, and no further; and the authority and force they have here is not founded on or derived from themselves; for so they bind no more with us than our laws bind in Rome or Italy."

Now the recognition of canon law, even in part, is inseparably connected with a formal union of Church and State; and where, as in America, there is no such union, no such recognition would be possible for any purpose. We must carefully consider what remedy is legitimate in a purely secular government for the evils of which Father Stack complains. Perhaps some special protection of the priests against the tyranny of their bishops might follow the recognition of the canon law by American courts; but if the door was thereby opened to greater despotism in other respects, and especially if the bulwark-principle of all our religious liberties, the separation of Church and State, were overthrown, then we should be immense losers by Father Stack's success. Remember that the canon law is the Pope's law. Merely because it affords some protection to the parish priest as against his bishop, shall we precipitately acknowledge the Pope's law, or even part of it, as the law of the United States? If we do, we unwittingly establish Roman Catholicism to that extent as the national religion. It behooves us to take heed to our steps, when we are traversing ground so perilous as this. For the sake of getting itself thus formally recognized here, Rome might be willing to waive some incidental advantages it derives from our secular theory of government. But it would be very unwise for us to secure the right of interfering between priest and bishop, if the price paid was the putting of our necks under the Pope's yoke. So long as the canon law remains the device of the Papacy for the strengthening and perpetuation of its own power, we had better beware of invoking its aid for any purpose, however plausible. Father Stack is, after all, a Catholic priest; and it will not make Catholicism genuinely democratic to take power from his bishop as against him merely to put it into his own hands as against his congregation.

The fact is that, when Mr. Putnam claims for the State "the right to interfere with the internal organization of any body, when that organization is a monarchical or despotic one," his honorable indignation against tyranny leads him to the adoption of a very dangerous principle; namely, the right of persecution. He says: "Men may have what opinions they will, but they must organize them by democratic methods." Now it happens that the Catholics believe the authority of their bishops to be divinely bestowed, and not to be received except by the imposition of Episcopal hands. Election by the laity would not confer it; the bishops alone confer it on whomsoever they will. This belief is an essential part of the Catholic faith; it could not possibly be "organized by democratic methods"; it is essentially a "divine right," or monarchical, method. To insist, therefore, on a democratic election of Catholic bishops would be to prohibit Catholicism as such; and that would be persecution. Such is not the policy which religious freedom dictates. So long as men are Catholics at all, the principle of religious liberty concedes their right to organize their religion in their own way. But since all men are citizens, with equal civil rights, the moment when any Catholic appeals to the courts for the protection of his civil rights against the encroachments of his priest or bishop is the precise moment when the courts ought to interfere. They cannot step in, before a complaint is made, to prevent the possibility of any complaint in advance; they only exist to enforce rights and redress wrongs. They must wait for the overt act of oppression before they can interfere with the organization of any religious body; and we are constrained to agree with the editor of Harper's Weekly in this respect.

But it does not follow that the people should submit patiently, and behold unmoved the slow or rapid erection of a despotic organization among them. Ignorance is at the bottom of all despotism, which is impossible without it. The people, therefore, in the defence of their liberties, have the right to war on ignorance, to require the education of all children to a point which shall emancipate them from priestly control, and thus to sap the very foundations of ecclesiastical tyranny. This is the true policy of a State which is thoroughly secular, and cannot recognize the canon law. It is not a policy of persecution, for it is no persecution of the parent to forbid him, through his own ignorant superstition, to deprive his child of the possibility of mental freedom. This freedom is the child's natural right, for his enjoyment of which the community are responsible; and the principle of Guaranteed Education, in our opinion, is a far better safeguard against the despotisms of the Roman Catholic Church than any amount of violent interference in its internal organization.

Furthermore, the people have not only a right, but a positive duty, to deprive the Roman Catholic Church (and all the churches) of the unjust privileges it now possesses before the law: above all, the privilege of tax-exemption, which permits wealth and the power wealth brings to accumulate with such terrible rapidity in its hands. When the American people are wiser than they are to-day, they will take up one by one the "Demands of Liberalism," and insist on making the separation of Church and State, now a half-pretence, a genuine and accomplished fact. The day will surely come when radicals will be as much ashamed of their present indifference to these "Demands" as some of them now are of their ancient indifference to the anti-slavery movement. We patiently bide our time.

These two movements—the movement for guaranteed (or "compulsory") education and the movement to carry the "Demands of Liberalism"—are the true weapons with which to meet the "Catholic conspiracy"; and to them, not to the recognition of the canon law, will the friends of religious freedom most wisely look. Father Stack does not really know what ails him; he thinks it is discontent with Episcopal domination, when the truth is that he is getting sick of Catholicism without knowing it. No good would come to the nation by following his advice, but rather harm; what is wanted is to get rid of the priest as well as the bishop, and protect the ignorant laity against Father Stack as well as to protect Father Stack against Bishop O'Hara. While we cordially sympathize with the spirit of Mr. Putnam's advocacy of his cause, we yet respectfully differ from him in the measures he proposes, believing it impossible to make Rome democratic before we have made her free-religious.

GROWING AND OUTGROWING.

Rev. James Freeman Clarke, in a sermon preached at the Progressive Friends' Yearly Meeting at Longwood, Pa., last June, returns to his favorite theme, that Christianity, though growing up like other religions by natural laws and processes, can never, like other religions, be outgrown, but is destined to be the universal and absolute religion, assimilating to itself and finally absorbing all other faiths. The sermon is entitled, "Christianity: is it just ending or just beginning?" And the main idea of the discourse is to show that Christianity, so far from betraying any signs of disintegration and decay, is in its essential nature just beginning to manifest its real life and power.

The argument chiefly relied upon to prove this proposition is that the essential elements of Christianity—that is, what appear to Mr. Clarke to be its essential elements—are, so far from being superseded or outgrown, just beginning to be appreciated, and made vitally practical; but it is curious to note that these essential elements, instead of being anything special to Christianity, are in every case beliefs that it holds in common with several other or with all of the great religions of the world. That "God is our Father"; that religion consists in "love to God and love to man"; and that "love to God and love to man are one and the same thing"; that religion is "not a matter of creed, of ritual, of special emotions and sentimentalism, but is identical with true goodness"; that it is a "life devoted wholly to the good of others"; and that men are "saved by humanity and not by some special acts of piety"; and that the soul is "immortal," and that the kind of immortality will depend upon the kind of life begun here on earth,—these are what Mr. Clarke enumerates as the elements of Christianity, or, in other words, as the principal truths taught by Jesus. But if, because it teaches such beliefs as these, Christianity must be regarded as the universal faith which is never to be outgrown, the same argument would prove the same thing of several other religions, in which the same sentiments are taught.

If it be replied, "Yes, the same sentiments are taught in other religions by a few sages, but they have not been made the warp and woof of these religions as they have of Christianity," Mr. Clarke's sermon would furnish this rejoinder: that these sentiments have not practically been made the warp and woof of Christianity; for, like other religions, "the Christian Church, down to the present day, has taught that men are to be saved by ritual, sacraments, belief of creeds, agonies of remorse, ecstasies of emotional devotion," as the sermon strongly puts it. And for any body of Christian people now to wake up to find these sentiments to be the all-pervading and essential life of Christianity, is precisely what the more liberal and enlightened minds of the Jewish, or Mohammedan, or Hindu faith are waking up to find in their religions.

That is, the signs are not that any special form of religion, Christianity more than the rest, is to convert and absorb into itself all others, but that what is special in all the religions is being outgrown, and that what is universal to them is coming to be more emphasized, and is preparing for some new external combination and development. Mr. Clarke argues that this final combination has already come in Christianity. And another of his reasons for this opinion is, that "the intellectual and moral life of the world," "all progressive civilization," in fact, is at this era in the limits of Christendom. "No one goes," he says, "for science, art, or literature, to the Buddhists or to the Mohammedans, to Cairo or to Burmah." And this fact he does not admit, as is sometimes claimed, to be one of accident, but to be a relation of cause and effect,—Christianity being, in his view, the inspiring cause of modern civilization. Without noticing whether there be not something of the usual Christian arrogance in the above quoted sentence as to the present intellectual life of non-Christian countries, it may be asserted with confidence that there was a time when Mohammedanism rather than Christianity was the guardian of science and literature, and that it was owing not a little to the influence of Mohammedan rationalism in Europe, when the Christian Church was intent on smothering intellectual life, that there came that secession which resulted in Protestantism.

Mr. Clarke considers the Protestant Reformation as the legitimate development of the original Christian germ, "passing from homogeneity to heterogeneity." In my view, a true philosophy of history will regard it as the transformation of Christianity under new influences external to itself,—these influences being, in the main, Mohammedan rationalism working up from the South of Europe and the free, independent mind of the German nations. And from these, rather than from Christianity proper, have come modern science, literature, art, invention—in short, modern civilization; as from the same causes have come Protestantism and the various forms of neo-Christianity. So far from Christianity having produced modern civilization, it is modern civilization, starting from a life quite independent of Christianity, which has produced that form of Christianity which now claims to be harmonious with all science, and the parent of modern literature and culture. And the spirit of this same modern civilization is rapidly developing a form of religious conviction that will supersede the authority of all special religions and their founders; a form of religious conviction which will hold Jesus, as many other great religious teachers, in reverent remembrance; but will also hold it preposterous that any human being living in a corner of Asia nineteen centuries ago could have sounded all possible depths of the human mind and heart, and established a religion for this and all coming ages. If Jesus had been God, as the Orthodox believe, he might have accomplished this task. But being, as Mr. Clarke believes, simply and purely man, the accomplishment of such a work by him would have been a greater miracle than that involved in the doctrine that he was the full incarnation of the Deity.

W. J. P.

THE IDEAL NOT "ON TRIAL."

This kind and earnest word we are very glad to receive from Dr. Bartol:—

MR. EDITOR:—

Whoever may censure, or draw back and go no more with you, let one who has never agreed with your anti-Christianity, but always honored your sincerity, now applaud, as respects the Plymouth-Church scandal, your course.

Mr. Evarts is reported as having opened his plea for the defence with the remark that Christianity was not on trial. But, if the present position of that church, and of the synod and sanhedrim of churches which exonerated its pastor as without a stain, is to be identified with Christianity, then Christianity is convicted, and then surely I am no Christian.

There are things more important than Christianity, of which it has no worth but as the promoter and means,—such as truth, and purity, and the mind's reverence before the constitution and constituter of the creation in which we live: and there was a time when we seemed to be, all of us—press, pulpit, and so-called good society—going down into one gulf of hypocrisy in this land. The great peril still is the want of truth, the absence of the love of truth, the willingness to sacrifice truth to expediency, to save our idol at the cost of our principle. But we must not repeal the ten commandments, or any one of them, in favor of a man. If he does not follow the banner, the banner must not follow him through all his devious and dirty ways. We must not lower the standard, an inch or a hair's breadth, for the accommodation of his sin. I believe in an ideal, which I am still content to call Christian, which is not on trial, but before which we are ever on trial ourselves. But how poorly it is incarnate in the Church! Let Christians beware of defiling it with sensuality, and distorting it with deceit; and understand that they, in all their denominations, are at the bar, which is not the Church, but that absolute Justice we call God. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches!" Adultery, in the baptized communicant, or clergyman, is an offence inconsistent with their office or membership; but if truth goes, the bottom drops out of all things,—in worship, politics, trade, intercourse; and human society is disintegrated and dissolved, by a secession which no civil war could heal. Not intemperance, or violence, or any transgression of passion, but dishonesty, Jesuitism in the Protestant Church, is our chief danger.

C. A. BARTOL.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—The topic of the day here in England is Mr. Samuel Plimsoll and his Mercantile Shipping Bill.

In Mr. Plimsoll we have a real man, possessing in a high degree the rare virtue of public spirit.

No greater tribute can be paid to anyone's worth, than to kindle admiration in the very act of committing a breach of good manners. I leave other papers to inform you of all the details of what is now called the "Plimsoll scene"; no doubt your readers have heard the whole story of his burst of indignation on Mr. Disraeli's announcement of his intention to throw overboard the Merchant Shipping Bill. Not a soul can be found to stand up in defence of the language used by Mr. Plimsoll on the occasion. His best friends felt ashamed of him, and were driven to urge a plea of temporary mental derangement as the only palliation of an outburst of temper which could not be overlooked. Mr. Plimsoll has himself made the most ample apology for his terrible departure from the rules of Parliamentary debate.

Nor would we wish such language as we refer to to be ever deemed otherwise than improper and offensive. The temper required for calm and profitable discussion can only be maintained by the strictest self-discipline and invariable courtesy of speech. So far it is impossible to do otherwise than to endorse Mr. Plimsoll's own confession that his language was unbecoming to his own dignity and that of the House.

But, in spite of all this, there is a feeling at the bottom of many hearts that, "as there is no rule without an exception," so this outburst of indignation was not merely to be excused on the ground of excessive provocation, but actually praiseworthy on the ground of its necessity, and its being called for by the desperate condition of those in whose behalf the scathing rebuke was hurled.

There are times and seasons, surely, when rules even of courtesy must be set aside, and when men, fighting a battle, not for themselves, but for the oppressed and defenceless, have a divine right to step out from the time-honored track of good manners and strict etiquette to deal a heavy blow at powerful and otherwise unassailable miscreants. I doubt much if Mr. Plimsoll could have struck half so much terror into the hearts of those whom he was assailing, had he confined himself to the usages of Parliamentary debate. But he fairly frightened them by the spontaneous revelation of his fiery zeal, and gave them a momentary glimpse of those forces with which they had to grapple.

That his indignation has been justified by almost every paper in the land proves that the instinct of mankind, under the sacred influence of sympathy with the oppressed, can discern beneath the most flagrant violation of good manners the much more precious element of soundness of heart and holy wrath against protected and systematic wickedness. We need, at rare intervals, denunciations not one whit less fierce than Mr. Plimsoll's; not merely to reveal to us the high possibilities of human nature, and to assure us that we have "still a prophet among us," but also to rouse public attention, and to quicken the public conscience against abuses which grow impudent by toleration. We need more Plimsolls and not fewer of them. We need them in many another department of human occupation besides that of mercantile marine. And we need their voices burning and withering in their wrath and scorn, and not softened down into cold and colorless remonstrances like the lisps of a feeble lady.

Not long ago, I was inclined to be a little hard on Jesus of Nazareth for his readiness in the use of abusive epithets; but, upon my word, Mr. Plimsoll has set me thinking on the matter once more, and pointed to a possible justification of even the fiercest invective.

Good manners are, of course, the very life of social order and peace; and our Houses of Parliament would sink miserably below their present high level of dignity, if personal abuse were to be recognized as legitimate; yet when we have said all this, as men we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that occasions will arise when manners and stately forms of speech must be cast to the winds, that the mighty champion of the Right and the True may lay about him with perfect freedom, and give full play to his zeal and indignation in the strongest terms he can find for their expression. Samuel Plimsoll deserves well of us all, on both sides of the Atlantic; not only for his unparalleled devotion to the sailors' cause, but also for showing us his own brave and dauntless heart, and giving proof of what fine manliness has survived the effeminizing influence of nineteenth century civilization. His intrepidity will be remembered with thankful pride long after his apology to the House of Commons is forgotten.

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, S.E., July 31, 1875.

Communications.

THE CATHOLIC CONSPIRACY.

Almost all liberals are aware of the vast power which the Roman Catholic Church possesses in our country; but very few seem to understand the kind of power which it has, and which will surely uproot our free institutions, unless extinguished by legislative action. Let us explain the nature of this dangerous power.

The Roman Catholic Church in the United States consists of 8,500,000 people, 4,500 priests, 56 bishops, 7 archbishops, and 1 cardinal.

Where is the power of this immense organization located?

Not in the 8,500,000 people; not in the 4,500 priests; but the whole of it is located in the bishops, archbishops, and cardinal,—that is, in the hands of less than seventy persons. These hold all the property of the Church in fee simple; can remove the priests at pleasure, and deprive them of all their living; and by a mere nod can launch the thunders of excommunication against any one of the 8,500,000 people.

The priests are absolutely slaves; they have no life-tenure; they have no voice in the election of the bishops; any one of them can be removed at a moment's notice; the congregation over which he ministers has not a word to say, no matter how highly it may regard him, and the victim has no power of appeal.

The bishops hold a life-tenure; they are a close corporation; when one dies, they elect his successor; and no bishop can be removed, even by the Pope himself, without the fairest and fullest trial before his peers.

Hence in the hands of a few American bishops is located an irresponsible authority such as no bishops in any other country possess.

The canon law, as established in the Catholic Church in Europe, forbids the removal of a priest without the process of judicial trial, where the accused may have full opportunity to defend himself before a bishop and six of his peers.

In European countries, therefore, the priest has rights which the bishop is bound to respect; but in this country, where the canon law is not established, he has no rights whatever; he is an absolute slave.

Father Stack, of Williamsport, Pa., has published two remarkable articles in Harper's Weekly of July 3 and 10, in which the character of the Roman Catholic organization in this country is ably exhibited. He is now engaged in a contest with Bishop O'Hara in the American courts to maintain his rights as a priest under the canon law of the Church. In this he should have the help and sympathy of every liberal; for, if defeated, our country will be overshadowed by a despotism worse than African slavery.

In commenting on these articles, the editor of Harper's Weekly says: "With the internal regulations of any association, of any kind, until it contravenes the law, the law has nothing whatever to do."

Is this so? If it is, then we have no defence against the establishment of a despotic empire in our very midst,—an empire under the control of a compact and determined few, whose declared purpose is to supplant our free institutions with a tyranny more harsh and unsparing than any ever yet seen upon the planet. Does the principle of the separation of Church and State place us in a position of such utter weakness? Can the Church go on and mature its hostile plans, wisely keeping still until it is sure of the victory, and not contravening the law until it is so mighty that the law will snap asunder at the first stroke? Is the Church so independent of the State that the State can do nothing to protect itself from a danger that is sure to be its overthrow? Has it nothing to do with the internal organization of a religious body? Has it no right to insist that that organization shall be of a democratic and representative character? Has it no power to forbid the establishment of an ecclesiastical despotism that will surely precipitate itself into political action, and subvert the very law of the land? I claim that the State has a right to interfere with the internal organization of any body when that organization is a monarchical or despotic one. Men may have what opinions they will, but they must organize them by democratic methods. The democratic principles upon which our political institutions are built must bear sway in the realm of religion, and no church shall be erected into a monarchy. If the American people have nothing to do in their legislative capacity with the internal organization of a religious body, unless that body by an overt act contravenes the law, then they are bound hand and foot, and a monstrous and inimical tyranny may grow up in their very midst. All they can do is to wait until it gets ready to strike the first blow with fatal effect. They must submit with the plea, "the State has nothing to do with the Church, and hence the Church can slowly and surely prepare to destroy our free institutions. We must take our chances. The Church may do the right thing; but if it takes a notion to do the wrong thing, we are totally helpless." Is this American liberty? I say no; for such a liberty will be a most pitiable failure. The State should insist that all bodies, religious or otherwise, be organized upon the basis that it itself is organized upon; namely, that the powers of government must be derived from the just consent of the governed. No church has a right to organize upon any other basis. If it does, the State can interfere with its organization, whether it contravenes the law by any overt act or not. Its very organization contravenes the law. If this is not so, if we have no defence against a despotic empire flourishing in our very midst, until it is bold enough to commit an overt act with every assurance of success, then I see no hope for our free institutions. They must bite the dust beneath the conquering eagles of the Roman hierarchy.

Is this the sentiment of American liberals? Is there to be no political action? Are we to trust to the tendency of things? Is the State to be on no guard, and have no power against a despotically organized Church? The Roman bishops will laugh in their sleeves at such indifference. That is just what they want. "Hands off!" they say. Yes, we must keep our hands off, until they get the machinery of their Church into splendid working order, and then their terrible cry will be, "Up and at them!" What will our boasted freedom be worth, that we thought by some strange magic of events would triumph, whether we did anything or not? Be sure that our beautiful science and philosophy are weak as water without political and organized action. Year by year the Catholic bishops are gathering together prodigious power. They will not use it until they can use it effectually; they bide their time. Our children's children will curse us for our folly, or tamely crawl into the bosom of the Church triumphant.

Let every liberal read Prof. Cairnes' able review of Spencer's Social Evolution. That shows that we have something more to do than dream of things to come. Let not the Samson of Science be stripped of its locks by the Delilah of Indifference. If so, it will become the blind slave of an imperious ecclesiasticism. Political action is one of the world's supreme forces; and, if liberals do not wield it for freedom, the Church will wield it for slavery.

S. P. PUTNAM.

THE BISHOP'S PLATFORM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—Mr. Chas. A. Miller, in his letter to THE INDEX, published by you on July 22, clearly defines the main point raised between you and me with regard to the last three articles of my platform. We all admit that the law should not interfere in religious matters; and the only question is, "Does the present action of the law, or, on the contrary, would its action under my proposed reform, constitute such an interference?" I think the interference exists in the present state of things. This, in your editorial note on your correspondent's letter, you do not deny; and (1) you make to me a magnificent concession in saying that sectarian institutions should not be incorporated by special acts of the legislature, though (2) you cannot see how they can be prevented from incorporating themselves under the general laws.

1. With regard to the concession, without wasting time in a ceremony so unnecessary between us as praising your candor in making it, let me ask you to insert it at once in "The Demands of Liberalism," more generally known as THE INDEX Platform.

This is very necessary, inasmuch as almost every year we see in the Acts of almost every State Legislature such items as the following:—

An Act to Incorporate the Free Will Baptist Church of —, County of —.

An Act to Incorporate the Presbyterian Ministers' Retiring Allowance Fund.
Etc., etc.

2. With regard to the second point, I will ask you whether you see how the following institutions or societies might be prevented from incorporating themselves without intervention of the legislature, but under the general laws:—

Inflationist Blind Institute.
One-Eyed Protectionists' Hospital.
Straight-Ticket Democratic Voters' Widows' Fund.
School-Fund-Division Supporters' Temporary Relief Society.

Rocky Mountains Summit Railroad Subvention Voting Legislators' Retiring Allowance Company.
Municipal Building Fund Anti-Investigation Aldermen's Wives' Deaf and Dumb Hospice.

If, as I hope, such societies could not incorporate themselves under the general laws, for the obvious reason that each of them is intended to influence by bribery the course of men in public affairs, it seems to me that the same principle should apply where the effect obviously is to influence by bribery the decisions of men in religious affairs, as in the following societies:—

Catholic Blind Institute.
One-Eyed Protestants' Hospital.
And so forth.

I am, dear sir, truly yours,

JULIUS FERRETTE.

CAMBRIDGE, August 6, 1875.

[1. The ninth of the "Demands of Liberalism" already covers the point indicated, and there hardly seems to be any necessity of making a separate "Demand" of it.

2. The "bribery" involved in the societies so drolly imagined is of such an indirect character that we should despair of preventing their incorporation under general statutes. There are many evils which legislation cannot reach, and we fear this is one of them. If there are such donkeys in the world as would found a hospital for the special benefit of the widows of Democrats who vote the straight ticket, ridicule would be a stronger check on their folly than law. We cannot yet see how the State could interfere in such matters without violating the rights of free thought and free speech.—ED.]

MONEY.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, Aug. 9, 1875.

EDITOR INDEX:—

It has been observed by many of your readers that frequently your answers to correspondents are more or less evasive, or otherwise unsatisfactory. When we publicly ask a question, especially if of general importance, of an editor, we are in hopes of being enlightened; and when we send him any nuts which are too hard for us, we are unreasonable enough to expect him to crack them for us. In my communication of July 19, which you published under the heading, "Journeys to the Moon," I sent you just one nut to crack, and you serenely return it to me unopened! As a hard-money advocate, you ought to let us into the secret (unless it really is a secret) how and by what process you mean to reduce our $800,000,000 of currency to a specie basis, with only $170,000,000 of gold to do it on?

This is what bothers us unbelievers in hard money, and it is not fair in a specie prophet to dally with our thirst for knowledge. By-the-by, in your answer (what there was of it) to my letter, you use the expression, "come back to specie payments." If by that you mean to say that before we had greenbacks we had specie payment, you make a very singular statement. Why, nothing was easier in those "good old times" before the war than to burst wide open any bank or any number of banks you might name, by calling for any considerable quantity of gold; while to-day you can buy any amount of gold without causing the least disturbance. England, you know, has a specie basis; and that colossus, the Bank of England, will close its doors in an hour under the pressure of a run on gold.

But I did not mean to produce any more of the nuts referred to until you show us the kernel of the one first spoken of. Meanwhile I am,

Yours patiently,

WERNER BOECKLIN.

[If Mr. Boecklin is really expecting THE INDEX to crack nuts, jump sticks, or perform any other antics solely for his amusement, we smilingly congratulate him on the possession of "patience"; for he will need all he has to spare of that article before he is gratified. He may consider our former note "evasive," if he pleases, though we very much fear that Artemus Ward would have considered it "sarkastical." For the sake of explicitness and a better understanding, however, we will say in plain English that we have never undertaken to answer everybody's sensible or senseless questions, and that the day is now many years in our rear when we felt impelled to do ridiculous things simply because we were "stumped" to do them. Mr. Boecklin's "nut" is nothing but a painted lump of beeswax; and, instead of entertaining him by "trying our teeth on it," philanthropy prompts us to advise him to keep his own teeth out of it. If he is unable to restrain his curiosity to see its "kernel," he should apply to some one who is simple enough to suppose that, in order to make the currency convertible into coin, it is necessary to reduce its volume by $600,000,000. Meanwhile it will be sufficient to state that, having already accepted the appointment of editor of THE INDEX, we are obliged to decline, with profuse acknowledgments and tearful regrets, the proffered appointment of Financial Mare's Nest Exploder and Grand Nutcracker Extraordinary to Mr. Boecklin.—[Ed.]

THE CURRENCY QUESTION.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Aug. 11, 1875.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I am glad to see the position THE INDEX has taken on the currency question, and was somewhat amused to read the brief communication of Mr. Boecklin, with your short response thereto. Nevertheless, I most cordially agree with Mr. Boecklin that the currency planks in the platforms of both political parties are chiefly clap-traps, and designed to capture votes. The plank quoted by your correspondent is a most engaging specimen of those enticing generalities forged by party leaders to be used as texts in ponderous stump speeches.

Nevertheless, the currency question is an important one, and I am glad to see that THE INDEX has taken an honest and tenable position thereon. By common consent the civilized world has placed a certain fixed value on two metals, and made that valuation the standard of exchange. In the course of events there come periods when a nation demands an enormous increase of revenue; and so, in the exercise of supreme power, it issues promises to pay in quantities so large that it discredits itself, and thus drives gold and silver entirely from the marts of trade.

English history is filled with examples of the "debasement of the currency" (which is only an honest name for expansion), and the terrible effects of such debasements upon the public welfare. Let any one read Froude's exhaustive history of the reigns of Henry VIII., Edward, and Bloody Mary, and learn what "expansion" accomplished in behalf of "national prosperity"!

Mr. Boecklin assumes that there are $170,000,000 in gold in the country, and asserts that, to resume specie payment, "we must reduce our $800,000,000 in currency to $200,000,000." This looks to me like nonsense. Did Mr. Boecklin ever hear of a period in the history of any nation when there was no currency except gold and silver? Let there be sixteen hundred millions of currency in the country, if need be; but let the government cease to issue currency falsehoods, and pay gold on demand. Said the Irish laborer, addressing the cashier of a bank: "Mr. Jones, can ye pay me the money I deposited wid ye?" "Certainly, Patrick." "Thin, bedad, I don't want it; but they towled me ye could not pay, and thin I did want it moity bad!"

We do not need an abundance of currency so much as we need to have a fixed and uniform value upon that which we do possess; and it is simply disgraceful that the promises to pay issued by the "greatest nation upon which the sun ever shone" are worth only 88 per cent. One question to Mr. Boecklin: Will the expansion of the currency increase the volume of gold in the country? If so, how much shall we be compelled to expand to corral the necessary $800,000,000?

Very truly yours, FRANK J. MEAD.

PROF. TYNDALL'S "ATHEISM."

EDITOR INDEX:—

You give the following as an extract from Prof. Tyndall:—

"Depend upon it, trust me, that the revelations of science are not in the least degree calculated to lessen our feelings of astonishment. We are surrounded by wonders and mysteries everywhere. I have sometimes—not sometimes, but often—in the spring-time watched the advance of the sprouting leaves, and of the grass, and of the flowers, and observed the general joy of opening life in Nature; and I have asked myself this question: Can it be that there is no being or thing in Nature that knows more about these matters than I do? Do I in my ignorance represent the highest knowledge of these things existing in this universe? Ladies and gentlemen, the man who puts that question to himself, if he be not a shallow man, if he be a man capable of being penetrated by a profound thought, will never answer the question by professing the creed of atheism, which has been so lightly attributed to me."

Soon after the publication of Tyndall's Manchester speech (from which as first published the above is taken), a contributor to the London National Reformer wrote thus:—

"We may perhaps state, as regards Prof. Tyndall, that we know from a private source that the professor's utterances at Manchester were grossly misrepresented by reporters, and that words were put into his mouth which he never uttered; this is the secret of the conflicting statements as reported in the newspapers from Belfast and from Manchester. Mr. Tyndall never applied the word 'shallow' to any kind of atheism; and I am requested by an intimate friend of the professor's to state clearly that Tyndall never cast the slur upon atheism which was put into his mouth. His words at Manchester were as follows:—

"I have stood in the spring-time, and looked upon the sprouting foliage, the grass and the flowers, and the general joy of opening life. And in my ignorance of it all I have asked myself whether there is no power, being, or thing in the universe, whose knowledge of that of which I am so ignorant is greater than mine. I have asked myself, Can it be possible that man's knowledge is the greatest knowledge—that man's life is the highest life? My friends, the profession of that atheism with which I am so lightly charged would in my case be an impossible answer to this question—only slightly preferable to that fierce and distorted theism which I have had lately reason to know still reigns rampant in some minds, as the survival of a more ferocious age."

"These are the professor's exact words, giving clearly his position; and few atheists would, we fancy, quarrel with what he says. 'The problem is still unsolved'—seems to be his meaning. Neither atheism nor theism solves it. Atheism is only slightly preferable to superstition; we do not know; the origin of things is shrouded in mystery; let us honestly own that we know nothing; let us not dogmatize fiercely on either side."

M. D. Conway, in a sermon preached in London, Feb. 14, said:—

"Not long ago, while the country was noisy with the anathemas hurled from pulpits against Dr. Tyndall, that gentleman delivered at Manchester a lecture in which he replied to those who had pronounced him an atheist. He quietly said that he did not consider atheism a satisfactory solution of the problems of the universe; though he preferred atheism to that theism of whose ferocious spirit he had recently had so much experience—the position, as I have often said in this place, the real position of nearly all, if not all, those who are commonly called atheists: they do not raise the denial of a possible God into a dogma, but declare that the various theisms actually offered them are unsatisfactory."

Mr. Conway then said that Tyndall, angry at the words put into his mouth, at once printed the stenographic report of his speech, and tried in other ways to stop its false report: "But it was no use. The Bishop of Manchester actually forged a recantation for the professor, which made him say that, when he gave his address at Belfast, he was in his lowest mood—a forgery which Tyndall branded with indignation, but which the Bishop never retracted."

No doubt, Prof. Tyndall could truthfully and consistently say that atheism, especially "that atheism" attributed to him by ignorant or unscrupulous critics, fails to explain the mysteries of being; at the same time Tyndall is undoubtedly an atheist, if that word stands for one who does not believe in or accept the theory of a personal, conscious, intelligent Being who created and controls the universe. It is not right, therefore, that his name should be used to do service against atheism among those with whom names have greater weight than facts and arguments.

Respectfully,
B. F. UNDERWOOD.

SIGNIFICANT AGAIN.

MR. ABBOT:—

Permit me to call attention to facts in the following item from England, published in the New York Tribune, July 23:—

"The Council of Delegates from all the Presbyterian churches in Christendom met in Regent Square on Tuesday, and opened session. Many representatives of the American and Canadian churches were present. The object of the Council is to demonstrate unity of belief among Protestants, arrange mission work, concentrate the influence of the Church upon educational and social reforms, and organize resistance to infidelity and religious intolerance. The delegates number one hundred. The following American representatives attended: Rev. Mr. Morris, of Cincinnati; Dr. McCosh, of Princeton; Stuart Robinson, of Louisville; Sloan, of Allegheny City; and Schaff and Rogers, of New York. In the Presbyterian Council on Wednesday the constitution of the future union was discussed. The American delegates favored the formation of a confederation; but a large majority of the Council preferred the title and form of an alliance, as less restricted in scope, and it was ultimately agreed that an alliance of all the Reformed Presbyterian churches of the world should be formed."

1. "Council of Delegates from all the Presbyterian churches in Christendom met" All the Presbyterian churches in Christendom! When will the Liberals thus meet?

2. "Demonstrate unity of belief among Protestants." Can any council demonstrate unity where fundamental doctrines believed by scores of different sects are diametrically opposed? Besides, have the "Protestants" authorized the Presbyterians "to demonstrate unity of belief among Protestants"? Will not other Protestant churches, aside from the branch Presbyterians, wish to have a voice in that demonstration?

3. "Concentrate the influence of the Church upon educational and social reforms." Why this excitement and nervous haste, at this time, to "concentrate" in that direction or any other?

4. "Organize resistance to infidelity." Ah, there is the point!

5. "Organize resistance to religious intolerance." "Religious intolerance"! Are the Presbyterians fearful that infidelity will be intolerant towards Protestantism? That would not be religious intolerance, but irreligious intolerance! Perhaps they are fearful of the religious intolerance of their Christian Protestant neighbors, or Christian Catholic foes.

6. "The American delegates favored the formation of a confederation." Why the American delegates favor a confederation?

7. "Large majority of the Council preferred the title and form of an alliance. . . . It was ultimately agreed that an alliance of all the Reformed Presbyterian churches of the world should be formed."

What does all this mean? Councils in America, councils in England! Conventions North, conventions South! Councils, conventions, unity, harmony, fraternal relations, pledges, concentration, organization, confederation, alliance, all Christendom, the whole world,—what does it all mean? "Resistance to INFIDELITY"! That is what it means!

Will you be wise, oh liberals? Will you read the signs of the times? Will you be as wise as those who are organizing to resist you, and organize to resist the resisters? Let the Liberal Leagues be numbered by the scores and by the hundreds to represent the demands of liberalism at the September convention in Philadelphia, this fall; and let there be one thousand to meet the enemies of our peace, and resist our invaders at the Centennial in 1876, so that we may represent the religious liberty which our forefathers strove so well to establish, and fought so vigorously to maintain.

ELLA E. GIBSON.

ELWOOD, Atlantic Co., N. J., Aug. 6, 1875.

FREE DISCUSSION.

Free discussion is an excellent method by which opinions and theories may be sifted. If all beliefs and assumptions were thoroughly tested by this process, the air might be cleared of many cloudy absurdities. Many a proposition which a man thoughtlessly accepts from the lips of a favorite speaker would be rejected, if uttered where it could be answered. Few organizations are more useful than one properly conducted for free discussion.

Happening recently to drop into Hospitaler Hall, in this city, I was somewhat surprised to see a very good system in very fair operation. In a debating assembly everything depends on the manner of conducting arguments. We hear in conversation many debates that are worse than useless, because of the total lack of the power of logical reasoning in one or both of the disputants. Take a specimen at random. "Do you think the moon is made of green cheese?" "No; for then there wouldn't be any Milky Way." "But the milky why would be evidence going to show that such was the fact." "Then why did Dr. Hall get up an exploring expedition?" "How does that bear upon the question?" "There's a North Pole, isn't there?" "I don't see your point." "Why, wasn't the world made in six days?"—and so on for two hours. You make a point, and your opponent replies by something utterly irrelevant, and does not know that he is not arguing. For an arguing people, we have not developed the logical faculty to excess. It was, therefore, quite refreshing to hear at Hospitaler Hall three or four clear, close, and logical reasoners, presenting arguments as rational and high-toned as are to be heard in the most cultured and pretentious arena of debate. It is true I heard some debaters there who are not and evidently cannot be logical. But there is a use for such, even in a debating assembly, just as there is for a punt when you keep a yacht. You need your punt to reach your yacht moored in deep water, as you want your superficial talkers to carry you out into the deep waters of discussion; and then, when you sail, you want it dancing astern, to see the difference between sliding over the surface and going gracefully and scientifically through the waves. So it seems to me that Hospitaler Hall is a profitable place to spend now and then a couple of hours. ALPHA.

A CENTENNIAL IN PARADISE.

NEW YORK, July 29, 1875.

FRIEND ABBOT:—

Was there ever any thing so absurd but something can be found more so? I think not. Sometimes I am situated so as to be able to attend a genuine camp-meeting, and am almost always amused and instructed. The invitation to "come to Jesus," always pressed upon all, is surely getting to be a little stale; but a new form of invitation has just been invented. Whether it will have a run is a question; but you must record it, at least, as a specimen of what superstitious religion can do.

A Rev. Mr. Palmer, of New York, a pious old man, who no doubt means well, inaugurated it. It is to be a sort of centennial. He gives out an invitation to all the attendants at the meeting to hold a celebration, in one hundred years from some particular date which I forget, in some grove, by the side of the River of God, in Paradise. Just what they are to do he does not say or know; but he suggests that it will probably be spent singing "Glory to the Lamb of God." I heard him give out the invitation, and he said he had repeatedly done it at other meetings. He asked all who accept the invitation to rise. A majority got on their feet. Would it not be a good idea for the sinners who will then be in hell, where the climate is torrid, the air bad, and there are no streams of crystal water to drink, or trees to shade one from the heat, to send up a petition for the improvement of their condition? How it will detract from their celebration to know of the woes of some of their brothers and sisters whom Christ could not or would not save!

H.

A NEW STORY BY MUHLBACH.—A boy in St. Louis was recently presented with a jack-knife, with which, boy-like, he cut and marked everything that came in his way, from the dining-room table to the cat's tail. A few days after he had become the happy possessor of the knife his father was startled by seeing two men bringing home the young hopeful in a very dilapidated condition. His face seemed to be cut and bruised and covered with blood. The father, of course, was very much alarmed, and inquired of the boy who hit him. "Nothing didn't hit me, sir," the boy answered between his sobs; "it was only a mule kicked me in the eye." "A mule kicked you in the eye, eh?" replied the father. "Haven't I told you a thousand times or more that mules and gunpowder were not fit things for boys to fool with? What were you doing to the mule?" "I wasn't foolin' with 'em at all," said the boy; "I was only trying to cut my name on his back."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 "	8 " "
" 26 " 51 "	6 " "
" 52 "	5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAHAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS 1

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. ABBOT, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. ABBOT. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. ABBOT. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

8 7 5. PUBLICATIONS

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion;

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual;

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE

OF THE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. ABBOT, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. ABBOT, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. ABBOT on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India," also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. ABBOT, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, ABBOT, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian."—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
ATUBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; East and Present, 1 vol.; Horace and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRECTION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Milner, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life, The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellaneous.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	2.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformation of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Born and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	1.50
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Admiral's Essays.....	1.50
Oldport Days.....	1.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Sky and Sea Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administration.....	1.00
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-les.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy. A Story.....	.60
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital, and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	1.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	1.50
Representative Government.....	2.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.00
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Eekoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith, or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trotty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHÉLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
SOCIOLOGY.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.2	1.2
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTTER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols. III. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
The Voyage Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES, IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of TWO DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.
For sale by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

B O O K ,

Card,

—AND—

Job

PRINTING,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 TREMONT PLACE,
BOSTON.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform."

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"(I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"(II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Ednah D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247. Send for Circular.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY

335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on Improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!

THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL, for both sexes, MERIDEN, CONN. EMILY J. LEONARD, Principal.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

FRED GRANT & CO.

A Capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

MORSE'S PAINE.

PHOTOGRAPHS

For sale at the office of THE INDEX.
Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cts.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

REPORTS,

SERMONS,

ESSAYS,

and PAMPHLETS,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly printed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 Tremont Place,
BOSTON.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

JUST PUBLISHED.

!!THE SHINING RIVER!!

A New Sabbath-school Song Book.

By H. S. & W. O. PERKINS.

Price 35 cents. $30.00 per hundred.

"Rest in Thee," "What Jesus may Say," "Wandering Child," "What are These?" "Watchman, Awake!" are specimens of the titles of the beautiful new hymns, to sweet new melodies.

THE HIGH SCHOOL CHOIR. By L. O. EMERSON and W. S. TILDEN. Price $1.00. $9.00 per dozen.

The "High School Choir" is similar in general design to the very popular "Hour of Singing," which has been almost universally used in High Schools. The present work is in no way inferior to its predecessor, and is entirely fresh and new.

THE SONG MONARCH. Price 75 cts. $7.50 per dozen. By H. R. PALMER, assisted by L. O. EMERSON.

Do not think of teaching a Singing-school without using this attractive, popular, and useful book.

Specimen copies sent, post-paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,

[711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1875.

WHOLE No. 297.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———.

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called to the latter.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSES.

MR. PLIMSOLL is described as a "very thin, pale, and nervous man, of defective vision"; but he seems to have seen about as far into the millstone as the eagle-eyed Disraeli.

DR. RUSH, of Philadelphia, in his eccentric will styled newspapers the "vehicles of disjointed thinking." We fear he had our "Glimpses" in view when he made this cruel remark, and his "clear truthfulness" has laid us "pretty flat."

THE DUKE OF ARGYLL is a sensible man. Instead of sending his younger sons into the church or the army, their usual places of refuge from the labor of life, he has placed them in business firms where they may earn honorable positions by their own industry and brains.

THE CHICAGO Tribune neatly sums up the inevitable practical results of inflation as follows: "Everybody would be provided with plenty of due-bills, worth nothing, but exchangeable for other due-bills, also worth nothing, and yielding a yearly interest of still other due-bills, also worth nothing!"

THIS IS A juicy story to come from the Orthodox Advance: "A friend of ours has a little niece, whose mother, thinking it time for her to put away her childish things, informed her that 'Santa Claus' was no person at all; there was, no such person. Whereupon the child solemnly asked, 'Mamma, have you been telling me lies about Jesus Christ, too?'"

MR. CONWAY will very soon arrive in this country, if indeed not already here by the time this reaches the reader's eye. As a lecturer he cannot fail to be eminently successful, if the brilliancy, wit, and imagination which have made him facile princeps among letter-writers are any guarantee of success. We would heartily bid him welcome to his native land once more.

THE TOWN of Northampton, Massachusetts, where Jonathan Edwards preached in olden time, has never recovered from the gloomy Orthodoxy he promulgated. To this day it is true-blue. But the little village of Florence, its offspring and neighbor, is as wide-awake as Northampton is sleepy. Here Cosmian Hall is situated, of which so much has been heard as the best free thought Hall in Western Massachusetts. Northampton, in fact, is a squeezed orange, and in Florence you will find the juice.

A CORRESPONDENT in Pittsfield, Illinois, has just written to THE INDEX as follows, under date of August 16: "An outdoor protracted meeting has been in progress on the public square in this place for the last ten days. All the churches have joined except the 'Christian' church. The Evangelist Anderson, imported from England, is the star performer. His style is somewhat amusing, songs and anecdotes being interspersed. Very good imitation of the street peddler, selling Erasive Soap and Spaulding's Glue."

WE ARE fairly terrified at such bold blasphemy as this from the Orthodox (?) Independent: "If Christ in his time drank an intoxicating wine, it does not follow that we should. Christ's principles, not his acts, are our law. Even in the same generation Paul, in the matter of circumcision, advanced beyond Christ. So has Mr. Thayer in the matter of the Sabbath and of the whole Jewish law. So have we in the matter of wine-drinking!" [The italics are ours.] Here is the Independent boasting of having got ahead of its own Savior! Such profanity curdles the blood.

THE CATHOLIC priests get raps from their allies in Ohio: "Senator Thurman admitted to a Cleveland reporter a few days ago that he expects the Democrats will lose Ohio. This is what he said: 'The d—d priests have overdone the thing by sticking their noses into our politics; and they deserve to be beaten, to teach them their place. The Democracy only have themselves to blame in submitting to the demands of the priests in the way they did. It was unfortunate, indeed, that the Catholic question was lugged into the campaign. The Democracy was the only party that ever did anything for the Catholics, and it would seem that the more that is done for them the more they will demand. Their arrogance is insufferable, and, as we shall be defeated anyway, I hope it will hereafter teach these meddlesome priests a lesson that they will understand—that is, to let politics alone. I, for one, don't propose to stand any further nonsense from these fellows.'" P.S.—Senator Thurman denies having said all this; but some doubt the denial.

AN IMPORTANT judicial decision has just been made in New Hampshire, by which the Bishops of the Roman Catholic Church are firmly entrenched in power. Two years ago certain Catholic laymen of Portsmouth brought a suit in equity against the local priest and the late Bishop Bacon, complaining that, although they had contributed to the erection of the church building, they were debarred from entering it except on payment of an entrance fee; and also that the priest had publicly abused some of the complainants in the pulpit. The court sustains the Bishop completely, deciding that, inasmuch as the title-deed of the land rests in the Bishop's name, the complainants have no right of ownership or legal title in the church property; they have merely given their money outright to the Church, whose property rights are represented exclusively by the Bishop. As to the other point, the Court rules that it has no jurisdiction over priestly conduct or admission fees, and declines to interfere. Probably, however, in a libel suit the complainants could recover damages under the common law, on proving the fact; if not, the safeguards of civil rights are lamentably deficient in this country. But the immense power thus vested in the hands of the Bishops ought to be understood by the people, who now foolishly permit the Church of Rome to hold its property wholly untaxed, and therefore to increase its wealth at a most dangerous rate.

PHILIP BESSINGER is a saloon-keeper at Reading, Pennsylvania. His family consisted recently of his wife and three little children, a boy and two girls. Bessinger introduced an "affinity" into his house, and (owing to the very unreasonable objections of the superseded wife) unhappiness and a quarrel ensued. Bessinger ordered her out of his sight; he told her he would give her $2000 to go away and return no more, she to take the girls and he the boy; and he threatened to kill her if she returned. In her utter misery, the poor forsaken wife took her three little ones out of the city to the bank of the canal, filled a basket with stones by the aid of her unsuspecting innocents, tied it to her waist, took a child under each arm, clasped the third to her breaking heart, leaped into the water, and perished with them all. By a very reprehensible disregard of the "principles of social freedom," the people of Reading became dreadfully excited against Bessinger and wanted to lynch him at the funeral; but the police were able to protect virtue in his person at last accounts, though various shots were fired at him. No enlightened advocate of "free love" will blame him in the least. Had he not a right to love whom he would? Did he not make a handsome offer of $2000 to his tiresome wife, and generously relinquish to her two-thirds of the children? It would certainly be very conservative and old-fogyish to find fault with such a paragon of "free love" righteousness, and everybody is ashamed of those over-excitable people of Reading. Nevertheless, if we could only find words strong enough to characterize the conduct of this gentleman as it deserves, we should have no stomach for irony in his case.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Rasley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spieker, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carrie S. Burnham, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Confucius and His Religion.

BY A. W. STEVENS.

The great State religion of China—that which is indigenous to its spiritual life—is the religion taught by CONFUCIUS, who was the illustrious sage, reformer, and teacher of his age and nation. Or, more properly speaking, it is the religion which has existed in that broad empire for not less than four thousand years, and which Confucius did not originate, but reformed, restated, and reinforced. Fifteen hundred years before Confucius lived, there was a well-defined religion in China, which had been taught to the people by ancient sages and emperors, and which in due time had got itself perpetuated in sacred books, or a Bible; and these holy writings were in existence several hundred years prior to the birth of Confucius. He made them, and the religion which they taught, a special study; and in the course of his life he reedited the sacred scriptures of his people, and published them with his own comments and additions. And so vividly and forcibly did he illustrate the religion of the past, by his noble teachings and his pure life, that he converted the old into the new; and caused the religious history of his nation to re-date from his time, and to be thenceforward inseparably connected with his name and influence.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Confucius was born nearly six hundred years before Christ, in the kingdom of Loo, a portion of north-eastern China,—in modern times known as the province of Shan-tung. At that time China was divided into nine independent States, and not till three centuries later was it united in one empire. From his earliest years, Confucius was distinguished by his eager love of knowledge, and his calm, thoughtful, serious, and deferential air. His father was, at the birth of his distinguished son, prime minister of the State in which he lived; and Confucius was very early led, by this circumstance probably, to make a particular study of the political history of his country, which indeed was very intimately connected with its religious history. The father of Confucius, however, died when the son was quite young; and he was thereafter confided to the especial care of his mother and grandfather. And here is another instance, in addition to many that might be named, where one who has exercised a most commanding influence over the destiny of his race has owed his early, formative training to his mother. This was true in the case of Jesus, as of Confucius. It was Mary, not Joseph, who had the early moulding of the character of the wonderful prophet of Judea. And thus it is that the women, even without ballots, are ruling the destinies of the race. Confucius showed his filial love and gratitude towards his mother, by treating her always with the greatest respect and affection; paying her the most scrupulous degree of duty, as indeed he did to all his ancestors. And this we might expect of him, inasmuch as one of his chief doctrines was that of the duty of children to honor, love, obey, and cherish their parents. No religion in the world makes so much of the family as does the Confucian. None is so full of maxims and precepts bearing on the domestic relations.

Confucius at the age of nineteen married. Little or nothing is said of his wife. Together they had one son, who also married; from whom descended posterity which are very numerous in China to-day, and which glory in their lineage from the great sage. At the age of twenty years, Confucius was called into office by the government. He immediately attracted attention to himself, not only by the ability with which he discharged his official duties, but by the persevering effort he made to reform and correct long-standing abuses. He introduced rigid inquiry into the capacity and fidelity of those in his department, dismissed such as he thought dishonest and incompetent, and otherwise endeavored to root out all that was unworthy and pernicious from his branch of the government. His king approved him, and the people began to revere him; but his official colleagues, the politicians of the kingdom, hated and feared him, and were able in time to procure his expulsion from the government. Deprived of his office at about thirty-five years of age, he began his career as teacher; and for eight years went through the various provinces of China, teaching his ideas of religion and morality as applied to every-day life, the family, and the State. He returned to his native province in his forty-third year, and was then recalled to the government, his enemies in the meantime having lost their power. On his return to office, he found things worse than ever. Public affairs were demoralized. Political vice was rampant, and private virtue needing reform. Confucius, as before, steadily applied himself to checking and correcting abuses everywhere. He proclaimed honesty and righteousness and purity as the principles upon which both government and society should be carried on; he was unsparing in his efforts to apply these principles in all cases, and cut off from official connection with the government all who would not recognize and act upon them. At last he was made prime minister, and entrusted with almost absolute power, which he used firmly in the prosecution of his reformatory measures, but with eminent discretion and benignity. Under his administration of the government, reformation made rapid strides, and the kingdom of Loo became a model State in the empire. The nobles were more just and equitable; the poor were not oppressed as before; internal improvements proceeded admirably; righteousness was the foundation, and benevolence the spirit, of all laws and institutions.

For four years Confucius steadily pursued this course; the result being that virtue, happiness, and prosperity reigned throughout the kingdom. But his enemies were not inactive. Both in his own and the neighboring provinces there were those who hated this straightforward reformer, this rigid moralist. His own king, also, who was rather a voluptuous prince, was becoming tired of his virtuous minister. A king of one of the adjacent States took advantage of the weakness and dissatisfaction of the king of Loo, and sent him some very handsome women who were able to persuade and induce him at last to expel Confucius from the government, and give it over to a laxer reign of morals. And now once more was Confucius driven from his native State and from all power in the government, which he never again served in any official capacity. He resumed his wandering career as teacher, and travelled towards the west of the empire. He was pursued by his enemies, and only by concealment and disguise was the faithful ex-prime minister able to preserve his life. As he began his wanderings again, it is said he was melancholy and depressed; and that as he travelled along he gave vent to his feelings in verse, of which these lines were a part:—

"How is it, O azure Heaven,
 From my home I thus am driven,
 Through the land my way to trace,
 With no certain dwelling-place?
 Dark, dark, the minds of men!
 Worth in vain comes to their ken.
 Hasten on my term of years:
 Old age, desolate, now appears."

For twelve years Confucius wandered from province to province, having, like another great but unappreciated soul, hardly "where to lay his head." At first he was harassed, persecuted, hunted; but gradually the fierceness of feeling against him abated, and he was allowed to travel and teach in quiet. A faithful little band of disciples collected around him in the course of his wanderings, and freely shared his homelessness, his hardships, for the sake of his society and his teachings. This little band in time increased to thousands; but it is said that, although seventy-two of these were particularly attached to him, only ten were "truly wise." With these ten he at last retired to a quiet valley in his native province, where, in the midst of his disciples, he passed the remaining five years of his life in collating and writing commentaries upon the sacred scriptures of his people. These sacred scriptures, as they received their finishing touch from Confucius, have been for the last twenty-three centuries the fountains of wisdom and goodness to all China, and during this time have exercised an incalculable influence on a third part of the human race.

At the age of seventy-three Confucius died, in the quiet valley, in the midst of his ten faithful and "truly wise" disciples. A few days before his death, while he was tottering about the house, he was heard to say, probably in allusion to himself:—

"The great mountain is broken!
 The strong beam is thrown down!
 The wise man has decayed!"

Confucius, although he experienced great persecution and hostility while living, and was allowed to die in obscurity, has received since his death the profoundest veneration from his people. They have well-nigh made a god of him, as so many Christians have of Jesus, and so many Buddhists have of Sakya Muni. He is remembered as the "Most Holy Ancient Teacher Confucius." In a short biography of him, the writer closes with this climax of eulogy

"Confucius! Confucius! How great is Confucius!
 Before Confucius there never was a Confucius!
 Since Confucius there never has been a Confucius!
 Confucius! Confucius! How great is Confucius!"

The valley in which he died has been in all succeeding ages a sacred shrine—a place of pilgrimage to which millions have journeyed, in order to behold and touch the tomb of the great Sage and Teacher. In every city of the empire—of the first, second, and third class—there is at least one temple dedicated to Confucius, and the emperor and all his officers are required to worship there. A plain tablet is erected above the altar; sweet-smelling gums are burned before it, with frankincense and tapers; fruit, wine, and flowers are placed upon the altar, and appropriate verses of Scripture are chanted; the ceremony concludes with an address, or prayer, from the highest dignitary present.

CHARACTER AND CONSCIOUSNESS OF CONFUCIUS.

Confucius was a strict and high-toned moralist. This is his distinguishing characteristic, that in precept and example he was a teacher of morals, and of the method of applying them to every-day life, to the family, and to the State. He was a reformer and a philosopher, rather than a prophet or a seer. He said little about another life, little about God—though it is plain, from what he did say, that he believed in both; yet of both he spoke as a philosopher modestly and becomingly. But he was very earnest to make this life and this world what they should be, thinking doubtless that the next would take care of itself. Do justly here and now; stop your lying, your cheating, your defrauding, your oppressing of the poor, your stealing from the State, your quarrelling in families, your licentiousness, your immorality, your public and private sinning!—stop all these, cleanse your hearts, rectify your lives, enlighten your minds, order your political and social relations, build your home and your State on purity, justice, righteousness; prepare not to die, but prepare to LIVE; strive to make all the sources, the channels, the outcomes of this present life good and true and noble!—this was the burden of the teaching of Confucius. The aim and object of it was to make good men and good women, good homes and good States, to make society right. He taught morality more than religion. He dealt more with those relations which men have towards one another, than with those they are supposed to have towards God.

Confucius was not egotistic. He did not claim to be perfect either in character or doctrine; although some of his disciples said of him, "As the heavens cannot be scaled even by the highest ladder, so no man can attain to Confucius;" "he is the equal of Heaven." Yet Confucius never made any such claim for himself. The most, in the direction of self-appreciation, which we find in his words, is this: "At fifteen, I had my mind bent on learning. At thirty, I stood firm. At forty, I had no doubt. At fifty, I knew the decrees of Heaven. At sixty, my ear was an obedient organ for the reception of the truth. At seventy, I could follow what my heart desired, without transgressing what was right." This last attainment, though a very high one, was gradually arrived at. It took him, he says, seventy years to come to that point in moral progress, where he desired and willed only what was right. Modestly speaking of himself at another time, he says: "I was not born endowed with all knowledge. I am merely a man who loves the ancients (wisdom), and do all I can to arrive at truth." There were some subjects that Confucius confessed frankly he did not know much about, and about which therefore he said little. One of these was the future life. Some one asked him once what death was. He memorably replied, "When I know not the nature of life, how shall I inform you what death is?" And again, when he was begged to teach one how to die well, he said: "You have not yet learned to live well; when you have learned that, you will know how to die well." Once he said, "I cannot bear to hear myself called equal to the sages and the good. All that can be said of me is that I study with delight the conduct of the sages, and instruct men without weariness therein." He was not only humble, but he was free from dogmatism. In his precepts, as perpetuated by his disciples, there is nothing austere or bigoted; no evidence of any attempt to tyrannize over or to bind down the minds of his followers to any rigid, narrow rule of his own. On the contrary, he desired them to be open to every enlivening and ennobling idea; to study and reverence the sublime; to make their hearts susceptible to every virtuous and inspiring influence. Indeed, one of his noblest sayings is this: "The superior man is catholic, and no partisan. The mean man is a partisan, and not catholic." What a precious morsel of wisdom is that, to come from a "poor heathen"! Cannot even Christians be instructed by it?

Simple and natural as Confucius was, however, in his manner of life and method of teaching, like all great souls he felt himself to be a man of destiny; to have had his origin in the bosom of infinite purposes. He believed and said that he was commissioned by Heaven to restore the purity of the ancient religion, and to lead men to be virtuous. And like all great souls, also, who by their very greatness are isolated from other men, he felt his loneliness; and he said, "Alas! there is no one that knows me. I do not murmur against Heaven. I do not grumble against men. My studies lie low, and my penetration rises high. But there is Heaven: that knows me!" Can anything be more beautiful and touching than this? He cherishes no hard or uncharitable feeling towards men, because they do not understand him. He rebels not against the decree of Heaven, in that it is severe and disappointing and grievous; but looks to Heaven, rather, for approbation and true appreciation. He says again: "If Heaven had wished to let the cause of truth perish, then I, a future mortal, should not have had such a relation to that cause; while Heaven does not let the cause of truth perish, what can the people do to me?"

WHAT CONFUCIUS TAUGHT.

The disciples of Confucius say that there were four things which the Master taught—Letters, Ethics, Devotion of Soul, and Truthfulness. They say, also, that there were four things from which the Master was entirely free—he had no foregone conclusions, no arbitrary predeterminations, no obstinacy, and no egotism. There are some, perhaps, who might think he had no reverence, if they were to be told this little anecdote of him: He was very sick at one time, and one of his disciples asked leave to pray for him. "May such a thing be done?" inquired Confucius. "It may," returned the disciple, and immediately quoted from some sacred writing to prove it. Confucius merely replied, "My praying has been for a long time,"—which signified that he had great faith in virtue, and thought a true life to be the most efficacious prayer. Another of his disciples sums up his Master's teachings thus: "The doctrine of our Master is, to be true to the principles of our nature, and the benevolent exercise of them to others. This and nothing more." To those who believe that the principles of our nature are evil, this would not be satisfactory. But those who believe that the principles of our nature are noble and true—as Confucius did—will find this teaching of the Chinese sage nearly if not quite complete.

But let us now consider more in detail the doctrine of Confucius, and try to discover what he did teach, and what his views were, upon the various subjects which the word religion covers.

GOD, MAN, AND FUTURE LIFE.

I have remarked already that he did not say much about God; his teachings were very little taken up with allusions to Deity, or with remarks upon our relations and duties to Him. But shall we therefore conclude (as some have) that he did not recognize God at all in his system; that he did not feel or indicate any relationship whatever as existing between man and a Supreme Being? This would be far from doing justice to the religious opinions and teachings of Confucius. His reticence concerning subjects transcending the comprehension of the human intellect proceeded, not so much from lack of any deep convictions which he himself may have had upon those subjects, but from his real sincerity and modesty. He did not wish to tell more than he knew; he did not wish to dogmatize about that which was susceptible of various interpretations and definitions. And in this he is much to be commended. Well would it be for the truth, and for man's successful apprehension of it, if all religious teachers would assume no more than they can prove, and be careful never to substitute dogmatism for demonstration.

But Confucius was not an atheist, in the bald sense of that word. He gives brief but decisive evidence of believing in God as the Law and Order of the universe, as the Parent of mankind. This is the doctrine that is found in the sacred scriptures which he edited and endorsed. In these scriptures we are informed of "One Invisible Being," who is called Chang-ti, or Tien—the first word meaning Supreme Ruler, and the second meaning Heaven. This deity is described as the Original Principle of all things; almighty, omniscient, knowing the inmost secrets of the heart, watching over the conduct of the universe, and permitting nothing to happen contrary to his will. Here is a remarkable passage in those scriptures, which is equal to the most spiritual to be found in the Christian Bible: "When thou art in the secret places of thy house, do not say, None sees me; for there is an Intelligent Spirit who seeth all. Tien, the Supreme, pierces into the recesses of the heart, as light penetrates into a dark room. We must endeavor to be in harmony with his light, like a musical instrument perfectly attuned. He seeks to enlighten us continually; but, by our disorderly passions, we close the entrance to our souls."

The Confucian Scriptures plainly teach that it is the privilege of all men to reverence and honor God, by obeying his law written in their hearts, and seeking his blessing in all their ways. That this idea of God was a spiritual one is indicated by the fact that no image was formed of him, and that the Chinese have never thought of fashioning a likeness of the Supreme Being. What images or idols they may have, and employ in their worship, must be—like those of Catholic Christians—representatives of some subordinate deities or spirits.

Now this is the plain recognition of a Great First Cause, a Divine Providence, which Confucius found in the ancient Chinese Scriptures, and which he transmitted in them to posterity. There is nothing in his teaching which contradicts this idea; and while there is not much that enlarges upon it, there are not a few things that go to confirm it. For instance, the virtue or the religion which he teaches, he divides into two great parts: the first is reverence and worship of God, and respect of parents and those in authority; the second is justice or equity, which consists in giving to every man his due. This is nothing else than what Christians call piety and philanthropy, or love towards God and love towards man. And this is just what Confucius taught; only he would impress it upon us that loving man and revering the good that is in him is the best way of loving God and revering Him.

There is one very distinguishing and highly commendable feature in the doctrine of Confucius, as regards man; and that is the teaching that human nature originally and essentially is upright and pure. The doctrine of original sin and total depravity—which Evangelical Christians so much lay stress upon—receives the utter go-by from Confucius. He knows nothing of it, but he strongly affirms the opposite doctrine,—the dignity of human nature. All his moral teachings are based on this presumption, that man was made for goodness, for perfection; and that if he will but follow out the law of his original nature he will surely reach holiness and happiness. "The nature of man is upright," he says. "Man is born for uprightness." "If in the course of his life he loses this uprightness of nature, he removes far from him all happiness." But if man, by sin, obscures the natural brightness of his heart, Confucius teaches that he can recover it,—not by dipping it in the blood of some vicarious sacrifice, but by repenting of his sins, and leaving his vices behind him, and cleaving unto that which is good. There is no more prominent and pronounced doctrine in the whole Confucian system than this of the natural good heart, and the natural means of keeping and restoring it; and there is no more fundamental and important doctrine of natural religion than this. The difference between that religious system which is based on the assumption that human nature is inherently bad, and that other system based on the belief that human nature is inherently good, is immense, and is in favor of the latter. If the religion of Confucius had no other claim to our attention and our respect than that it affirmed so emphatically the dignity of our common human nature and its inborn high capacities for good, its claim would be most strong and commanding; and we should be obliged to rank it, in this particular, with the latest and noblest form of religion that the world knows.

In regard to the doctrine of a future life, Confucius, as I have already remarked, did not say much. And yet he said enough to show that he had faith that the soul was immortal. Indeed, this is implied in his claiming for it the possibility of perfection. That perfection he did not look for in any limited period of the soul's career, but throughout its whole course of progress towards the "Sovereign Good." The Chinese Scriptures indicate plainly that the people looked forward to a death after life. Indeed, they seemed to have had somewhat of the modern spiritualistic notion. They believed that spirits of the departed had a knowledge of the circumstances of their friends on earth, and were able to affect them. They went to the shrines erected to these departed spirits, and there they communicated with them, and received information of important events about to happen,—indeed obtained advice as to how family and State affairs should be administered. This is at least enough to show that the Chinese believed in the future existence of souls; and to this day they are careful to observe, not only the usual rites of respect due to the dead, but even forms of worship to departed ancestors, to holy men and sages. Here is a beautiful sentence from Confucius' sayings, which shows that he did not limit spiritual existence to this visible and corporeal state: "An ocean of invisible intelligences surrounds us everywhere. If you look for them you cannot see them; if you listen you cannot hear them. They cause men to purify and sanctify their hearts. . . . They are everywhere above us, on the right hand and on the left. Their coming cannot be calculated. How important that we should not neglect them!"

NO HELL AND NO DEVIL.

It is quite remarkable that, although the Chinese believed in a heaven, they did not believe in any hell. There is nothing in the sacred scriptures, or in the teachings of Confucius, about any place of punishment hereafter. The good are spoken of as being in heaven, as being near to Chang-ti, or God; but the evil are not mentioned at all: no place is assigned to them, no condition is described for them. Indeed, it would seem to have been a part of the Chinese and Confucian system that the sinful should get rectified in this life; that they should at least be started here on the right road, and turned into the one great common path leading towards goodness and perfection. Either this was their idea, or else, without saying it, they believed in the annihilation of the wicked at death; and so had only the good to dispose of after. Certain it is that, unlike all other religions, the horrors of a theological hell had no place in the religion of the Chinese. There is no "smoke of torment rising up forever" there; no "lake burning with fire and brimstone" for all unbelievers and sinners.

And not only do the Chinese have no hell, they also, as a matter of course, have no devil. To them God is all in all. He is the great emperor, the great ruler of the universe, whose sovereignty is so absolute, whose government is so complete, that there is no room anywhere for a successful rival or opponent. God so entirely fills the circle of infinite power, that he pushes the devil altogether out of existence, and there is no place for him to occupy, no vocation for him to follow.

REWARDS AND PUNISHMENTS.

But the Chinese believe, and Confucius taught, the doctrine of rewards and punishments. They make a clear and firm distinction between good and evil, right and wrong, truth and error; and teach that to one belongs happiness, and to the other unhappiness. The results, however, attending upon virtuous or vicious conduct are only alluded to as transpiring in this present state of existence; nothing is said about what may happen hereafter. Be virtuous now, they say, because only in this way can you have a good and happy state of society. Nothing is lispied about any future consequences; those are left where they belong,—in the bosom of the great unknown and untried. But present duties and present consequences—those are obvious, those are real, those are imperative; and upon those they put their emphasis. While we may believe, if possible, that the consequences of our acts run over into the next life, and that of the characters formed here we reap the inevitable fruits hereafter, yet it is not an unpleasant experience to find one among all the religions of the world, which gives its well-nigh exclusive attention to present duties and present opportunities; to the making this earth heavenly and this life divine, without setting before us the ordinary vulgar incentives of a black-mouthed hell or a golden-doored heaven. The present alone is real. Duty is commanding now. Opportunity is the offer of to-day. If we are wise and great we shall be not anxious to know the future, but shall seek at once to plant our feet on eternal principles, to live in obedience to eternal laws; knowing that only as our life is made of imperishable qualities will it have an imperishable existence, and that virtuous happiness now is the only guarantee of virtuous happiness at any other time.

CONFUCIAN MAXIMS.

Confucius gave many wise maxims upon many different subjects to his disciples, not a few of which happily have been preserved and transmitted to our present time. From among the large number I will endeavor to select those most full of meaning, and having the widest general application.

Concerning friendship, he says: "There are three friendships which are advantageous, and three which are injurious. Friendship with the upright, friendship with the sincere, and friendship with the man of much information—these are advantageous. Friendship with the man of specious airs, friendship with the insinuatingly soft, friendship with the glib-tongued—these are injurious."

Concerning the selection of a place of residence, he says: "It is virtuous manners which constitute the excellence of a neighborhood. If a man in selecting a residence do not fix on one where such prevail, how can he be wise?"

Giving advice to a young man, he said: "A youth when at home should be filial, and when abroad respectful to his elders. He should be earnest and truthful. He should overflow in love to all, and cultivate the friendship of the good. When he has time and opportunity, after these things, he should employ them in study." What parent but would be glad to have his son heed this advice of a "heathen"?

Concerning virtue, he gives among other maxims the following:—

"Is he not a man of complete virtue who feels no discomposure though men may take no note of him?"

"It is only the truly virtuous man who can love or who can hate others."

"The superior man does not, even for the space of a single meal, act contrary to virtue. In moments of haste he cleaves to it. In seasons of danger he cleaves to it."

"A man whose mind is set on virtue, and who yet is not willing for her sake to put up with bad food and bad clothes, is not fit to be discoursed with."

"If doing what ought to be done be made the first business, and success a secondary consideration,—is not this the way to exalt virtue? To assail one's own wickedness, and not assail that of others,—is not this the way to correct inward evil?"

"The man who, in the view of gain, thinks of righteousness; who, in the view of danger, is prepared to give up his life (for righteousness); and who does not forget an old agreement, however far back it extends,—such a man may be reckoned a virtuous man."

"The man of virtue will not wish to live at the expense of his virtue,—he will even sacrifice his life to preserve it."

"To be able under all circumstances to practise five things constitutes perfect virtue: these five are gravity, generosity of soul, sincerity, earnestness, and kindness."

"True benevolence is to love all men. Recompense injury with justice, and kindness with kindness."

"There is one word which may serve as a rule of practice for all one's life,—that word is reciprocity. What you do not wish done to yourself, do not do to others."

Confucius has much to say about the "Superior Man." These are some of the descriptions which he gives of him:—

"The superior man follows only what is right."

"The superior man thinks of virtue, the small man thinks of comfort."

"The superior man has neither anxiety nor fear; for where internal examination discovers nothing wrong, what is there to be anxious about, what is there to fear?"

"The superior man bends his attention to what is radical. That being established, all else naturally grows from it. The root of all benevolent actions is filial piety and fraternal love."

"The mind of the superior man is conversant with righteousness; the mind of the mean man is conversant with gain."

"The superior man wishes to be slow in his words, and earnest in his conduct."

"The progress of the superior man is upwards; the progress of the mean man is downwards."

"The superior man in everything considers righteousness to be essential. He performs it devotedly. He brings it forth in humility. He completes it with sincerity."

"What the superior man seeks is in himself; what the mean man seeks is in others."

"The object of the superior man is truth. Riches are not his object. The superior man is anxious lest he should not get truth; he is not anxious lest poverty should come upon him."

Surely, to be a "Superior Man," according to Confucius, is as good, for all useful purposes, as to be a "Christian" according to Christ!

Concerning the formation of character, Confucius says: "Have no depraved thoughts. Hold faithfulness and sincerity as first principles. When you have faults, do not fear to abandon them. You should say, 'I am not concerned that I have no office; I am only concerned how I may fit myself for one. I am not concerned that I am not known; I only seek to be worthy to be known.'

"When you know a thing, hold that you know it; but when you do not know a thing, allow that you do not know it. This is to be truly wise."

"He who cherishes his old knowledge, so as continually to acquire new, he may be a teacher of others."

"They who know the truth are not equal to those who love it; and they who love it are not equal to those who find pleasure in devotion to it. Without truthfulness how is a man to get on?"

"Be moving continually to what is right. Let the will be set on the path of duty. Let every attainment in what is good be firmly held. In learning, learn as if you could not reach your object, and were always fearing lest you should lose it."

"When a number of people are together for a whole day, without their conversation turning on righteousness, and when they are fond of carrying out the suggestions of a small shrewdness, theirs is indeed a hard case."

"If you would one day find yourself renovated, renovate yourself from day to day; yea, let there be daily renovation."

Concerning government, and advice to rulers, Confucius gives some most remarkable precepts, by which we are made easily to understand how it is that China is able to instruct us in the matter of civil-service reform:—

"He who exercises government by means of his virtue may be compared to the north polar star, which keeps its place, and all the stars turn towards it."

"Let the ruler preside over the people with gravity, then they will reverence him. Let him be just and kind to all, then they will be faithful to him. Let him advance the good, set aside the dishonest, and instruct the incompetent; then all will eagerly seek to be virtuous."

"To govern means to rectify. If you lead on the people with correctness, who will dare not to be correct?"

"Let your manifest desires be for what is good, and the people will be good."

"When a prince's personal conduct is correct, his government is effective without the issuing of orders. If his personal conduct is not correct, he may issue orders, but they will not be obeyed."

"If good men were to govern a country in succession for a hundred years, they would be able to transform the violently bad, and dispense with capital punishments."

"If a ruler make his own conduct correct, what difficulty will he have in ruling others? But if he cannot rectify himself, what has he to do with rectifying others?"

"He is a great minister of State, who serves his prince according to what is right, and, when he finds he cannot do so, retires."

"From the emperor down to the mass of the people, all must consider the cultivation of the person the root of everything besides. It cannot be, when the root is neglected, that what should spring from it will be good. On this account, the ruler must himself be possessed of the good qualities, and then he may require them in the people."

"What a man dislikes in his superiors, let him not display in the treatment of his inferiors. What he hates in those who are before him, let him not in that precede those who are behind him. What he hates to receive on the right, let him not bestow on the left."

"Virtue is the root (of a State); wealth is the result. In a State, gain is not to be considered prosperity, but its prosperity will be found in righteousness."

Concerning the family and domestic relations, Confucius and his distinguished disciple, Mencius, have many wise things to utter. No other religion has made so much of marriage and the home as the Chinese religion has; nowhere else do we find such conspicuous and emphatic commendation and honoring of the marital and domestic tie as in the teachings of Confucius and Mencius. The family, they said, was the foundation of the State and society; and if the family were not cherished and purified, then the State and society would decay. Hence much of their religious instruction was made to apply to the forming, the ordering, the perfecting of the home.

Mencius says: "That male and female should dwell together is the greatest of human relations."

Confucius quotes with approbation this saying from one of the sacred scriptures: "Happy union with wife and children is like the music of lutes and harps. Thus may you regulate your family, and enjoy the pleasure of your wife and children."

In the scriptures which he edited, there is extended instruction and advice to both husbands and wives, exhorting them to mutual forbearance and kindness, to harmony and peace, to faithful love and duty. After many pages of minute and excellent admonition and counsel, the whole closes up in this way:—

"If the husband and wife live harmoniously together, then indeed will the breath of purity pervade your dwelling; your family affairs will prosper by degrees, and every day your happiness will be extreme. The plan by which such harmony is to be obtained is none other than this: Ye must love each other tenderly, and treat each other with respect. Thus rich and poor must remain tranquil among themselves; noble and base must mutually bear and forbear. Even when faults occur between husband and wife, both parties must cover these as with a mantle; must make allowances, and bear with patience. Ye should take great pains to instruct and admonish each other, to cause the party in wrong to give ear to reason, and to adopt what is right; ye may not give way to your temper, and storm and get angry."

There are many miscellaneous moral maxims and proverbs scattered throughout the Chinese Scriptures, some of which fell from the lips of Confucius, others from Mencius, still others from earlier sages and prophets. I will quote a few of them here.

Confucius said: "I will not be afflicted at men's not knowing me; I will be afflicted that I do not know men."

"With coarse rice for my food, with water for my drink, and my bended arm for a pillow,—I have still joy (for truth) in the midst of these things. Riches and honors acquired by unrighteousness are to me as a floating cloud."

"When I walk along with two others, they may serve me as my teachers. I will select their good qualities and follow them, their bad qualities and avoid them."

"There may be those who act without knowing why; I do not do so."

"If a man in the morning hear the right way, he may die in the evening without regret."

"Faithfulness and sincerity are the highest things."

"The good man examines his heart, that there may be nothing wrong there, and that he may have no cause of dissatisfaction with himself."

"Worship as though the Deity were present. If my mind is not engaged in my worship, it is as though I worshipped not."

"Be rigid to yourself and gentle to others, and you will have no enemies."

"To know that a thing is right, and not to do it, is weakness."

Mencius said: "Benevolence is the tranquil habitation of man, and righteousness is his straight path. Alas for them who leave the tranquil dwelling empty, and do not reside in it, and who abandon the right path, and do not pursue it! The path of duty lies in what is near, and men seek for it in what is remote; the work of duty lies in what is easy, and men seek for it in what is difficult."

"Let a man not do what his own sense of righteousness tells him not to do; and let him not desire what his sense of righteousness tells him not to desire; to act thus is all he has to do."

"That which is done without man's doing it is from God."

"Death sustained in the discharge of one's duties may correctly be ascribed to the appointment of God. A man should receive submissively what God ordains."

"Be always studious to be in harmony with the laws of God."

"Be strong to do good: that is all your business."

"I like life, and I like righteousness. If I cannot keep the two together, I will let life go and choose righteousness."

"A good man is ashamed of a reputation beyond his merits."

"The benevolent embrace all in their love; but what they consider of the greatest importance is to cultivate an earnest affection for the virtuous."

"The way of truth is like a great road. It is not difficult to know it. The evil is only that men will not seek it. Do you go home and search for it."

"A good man, though poor, does not let go his righteousness; though prosperous, he does not leave the true path."

Here is a fine saying from one of the ancient Chinese sages: "Every day you ought to call out to yourself, 'Old Master! are you at home?' In the evening you ought, in a retired apartment, to ask yourself, saying, 'Do any of the matters which you have attended to to-day wound the heavenly principle, or do they agree with that principle?' If you find your conduct does not correspond with heavenly principle, you ought in future carefully to guard against it."

Here is an admirable one also: "As it is impossible to please men in all things, our only care should be to satisfy our own conscience."

And this: "Those who respect themselves will be honorable; but he who thinks lightly of himself will be held cheap by the world."

Again: "If a man be not enlightened within, what lamp shall he light? If his intentions are not upright, what prayers shall he repeat?"

Something like the sayings which are common among us, and which we get from our Bible, are to be found in Chinese apothegms and proverbs. As for instance these:—

"Prevention is better than cure."

"If the blind lead the blind, both go into the pit."

"The extreme of joy is the beginning of sorrow."

"Every man sees the faults of others, but cannot discern his own."

"Better strong within than strong without."

"What is easily acquired is easily lost."

"Man contrives, but God decrees."

"Better not be than be nothing."

"Man lives one age, the flowers one spring."

"One thread does not make a rope: one swallow does not make a summer."

"Blessings come not in pairs: calamities occur not single."

"True gold does not fear the fire."

"A strife may be properly ended but not properly begun."

"Wine will both finish and furnish business."

"Great humility secures great honor."

"The wise forget past injuries."

"Virtue requires no coloring."

"A gem is not polished without rubbing, nor is man perfected without trials."

"Adversity is necessary to the development of men's virtues."

CONCLUSION.

But it needs not that I should continue my exposition of the religion of Confucius and the Chinese. The mine is very rich, and it might be with interest and profit worked much longer. But I trust we have seen and learned enough of our subject to make us respect it. Do we not see that the five hundred millions of our brethren in China have already a religion which, if they are but faithful to it, will make them as good men and women as Christianity could hope to make them? If in many things we can instruct them, so also in many can they instruct us. The truth is not so fully in our possession that we can pity them as being only in error.

In ethical teachings, Jesus was not more wise than Confucius; while in matters of practical reform,—touching Church, State, and society,—Confucius left a far deeper impress upon his day and nation than Jesus did upon his. What the great Chinese teacher, in comparison with the Judean, may have lacked in spirituality, he more than made up in practicality. He had no fanaticism of Messianism, but he had an untiring zeal as a reformer. If he habitually looked not up, he looked straight and far ahead, and put a powerful-helping hand to the affairs of this life. Social ethics, more than the spiritual life, was the subject that engrossed his mind. Confucius complements Jesus. The limitations of each are apparent. Taken together, they are spherical. The world needs both the dreamer and the organizer, the enthusiast and the humanitarian, the idealist and the actualist. It is seldom that any man combines these two characters in one, to any great degree. There is the transcendental element in the Chinese religion, but it was not the contribution of Confucius. There is the reformatory and organizing spirit in Christianity, but it was not specially imparted to that religion by Jesus. We have to look all round the horizon of humanity, to find the great inspirers and helpers who shall lead the race on to perfection.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE,

AUTHOR OF "THE HISTORY OF COÖPERATION."

George Jacob Holyoake was born in Birmingham, in 1817. He descended from a family of old armorers in that town, who formerly held property on the River Rea and at Sellyoak; but none of it was possessed in the household in which the subject of this memoir was born. His father only inherited the skill of the forge by which his ancestors had been distinguished, and Mr. G. J. Holyoake is accustomed to say he was born with steel and books in his blood. Before he was six years old he worked at making horn buttons—the old copper shank-horn button,—a business conducted by his mother, which had been bequeathed to her. This business she conducted herself till the trade became extinct, in a workshop adjoining her house, where she employed several hands. Afterwards, when still very young, Mr. Holyoake got employment, when his school hours were over, at a tin-plate worker's, he having taken a fancy to making lanterns.

From the age of twelve to twenty-two he worked at the Eagle Foundry, Birmingham, where his father held a situation as foreman of white-smiths for forty years. Mr. Holyoake had the reputation of being a good workman from his earliest youth, and always prides himself that he has forgotten nothing that he had learned, and that he could go back to the bench any day, and work as well as any one in the handicraft trades of iron and steel.

In those days he invented several machines, and had the prospect of becoming a civil engineer; and his name was placed, through Mr. Lloyd, a magistrate of the town, upon George Stephenson's staff. His workshop had to be his college, where he learned at meal hours the tasks which were prescribed for him at the Mechanics' Institution of the town, conducted in those days by Mr. Daniel Wright, a Unitarian gentleman, who had remarkable talent in instruction, and whose ambition it was to teach his pupils to think as well as learn.

Mr. Holyoake's mother, a woman of remarkable piety, sent him to Carr's-lane Sunday-school for several years, in the days of the Rev. Angell James, where he remembered with gratitude only one teacher, Mr. Samuel Timmins, the superintendent of the school, whose ceaseless tenderness and kindness to the poor pupils he alone distinguished and never forgot. Mr. Holyoake subsequently became a Sunday-school teacher in a Baptist society which his mother sometimes frequented; he occasionally went to Harborne, then chiefly known as the place where Thomas Attwood had a seat, the founder of the Birmingham Political Union, a village a few miles from the town, to teach in a Sunday-school there. Afterwards Mr. Holyoake taught what he knew of mathematics and rhetoric in the new meeting-house Unitarian schools, Birmingham, in days when Unitarians mercifully permitted useful information to be taught to working youths on Sundays. At the Mechanics' Institution, Mr. Holyoake was invited by his early friend, Mr. Daniel Baker, and J. S. Murphy, the metaphysical assaiist, still of Birmingham, and his classmate, Dr. Hollick, now in America, to go and hear Robert Owen lecture on one of his visits to that town, in 1837; which led to Mr. Holyoake being associated with the coöperator who had a place of meeting in Allison Street, and afterwards in Lawrence Street Chapel. At the experimental Exhibition of Arts and Manufactures, in 1839, in the Shakspeare Rooms, Birmingham, one of which grew the International Exhibition, Mr. Holyoake was chosen from the Mechanics' Institution to select and superintend the assistants there.

the death of Mr. Wright, which took place suddenly at the Shakspeare Rooms, Mr. Holyoake for some time conducted the classes at the Mechanics' Institution. In 1840 he was appointed one of the Social Missionaries, as the public lecturers on coöperation were called.

As early as 1831, when a mere youth, he held a ticket of membership of the Birmingham Political Union, signed by Robert Kelley Douglas, the popular editor of the Birmingham Journal, and attended political meetings on the spot where the Town Hall now stands.

Birmingham, in 1833, and many years subsequent, displayed an enthusiasm on behalf of coöperation not exceeded by any town in the kingdom. William Ware, of Birmingham, next to Robert Owen the most influential leader of the movement, took an equal interest in political and social improvement; and in this Mr. Holyoake always resembled his eminent townsman, and became early connected with the Chartist and subsequent movements, which proposed further extension of political liberty. It was during the Chartistists in their room in Cheltenham "On Home Colonization," in 1841, that led to imprisonment in Gloucester jail. A question was put to him as to his theological opinions;—his reply was never to introduce them into his lectures on other subjects, and it was because he had not introduced them that the question was put to him. Usually Mr. Holyoake refused to answer such questions, as being irrelevant and impertinent; but at that time a case had occurred in the town which led the public to believe that social advocates were timorous of avowing their opinions. Resolved that this should not be said of him, Mr. Holyoake answered the question directly and explicitly, and was ultimately released from the Gloucester Assizes for the answer he gave. Mr. Justice Erskine, who tried him, admitted it was an honest answer, and gave him six months' imprisonment as an encouragement to youthful candor. Mr. Bransby Cooper, brother of Sir Astley, the chief magistrate of the county, visited the jail before the trial, and told Mr. Holyoake that he could not be allowed to speak in his own defence in court. Mr. Holyoake said in that case he would try, and he spoke nine hours and fifteen minutes. Being satisfied towards evening that the court was hearing him, he concluded his defence at half-past nine at night. Mr. Knight Hunt, who became editor of the Daily News on the retirement of Mr. Charles Dickens, personally reported the trial in full.

For some years Mr. Holyoake was stationed as a coöperative lecturer in Worcester, Sheffield, and Glasgow, speaking at other times in most parts of Great Britain. Observing and condemning the confusion which arose in the early social movements on theology being mixed up with it, he devised a system of secular principles, equally apart from theism and theism, maintaining that wherever a moral end was sought there was a secular as well as religious part to it. An account of this system is given in Chambers' Cyclopædia, and also in Molesworth's History of England.

On the cessation of the New Moral World, which for twelve years represented the coöperative movement, Mr. Holyoake commenced the Reasoner, in which he continued the advocacy of coöperation during thirty volumes. The last volume was conducted by a committee of coöperators in Yorkshire and Lancashire, from regard to the long services rendered to their movement. Being one of those who in 1842 and 1843 visited Rochdale as a lecturer, he encouraged the recommencement of coöperation at that town, and wrote, many years later, the history of the famous store which began there in 1844, a story which has been translated into German, Italian, Spanish, Russian, and circulated or reprinted both in India, America, and Australia. Mr. Holyoake never stipulated or received any advantage from the copyrights of his works, his idea being to advance the objects they represented. He afterwards edited, with Mr. E. O. Greening, the Social Economist, which subsequently became the Agricultural Economist, an important and successful journal till published in London.

At many of the meetings of the Association for Promoting Social Science, Mr. Holyoake has read papers illustrative of coöperative principles and progress. He has edited several of the reports of the annual congresses contributed to the Coöperative News, besides publishing numerous small pamphlets, as new methods of coöperative development seemed to require discussion. He published also a History of Coöperation in Halifax, dedicated to his friend, Mr. Horace Greeley, of the New York Tribune.

He has published many educational books intended for the use of Chartist and coöperative advocates: Mathematics no Mystery; Practical Grammar; Logic of Facts; Public Speaking and Debate; of which Wendell Phillips, of America, lately wrote in honorable praise. The Rev. Dr. Parker, of the City Temple, has, in a very friendly manner, commended his work to the attention of young preachers. The best printed publication in the old Chartist times, the Cause of the People, was edited by Mr. Holyoake and Mr. J. Linton, the eminent wood-engraver, now in America. At one time Mr. Holyoake edited the Spirit of the Age. Among others, one of his contributors has held a high place in the State, owing to the intrepidity of the eminent writers who conducted the Leader newspaper, Mr. Holyoake was associated with that enterprise from the beginning to the end of it. For several years Mr. Holyoake conducted and organized a publishing house in Fleet Street, from which issued every kind of publication of fair intent and dispassionately written. In this house the committee met which opposed the Conspiracy Bill of Lord Palmerston, and led to the overthrow of that Minister. Mr. Holyoake was secretary of the committee. He was afterwards acting secretary of the British Legion sent out to Garibaldi. The committee of organization met at Mr. Holyoake's house. In those days Mazzini and Professor Newman contributed to the Reasoner, edited by Mr. Holyoake, in testimony of the unimpeachable fearlessness which marked the advocacy he conducted.

When no one else could be found to publish the special unstamped newspapers during the final agitation for repealing the taxes on knowledge, Mr. Holyoake undertook to do so, under the direction of Mr. C. D. Collet, the masterly secretary of that movement. The publication of the War Chronicles, devised during the Crimean war, involved Mr. Holyoake in fines of more than £600,000, which, when called upon in the Court of Exchequer to pay, he was under the necessity of asking the Chancellor of the Exchequer to take it weekly, not having that amount by him. The last warrant issued before the repeal of the Acts was against Mr. Holyoake. In this matter, as all others in which he was concerned, Mr. Holyoake followed the rule of never putting himself forward to do the thing in hand; but if no one else would do it, and it ought to be done, he did it.

Mr. Holyoake's opinions have several times been quoted in Parliamentary debates. Under the encouragement of the late Mr. J. S. Mill, Mr. Holyoake became a candidate for the Tower Hamlets, in 1854, but ultimately resigned in favor of Mr. Ayrton. At the election before the last, Mr. Holyoake addressed the electors of Birmingham, desiring, if a working class candidate was chosen, to represent his own town.

Several public discussions, considered to have been of influence in their day, have been held by Mr. Holyoake. Observing that reports had for many years been published by the government on the state of commerce and manufacture abroad, for the use of merchants and manufacturers, Mr. Holyoake at length succeeded in inducing the Foreign Office, in the days of Lord Clarendon, to issue similar reports for the use of working-men from every country abroad where Her Majesty had secretaries of Embassy and Legation.

The plan of these reports was devised and furnished by Mr. Holyoake. They state what the purchasing power of money is in foreign countries compared with England, so that a workman may know, if he earns £2 a week at home or £4 a week abroad, whether he will be better or worse off; what the state of the labor market is in foreign countries; how workmen are hired and housed there; what kind of habitations they would have to occupy; what difficulty his family must have to exist in health; what provision as to clothing they must make; what is the character of workmen in countries abroad; were they good craftsmen; did they take pride in their work, and put their character into it. Such questions were never before put, and never before answered; and no books are more curious and valuable to working-men than these publications of the Foreign Office. Lord Clarendon always said in the handsomest manner in his dispatches that these reports were issued on the suggestion of Mr. Holyoake. After endeavors extending over twenty years, he mainly procured the passing of the Secular Affirmation Act, by which coöperative property was largely secured, many of the most influential managers objecting, like Mr. Holyoake, to take the ordinary oath, not being able to do so in the sense required by the court.

We have said enough now to justify our selection of Mr. Holyoake as one of the coöperative leaders. He has been engaged nearly four years in writing the history of coöperation in England. The curious out-of-the-way facts belonging to the pioneer period from 1812 to 1844 are quite unknown to this generation. The first volume, embracing this period, is expected to be out by the end of this month. Mr. Holyoake has suffered of late from two sharp, recurring attacks of illness, from which he has not yet recovered. A committee, consisting of some of the most eminent leaders of opinion in England, has been formed, with a view to present him with some means which may make work in the future more pleasant to him than in the past.—London Bee-Hive, June 5, 1875.

A FRENCHMAN, near the Canada line, in Vermont, sold a horse to his Yankee neighbor, which he recommended as being a very sound, serviceable animal, in spite of his unprepossessing appearance. To every inquiry of the buyer respecting the qualities of the horse the Frenchman gave a favorable reply, but always commenced his commendation with the depreciatory remark, "He's not look ver good." The Yankee, caring little for the looks of the horse, of which he could judge for himself without the seller's assistance, and being fully persuaded, after minute examination, that the beast was worth the moderate sum asked for him, made his purchase and took him. A few days afterward he returned to the seller in high dudgeon, and declared that he had been cheated in the quality of the horse. "Vat is de mattaire?" said the Frenchman. "Matter!" said the Yankee; "matter enough; the horse can't see! He is as blind as a bat!" "Ah," said the Frenchman; "vat I vas tell you? I vas tell you he vas not look ver good—be gar, I don't know if he look at all!"

"WHEN I MARRIED," said ex-Chancellor of the Exchequer Lowe, at a London dinner-party, "I declared, 'with all my worldly goods I thee endow,' although I hadn't a shilling in the world." "But," chimed in the wife, "you had your splendid talents." "Yes, my dear; but you know I didn't endow you with them," was the right honorable brute's reply.

Poetry.

"WHAT DO I KNOW?"

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

So ran the motto on a seal;
His whose rare wit doth sprightlier dance
Than any other that hath used
The laughter-loving speech of France.

Upon this heaven-kissing hill,
On this midsummer day of days,
That sad old question shoulders in
Among my thoughts of prayer and praise.

What do I know? Not much, alas!
Of all the breadth and depth and height
That presses upon soul and sense
From day to day, from night to night.

And yet I know the light is sweet,
And pleasant 'tis to see the sun,
What time he climbs the eastern hills,
And when his course is nearly done.

I know the look of wind-blown grass,
The quiet rustle of the corn,
The lusty song the thrasher sings
To usher in the glowing morn.

I know to what a merry tune
Yon river ripples on its way,
And how, along its leafy brink,
The drooping branches softly sway.

I know the springs that trickle down
Through many a rod of brush and fern;
Divinely cool, nor Zeus himself
Drank better from Hebe's urn.

I know what fine enchantments lurk
In clouds that trail their shadows dun
O'er hill and vale, or lie at ease
Along the west at set of sun.

I know the night is calm and cool
And welcome when the day is spent;
And, when it fills the sky with stars,
Fills all my soul with sweet content.

But in the worlds of thought and love
Yet more and better things I know
Than this midsummer day of days,
For all its treasures, has to show.

I know that many friends are kind,
That many hearts are fond and true;
I know—but hush! I may not tell
The half I know, Montaigne, to you.

Wherefore, oh sceptic, go and try
Your question in some other ear;
I know enough to keep my heart
Brim full of joy from year to year.

CHESTERFIELD, Mass., July 15, 1875.

—Christian Union.

PAN AVENGED.

Pan is avenged! The fair dethroned gods
Whose awful wail, "Great Pan is dead," proclaimed
The victory of the dying Nazarene—
The gods who, pale with fear and wonderment,
Were stricken on a sudden from their seats—
Who through the years have seen man slaughter man
For the sweet sake of Pan's great conqueror—
Are all avenged. Their memory has been kept
That men may tell their children how of old
Their ancestors were strangely credulous;
They may go now; their places in the past
Are needed for a mightier form than theirs.

Pan is avenged! The cry, "Great Pan is dead,"
Was but the prelude to a deeper wail;
For one whose form doth cover half the world,
Whose strength has gathered with the centuries—
Pan's conqueror,—hath met a plain-faced foe,
Lacking in subtlety and outward grace,
But with an eye that pierceth through the veil
Of mystery the conqueror holds up
To daze men's sight, and with an arm that makes
A mortal wound at every blow it strikes;
And with a stride that moves but slowly, true,
But never draweth back; and with a heart
That dareth all, so that it find the truth.

Pan is avenged! The veil is rent in twain;
Serene-eyed Science standeth in the breach;
The Holy Place, forbidden unto men,
Unknown and unexplored, yet held in awe,
Proves but a vacant chamber. One step more,
Another blow like that which rent the veil,
And through the very wall light shall come in.

—Overland Monthly.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING AUG. 28.

E. S. Brown, $1.10; Wm. Allen, $3.20; J. C. Bills, $3.20; Richard Russell, $3.20; Geo. Maunfeld, $3.20; E. L. Winham, $1; Luke C. Childs, $3.40; A. Eiswald, $3; B. A. Andrews, $8.20; John Ahrens, $1.50; A. C. Erkson, $3; Sarah Woodworth, 50 cents; L. Prang & Co., $3.20; Julia A. J. Perkins, 20 cents; L. Goepfer, 20 cents; Annie T. Wood, 20 cents; Geo. Lewis, 50 cents; Noah Green, 20 cents; L. F. Gardner, 20 cents; A. Craig, $1; Julius A. Risser, $2.75; American News Co., $2.80; Fred Hyde, 90 cents; Wm. Tuttle, $3.25; L. E. Blount, 25 cents; Warren Gri-wold, 30 cents; Roger Sherman, 50 cents; W. F. Johnson, 50 cents; Cash, $1.20; J. Consalus, $7.60; B. F. Dyer, $3.20.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 2, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
ROBERT P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E.
D. CHENEY, Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS
W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
(England), Editorial Contributors.

F. R. A. ANNUAL REPORT.

The Report, in pamphlet form, of the Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association for 1875 is now ready.

It contains an Essay by Wm. C. Gannett, on "Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and an Essay by F. E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. B. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

It can be obtained, in Boston, at A. Williams & Co.'s, and by mail by addressing "Office of Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass."

Price of single copy, 35 cents; package of four copies or more, 25 cents each.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

CALL FOR THE SEPTEMBER CONVENTION.

The Liberal Leagues throughout the country are cordially invited to send five delegates each to a Convention to be held in Philadelphia on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of September next, for the purpose of disseminating our principles and of making arrangements for a general Congress of Liberals to convene next year during the Centennial exhibition. It is very desirable that every Liberal League in America should be fully represented at the September Convention. Now is the time to work. The enemies of religious freedom are busy in preparing to utilize human ignorance and superstition for the strengthening and perpetuating of an organized system of mental repression, hostile alike to science, reason, and the right of private judgment in all matters of faith and conscience.

Let us endeavor to overcome ignorance by intelligence,—superstition by reason. Let each League send a full representation of men and women, so that from the combined wisdom of both sexes and all our societies we may be able to inaugurate a new era of impartial justice, perfect freedom, and scientific religion.

As soon as delegates are elected, Leagues are requested to notify the undersigned, and also THE INDEX.

JOHN S. DYE,

Sec'y Phila. Liberal League,
2527 Brown Street, Phila.

PHILADELPHIA, July 22, 1875.

N. B.—All Liberal Societies which sympathize with the objects of the Liberal Leagues and wish to be represented are included in the above Call.

DELEGATES REPORTED.

PHILADELPHIA LIBERAL LEAGUE.—Carrie S. Burnham (President), John S. Dye (Secretary), Isaac Rhen, Damon Y. Kilgore, Jesse B. Beam.
BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.—F. E. Abbot (President), Geo. A. Bacon (Secretary), A. Bronson Alcott, B. F. Underwood, John Wetherbee.

THE CATHOLIC PERIL.

The Catholic question interests our contributors, as it well may; and we are glad to print in another column of this issue a second thoughtful article on the subject, by a Liberal Christian clergyman writing over the signature of Viator. Last week Mr. Putnam represented the dangers of the "Catholic Conspiracy" as great and serious; while this week Viator considers them as overrated, and less than we have supposed. If indeed we have erred in our view of the situation, it would be quite unworthy of the spirit in which we have always tried to conduct THE INDEX, should we hesitate to admit the force of Viator's demonstration, or in any way evade it. But we remain still unconvinced of our error after giving the most candid consideration to his reasoning, and will proceed to sketch the line of argument which constitutes the proper reply to it in our own mind.

Let us, however, correct incidentally a misapprehension which had better be removed at the outset. Viator says: "You are no alarmist, but upon certain matters it is possible that your fears may get the better of your judgment." It is just possible, on the other hand, that we entertain no more "fears" than Viator himself. Viator, and those who agree with him that there is no special danger from the Catholic Church, will be more likely to do justice to the views of those who see in it the chief reactionary influence of modern politics, if they dismiss at once the notion that the root of the latter opinion is an excess of timidity or weakness of nerve or deficiency of cool-headedness. The question is one of close and wide observation, of deliberate reflection, of careful inference and generalization, and not at all of "fears"; and we shall be more deeply impressed with the wisdom of the rose-colored philosophy, when those who hold it do not betray their own incompetence as observers by attributing to "fear" what is due to the study of important but scarcely noticed facts, to intellectual penetration, and to fixed, stern resolve. Be this as it may, it is well to remember that the best preparation for meeting danger undauntedly at last is to comprehend it thoroughly at first, to take in its full dimensions, and thus to familiarize the mind with what brings to the over-sanguine the surprise, panic, and demoralization of an unforeseen sudden emergency. It is because we hope, not because we fear, that we would rouse to action the indolent and self-complacent liberal public: we fear nothing but their own continued lethargy and neglect of duty.

Look at Europe. Is not the great new empire of Germany taxing her utmost strength to defend her very existence against the machinations of the openly hostile Catholic Church? Is not France swept helplessly backward into a renewed submission to the Pope, through the influence of the great Catholic revival which followed the downfall of the Second Empire and the Commune? Is not Spain, already sick of her brief experiment of republicanism and religious liberty, bloodily debating which of two kings to obey—each of whom pretends to be a little more intensely Catholic than the other; and each of whom, if successful, is ready to extinguish the feeble spark of spiritual freedom that has as yet survived the republic? Is not England convulsed with the Catholic question once more, and does she not tremble to her foundations under the perplexing necessity of deciding whether the Queen or the Pope is entitled to the first place in the hearts of Englishmen? Has not the Pall Mall Budget, referring to the lean and sorry fruits of the "Catholic Emancipation" which has just been glorified so mightily at the celebration of the O'Connell Centenary, groaned out the national confession of failure in dealing with the relations of England to Rome? Its words are too significant, and too applicable here, not to be quoted:

"But the disappointment of reflecting Englishmen in our own day is not altogether of this kind. What they clearly perceive is, not that Roman Catholic emancipation was demonstrably unwise, but that it has in no way solved the most formidable of problems, the question of the proper mode of dealing with the Roman Catholic Church. It might have been reasonably supposed that the grant of absolute equality would have turned the Roman Catholics into citizens of the State like any others, and that the special creed of Ireland would no more affect the interests and policy of the empire than the special creed of Scotland. But they find that a religion with world-wide affinities is not as the faith of a limited community, and that they have given an enormous advantage to a system of aggressive spiritual legislation of which the basis is the denial, and the object the suppression, of most things which Englishmen believe and prize. We may be quite alive to the coarseness of the measures by which German statesmen endeavor to cope with this difficulty; but there is not one Englishman in ten who now thinks that we have successfully, or finally, dealt with it by leaving it to solve itself."

Look now at America in general. Are we not to-day witnessing the strange spectacle of a Catholic curate in Montreal, in obedience to the orders of his Bishop, openly defying in the cathedral of Notre Dame the Privy Council of the Queen of Great Britain, refusing to bury Joseph Guibord in consecrated ground notwithstanding its express command, and teaching all Canada that the Pope's authority overtops that of the Queen? Do we not here see the great European struggle bursting forth like the flames of a volcanic eruption on our own side of the Atlantic, and threatening us with a conflagration almost at our own doors? In Central America have we not just seen a sanguinary riot excited by the Catholic clergy, and immediate admission to heaven promised to the rioters by the Bishop? In South America do we not behold the republic of Ecuador actually swallowed whole by the Church, and the struggle for secular national life going on in all the other States?

But look closer still at the United States. The direct issue between Church and State has not yet been openly made here, for in this country Rome is cunningly biding her time, being content for the present with the fact of rapid and enormous growth in numbers, wealth, and power. But we call attention to a few typical signs of the time.

General Butler is a shrewd man who knows pretty accurately on which side his political bread is buttered; and it may be taken as one of the most significant straws in the current of the time, when such a man as he openly toadies the Roman Catholic priesthood. This is what he did in his recent speech at the O'Connell celebration in Boston, in terms which are too remarkable not to be quoted in this connection. They should be read as having reference to Irish Catholics and as being addressed to an Irish Catholic audience:—

"Some men are opposed to their religion; but who would not prefer the teachings of a Church which inculcates the responsibility of man to man, the responsibility of man to God hereafter for sins committed in the body, to that infidel scepticism that acknowledges no God, no hereafter, no future state, and no responsibility; and teaches that we are like the beasts that perish and go to the ground? Give me, sir, an educated, high-toned, moral, hard-working priesthood, who shall instruct the people in some faith, rather than that no faith, and no instruction, and no religion, that comes to us from some parts of Europe."

Again. The form which the Catholic question has thus far assumed in this country is that one relating to the common schools, the Catholics of the country becoming every day more united in their demands, and in Ohio having made this one of the issues of the present political campaign. The subject is thus referred to by the Christian Union of August 18:—

"The school question—in other words, the question of sectarian instruction in the common schools—is involved in the pending election in Ohio, the Democratic party having taken an attitude friendly to the views of the Catholics. The Catholic Telegraph indicates plainly enough which political party is relied upon to carry out the designs of its denomination: 'The political party with which nine-tenths of the Catholic voters affiliate on account of past services that they will never forget now controls the State. Withdraw the support which Catholics have given to it, and it will fall in this city, county, and State as speedily as it has risen to its long-lost position and power.' The Telegraph further says that 'the unbroken, solid vote of the Catholic citizens of the State will be given to the Democratic party' at the coming election! It may be true that the withdrawal of the Catholic voters would ruin the Democratic party in Ohio; but is not a submission to Catholic authority likely to alienate the support of an equal number of Protestants, and would not that be equally fatal to the party? Protestants will come to this issue regretfully, but they will not tamely submit to the subversion of the common-school system; and if Catholics take the question to the polls, Protestants will meet them there."

Further, this appeal of the Catholic party to the polls, about which so many liberals are either incredulous, jocular, or disdainful, is quietly going on in many quarters, not in a way usually to excite much attention, but yet in a way to secure the substantial fruits of victory. How many of the liberals are even aware that in East St. Louis the Catholics have actually succeeded in getting control of the school system? To show the tactics of the enemy, and to reveal the kind of danger to which the school system is exposed at their hands, we quote the following article from the Louisville (Kentucky) Catholic Advocate of August 12, notwithstanding its length; and we trust that no one of our readers will pass it over unread:—

PRO RATA SCHOOL TAX IN EAST ST. LOUIS.

Having heard, in an unreliable way, that the school trustees of East St. Louis had granted to the Catholic parochial schools their pro rata share of the school fund, we were naturally gladdened, but doubted the truth of the report. Being unwilling to make the Advocate the vehicle of unproven news, we wrote to Very Rev. P. J. O'Falloran, V. F., inquiring into the truth or fallacy of the report, and asking for information as to the means that were adopted to procure so happy a result. The following letter was received in reply:—

EAST ST. LOUIS, Ill., Aug. 4, 1875.

EDITOR CATHOLIC ADVOCATE:—

Yours of the 28th ult. was received, but, being absent from home, I could not answer you ere this. The scrap of news hailing from East St. Louis is true. The board of education permits us to select our own teachers, and they are approved of by the board according to law. Catechism is taught outside of school hours in the school rooms. Our textbooks are all right.

You seem anxious to know how comes it that our schools are supported by the public funds. Well, it is this wise: the majority of our population are Catholics, and they elect Catholic directors. This is the key that solves the grant.

You may make any comment you please. I simply give you the facts as required.

Yours very respectfully,

P. J. O'FALLORAN, V. F.

The Very Rev. gentleman invites us to make any comments we please. The only comment that occurs to us is that Catholics may from this plainly see for themselves that the settlement of this fretted question depends altogether on votes. In cities, where justice to Catholics is most easy, there are always a sufficient number of Catholic voters to turn the tide of election in any way they please, if they will but unite and intelligently use their franchise—the only argument that can reach the non-Catholic public.

It is by no means necessary that Catholics should be in a majority in a community to obtain a division of the school fund—a small return for what they yearly pay for this purpose into the public treasury. It is only necessary that they should allow politicians to divide among themselves, as their own ambition and pecuniary interests will always divide them, and then cast the weight of the Catholic vote in favor of every good man who is willing to support the Catholic claim for justice. In this way a comparatively small band of voters may elect to office men of their own principles.

As an illustration of this statement let us take the August election of 1871 in Louisville. We select the figures of that year because those of the election of the second inst. are not yet returned for Jefferson County. In that election of '71 Governor Leslie was elected over General Harlan. Leslie ran with all the advantages that a Democratic candidate of great popularity possesses in Kentucky, and General Harlan with the disadvantages attendant on being a Republican. We have selected these two candidates in order to bring out the greatest majority attainable in any election contested by Democrat and Republican in Kentucky.

In that election Leslie received from Louisville and the rest of Jefferson County a total vote of 10,195, Harlan 5,532. So in this county Leslie's majority was 4,663. In that election, half this number, that is, 2,332 Democratic voters, held "the balance of power," and could, if they had voted for Harlan, have given him a majority of one vote in the county. As Kentucky Catholics are nearly all Democrats, it is fair to say that all the Catholics that voted in the '71 election voted for Leslie and against Harlan. And it would have taken but 2,332 Catholic votes to have given Harlan a majority in Louisville. It is also safe to say that there are 7,000 Catholic voters in Louisville alone—and not much short of 2,500 in all the societies in the city. So, then, at any time the Catholic societies alone choose to unite and agree upon an election policy, they can give a majority in Louisville to the most unpopular candidate. Judging from what is done at elections we are bound to conclude that our Catholic people are totally ignorant of their own strength, or very indifferent how they use it. Perhaps it is true to say that the great majority are both ignorant and indifferent. There is no gratitude in politics; but interest takes the place of gratitude, and people act accordingly. Catholics have served Democracy for generations, yet the Democratic party in Kentucky to-day robs them yearly of ten dollars per voter for school tax, nor gives them a copper in return. And the Democratic party will always act thus unless they are forced to yield to the cry of justice.

This forcing can be done only by a wholesale desertion of Catholics in Louisville to the ranks of the enemy. This desertion need not be permanent, but only so long as would be necessary to prove to the dominant party that Catholics do not belong soul and body to it; that they will not vote with a party that passes laws to plunder them, and that they will look out for their own interests first, and their neighbors' after. Were 2,500 Catholics in Louisville to vote the Republican ticket for one or two elections, not for love of the Republicans but to show their power to the Democrats, there would be no more trouble about the school tax.

Now these 2,500 votes can easily be mobilized in societies, and it is to be hoped that the coming State Convention, on the 25th inst., will effectively look into the school question, and devise such means as will obtain for the unfortunate and schoolless Catholic children of Louisville the same justice that well-applied votes have obtained in East St. Louis.

Such are a few of the signs of the time—mere specimens of what a vigilant eye may discern every day in the teeming American press. We have hastily brought them together here for a purpose: namely, to show that the same great conflict between the Catholic Church and the secular modern State which is now agitating Europe to its centre is slowly but surely making its way into American politics, and that we are playing the part of idiots to shut our eyes contemptuously or indolently to the vast public danger it involves.

Now what is the argument that Viator, representing a very large number of our most patriotic citizens, advances to prove the unreality of this danger? Briefly, that the Catholics are now, and are likely to remain, in a minority of the whole population; and that no real danger can arise till they constitute a numerical majority of it. What is our general reply to this argument? This—that, as the above article from the Catholic Advocate demonstrates, the danger begins long before the Catholics become a majority, and that it consists in the existence of a powerful, united, and thoroughly disciplined minority, holding the balance of power and utterly unscrupulous in the use of it. We are willing to concede for the sake of argument the main point of Viator, though it is susceptible of considerable modification; but we maintain, nevertheless, that, so long as the great majority of the people are blind to the danger that exists, remains split into endless divisions among themselves, and take no measures for self-defence, they are practically at the mercy of the strong and united minority generalised by the Roman Catholic Bishops.

It is no new thing for a minority to govern. Alexander the Great, with a mere handful of well-organized, well-disciplined soldiers, defeated the swarming myriads of Darius in battle after battle, overthrew the Persian throne, and conquered an empire inconceivably vaster, richer, and more populous than his own little pocket-kingdom of Macedonia. Cortes and Pizarro did the same in Mexico and Peru. Not to go so far from home for illustrations, we need only look at the conquest of the United States not so very long ago by a minority of 300,000 slave-holders, who compelled the North for many decades to obey their imperious will; we need only look at the still more recent conquest of New York by the ridiculously small Tammany Ring, which for years ruled and robbed without check the commercial metropolis of our own country, simply because they were cunning and organized, while the great public were stupid, indifferent, and disunited. What gigantic and persistent exertions were necessary to break the sceptre of this half-dozen of treasury-thieves, and how small has been the success of those who tried to bring them to justice! Has not the arch-thief of the Ring brought to his feet David Dudley Field, one of the most eminent leading lawyers of New York, and by the power of money compelled him to prostitute his great talents to the work of saving to the thief his stolen $6,000,000? Minority, indeed! Has not the world been ruled by minorities from time immemorial? The Catholic party is certainly a minority; nevertheless, it is winning victory after victory over the great helpless majority, and will continue to do so, fastening itself on the neck of the nation like the Old Man of the Sea on the neck of Sinbad the sailor, unless the majority have sense enough to open their eyes and combine to protect their liberties. Consider the chief elements of power possessed by the Catholic party.

1. The Roman Catholic Church is a FOREIGN POLITICAL POWER, aiming at universal dominion and hostile to every fundamental principle of the United States government and Constitution. Planted in American soil, it has but one concentrated and unsleeping ambition—to annex America to the Pope's vast diocese, by substituting the principles of Roman despotism for the principles of American freedom.

2. It is a SINGLE POWER, organized throughout to accomplish its one definite end, and wielding all its vast resources through a close corporation or oligarchy of Bishops. Its policy is unchanging, because seeking only its own aggrandizement; and its despotic organization is so cunningly constructed as to concentrate all its energies on the execution of this one fixed purpose.

3. The number of Catholics in this country is very great, and increasing more rapidly in proportion to the population than all other sects combined. Such, at least, is the statement and the claim.

4. The wealth of the Church, which is the great deadly weapon of its ambition, is already immense, and is accumulating with vast and disproportionate rapidity under the suicidal policy of the non-taxation of church property. With consummate sagacity, the Bishops have it all in their own hands in fee simple, and invest it as much as possible in real estate, holding it untaxed while its value rises through the labors of the outside world. Besides the constant contributions they collect in small sums from all their own members, they thus contrive to levy taxes on the general community, and put their hands into the pocket of every business man in the nation. In this manner they are compelling the American people to forge weapons to be used in the destruction of their own rights and liberties. History and experience go for nothing with the apathetic public, who submit to all this in the half-defined but insane notion that somehow or other the laws of Nature are not the same here as in the Old World. Meanwhile the process continues, and the Roman Catholic Church is becoming by far the richest corporation in the land, with all its despotic money-power in the hands of sixty-four Bishops who use it only to make it greater still.

5. The undoubtedly sincere devotion and self-sacrifice of the Roman Catholic clergy, who suppose themselves to be doing God service in thus working for the aggrandizement of the Church, must be reckoned one of the chief elements of its power; for it enlists conscience on the side of their fanaticism, and commands submission from the ignorant millions they lead. But it is consistent with utter unscrupulousness in dealing with the heretic Protestant and non-Christian community; and thus the operations and plots of the priesthood are disguised from the easy-going, incredulous public.

6. But greater than all these positive sources of strength put together is the weakness of the public conscience and the unsuspiciousness of the public intelligence. The people submit half angrily, half lazily, to the control of caucus managers, petty rings, and utterly selfish politicians, who are all ready to make any sacrifice for immediate partisan success, and therefore to make any bargain, however corrupt, with those who hold the balance of power. Here is the unguarded point in the defences of the public freedom. It is this moral weakness and mental blindness of the people themselves which alone make the Catholic minority dangerous to the country. It will soon hold the balance of power; and therefore, minority though it be, the swarming army of truckling politicians, which controls the course of public affairs in all except great crises, will soon be cringing at its feet. America need fear nothing from Rome, were she only wise and virtuous enough not to entrust her destinies to unworthy hands; and, if she fall a victim at last, she will have only her own lack of virtue and intelligence to thank. But, things being as they are, we concede the full strength of Viator's argument, and reply nevertheless that the Catholic Church in America is a constant menace to liberty and a source of the gravest and most rapidly increasing peril to republican institutions.

And the safeguard?

Not panic, and not persecution; but, on the contrary, as we said last week, the immediate secularization of the State by the abolition of the existing legal privileges of the Church, and the adoption forthwith of the principle of universal guaranteed (or "compulsory") education. There is no need to be terrified, or to have recourse to the slightest oppression of the Catholic Church; but there is most pressing need of universal acquiescence in the "Demands of Liberalism," and of universal adoption of the policy which shall ensure a good elementary education to every child born in the land. These things are just, right, wise, practical, indispensable; and, we say it with utter coolness and deliberation, the continued existence of this free republic depends on their being done—the sooner, the better.

BY THE SEASIDE.

SWAMPSCOTT, Mass., Aug. 16, 1875.

A tempting and friendly offer, which promised to combine home-comfort and quiet with the luxuries of sea-air and bathing, brought me here to this sea-shore town, where the busy merchants of Boston come nightly to refresh their exhausted energies. Little do we see of the fashion and luxury for which the place is famous; but the roll of its chariots and the dust which they create remind us of its presence, and our young maidens wear reform-dress, and go bathing and boating and berrying without any hindrance from Mrs. Grundy. One may be very independent almost anywhere, if one chooses.

The health-giving influences of the sea-air are made still sweeter by the thought of the home for poor children, which a State benevolence has opened a little farther on. For when one sees the prodigality with which Nature has spread this feast of rock and beach and sea and sun and sky and moonlight gleaming on the waters, one feels as if every one of God's children ought to have a chance to bathe in these waters and be healed. We hope the new Lynn railroad will safely carry thousands upon thousands to enjoy their ten-cent ride and bath upon Chelsea Beach. Cannot Boston benevolence annex still more of the sea-shore, and put up the cheapest of houses on some of the beaches, so that every family can get away for a week or so during the summer; and, face to face with old ocean,

"Have glimpses of a faith to make them less forlorn,
Have sight of Proteus rising from the sea,
Or hear old Triton blow his wreathed horn?"

It is a speculation I should like to see tried; and I believe, with Col. Sellers, "there's millions in it."

Another great pleasure of this life is the quiet reading, not confined to hours when one is too weary to do anything else; not in snatches between anxious committee-meetings and busy household duties; but long hours of quiet reading on the piazza, dreaming between the chapters as the eye rooms over sea and land, and giving one's self wholly up to the author's mood, and following where he leads.

So have I read that charming book already noticed in this paper, the Life of Ezra Stiles Gannett, by his son, Wm. C. Gannett; a book which portrays the mind of its subject and reveals the spirit of its writer. A thoroughly good biography is almost as rare as an epic poem. I cannot recall one of the heroes of our own day, whose record has been made by so true and so loving a pen as this. It is as sincere and interesting as the life of Blanco White, and far more beautiful; for we have here not only the intellectual and theological career analyzed and fairly judged, but the poetic imagination of the writer has brought before our eyes all the charm of home life, and the growth and beauty of the affectional relation of pastor and people. It offers a very profound psychological study, and shows us how deeply the Calvinistic influences have struck root in New England nature, and how far their baleful influence may extend. And yet Mr. Gannett is just to Calvinism, and has contributed no small share to one of the most important tasks which lies before Free Religious thinkers; namely, to show the true relation of Calvinism to human nature,—to explain its immense influence, and so, if possible, to retain its strength and value without perpetuating its errors and its horrors.

Catholicism understands well the tender weaknesses and sentimentalities of human nature, and knows how to adapt itself to almost every mood of the soul, giving it palliatives rather than remedies; the stronghold of Calvinism is in the dark, morbid humors which fill the mind with terror, and make the harshest surgery seem the needful cure. Its stronghold is the conscience, capable of the intensest sensibility. In the train of Catholicism come beauty, and peace, and sensuous joy in religion; Calvinism brings strong activities, and stern sense of duty and right. With Dr. Gannett, the high priest of Unitarianism, remained yet much of the influence of Calvinism; and if we must charge it with most of the morbid conscientiousness and narrow views of religion which made his life a tragedy, we must also credit it with much of the strictness of moral obligations, fervid piety, and spirit of self-sacrifice which made him such a power for good in his own day, and such a lesson to ours.

E. D. C.

Communications.

"THE ANIMAL"—ROMAN CATHOLICISM.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I find in your issue of May 13, under the head of "Glimpses," a brief paragraph concerning the opinion of the Boston Advertiser on the "Position of Catholics." You say that the paper referred to "fondles the tiger's cub, and swears it is only a kitten"; and you close the paragraph with the italicized words, "The animal will grow."

You are no alarmist; but upon certain matters it is possible that your fears may get the better of your judgment. I can but think it so in this case; and will try, as best I can, to show the foundation for my thought.

It is true that Catholicism, if an animal, is growing in America. But you will freely admit that its growth is explained by transient, and not by permanent, facts. The number of German, French, Italian, or Spanish Romanists, who come to make their home in the United States, is comparatively trifling. Moreover, the devotedness of these people to their religion is not for a moment to be compared with that of the Irish. In point of fact, it has come very nearly to this: that, if you speak of a Roman Catholic in America, you are almost invariably understood as meaning an Irishman or Irishwoman.

On first sight, this may not carry great weight as an argument. On second sight, there arises a thought; namely, that the fears of danger, if any, to be apprehended are supposed to be based on the present and prospective Irish Catholic population of our country. Not that nationality would produce any marked difference in the feeling of all Catholics, nor in their action, should emergencies arise; but that the chief recruitment of the Romish Church in America is through Irish immigration.

Let us suppose that there are now, in the United States, the entire number of Roman Catholics claimed by themselves—near seven millions. The entire population of Ireland is about five and one-half millions. Careful encyclopædists give eighty per cent. of Romanists. At this rate, the Irish Catholic population of Ireland is about four and one-half millions. Should there be a general exodus of this population, it would augment the number of inhabitants in this country to about forty-five or forty-six millions, of which number eleven and one-half millions would be Irish Catholics. Of Catholics of all other nationalities there may be another million, though hardly more. Indeed, in the seven millions now claimed, at least six in seven are, by birth or descent, Irish. Empty Ireland into the United States, therefore, and we acquire a Catholic population which is to the non-Catholic as about one in four. That it is possible for us to receive this influx within a century may be seen from the fact that emigration from the "Emerald Isle" is at the present rate of five per cent. in five years; chiefly to America. But at the century's end, is it unfair to suppose that the ratio of increase will be such as to keep the proportion of Catholics about the same, certainly not higher?

I grant the possibility, though I doubt the probability, that the colored people of the South may fall into the arms of Mother Church. But if they do, it will still keep the Catholic element about one-third of the entire population, unless, indeed, there should come a great influx of people from other Catholic countries. But if to know the past is to learn the future, as Confucius asserts, the statistics of immigration forbid the fear.

But there is another word to be said. It is a fact beyond dispute that the zealous, ardent, devoted Catholic is the imported article. I have been a close observer of this Catholic question for at least fifteen years; and, if I have discovered anything worth learning, one important truth is that zeal for the Catholic faith is greatly diminished in those children of Catholics who are born in this country. Especially is this noticeable among the males. I hazard the assertion that of the young men of this country, born on this soil, of immigrant Catholic parents, not thirty per cent. of them enter a church twice a year; and often, at such times, it is to come out and joke about the priest or the services. Take the next generation, the grandchildren of such Catholic immigrants, and you will find that only a mere fraction of them claim, or are willing to bear, the name of Catholic. Now I very much doubt the existence of the seven millions of nominal Catholics in the United States. I doubt even if there are five millions. But be this as it may, the proportion who are merely nominal would make a sad (?) gap in the entire number. Whether all this is because "free religion" is in the air, affecting Catholic and Protestant churches about equally, we may not know. But if it be not capable of statistical demonstration, it is at least a "sweet reasonableness" that "the animal" does not grow, healthily, in the air of the Republic. He flourishes best in the quagmires and slums of the Old World.

Much is said by people not over well-informed concerning the remarkable fecundity of Catholic, and especially of Irish, mothers. Well, there is something in this; but are we to fear, therefore, the gradual increase of this part of our population through propagation on our own soil? The paragraph above will partly answer the question, but there is more to be said. The mortality record must be taken into the account. I am not aware of the existence of any statistics bearing directly upon this point, and speaking for the country at large. Until recently, I have given the matter but little attention. But I have in a very short time learned a few important facts bearing on the question.

The city of Lowell, Mass., is perhaps as generally healthy as any other in this country. It has few of those sinks of filth which abound in many other cities. It has ample water supplies. The employments of its people are not of a seriously "wearing" character. In the mills, American, English, Irish, and French Canadian men and women are employed side by side. A sufficiently large estimate of the Catholic population places it at about one-third of the whole number of people in the city. But now mark: the official report by the superintendent of burials of the number of deaths in the city is, for the week ending July 17, 1875: "Buried in the Catholic grounds," ten; all others, five! For the previous week: In Catholic grounds, fourteen; all others, ten! For the week following: In Catholic grounds, ten; others, nine! And so it averages; or has done for the past few months. I cannot believe that Lowell is the sole city in which these things are true. This stern fact tells a story which points its own moral. God send these Catholics better knowledge of hygiene! Human life is too valuable to be so wrecked.

Now, to my own mind, the energetic efforts of the Catholic priesthood in this country arise from the knowledge of these facts. Otherwise than politically, they cannot hope to become dominant here. They know it, and the grand struggle with them is not in some far-off future when their relative strength shall have decreased. It is in the immediate now! They see—and take advantage of what the sight reveals—that politicians are to be bought with votes and money. Not a few are thus already in their pay. They are making one tremendous effort to secure to themselves every possible element of political strength, that so, like the seekers after a Christian Amendment, they may prop up for a time the decaying timbers of a worse than worthless system.

I hope I have not trespassed too largely upon your columns. It seemed to me that these things needed to be said, and your paragraph was a sort of challenge to say them. I don't believe in calling the tiger's cub a kitten; neither do I believe in calling it an elephant.

Yours, VIATOR.

LOWELL, Mass., Aug. 15.

AN OPEN LETTER TO COL. WRIGHT.

COL. C. D. WRIGHT, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics of Labor:

My dear Sir,—I thought that I could not do better with a portion of my recently enforced leisure than to read carefully your last report, fragments of which I had only previously glanced at.

Having read it with great interest and satisfaction, it seems to me only due to those who have prepared a work of so much labor, and in such an evidently honest and impartial spirit—evinced also, as it does, so much mainly sympathy for the disadvantages and sufferings, not to say wrongs, under which the laboring class of our citizens are placed by our present system of industry,—to give some expression to my approbation of your work.

Coming from an unknown and uninfluential member of the class your report so powerfully befriends, I am aware that this will be of no value to you except as an indication that the spirit of fairness displayed is appreciated, to some extent, by those who never expect and seldom receive much consideration from "the powers that be."

I admire, even more than the intelligent review your report exhibits of the condition of the working classes of this commonwealth, the independent and manly tone that pervades the document. I see no indication of a desire to cover up defects, or to conciliate or please important interests or parties; and I believe that you have faithfully and earnestly endeavored to perform the duties of your position.

This faith in your integrity of purpose and openness to conviction emboldens me to call attention to two passages in Chap. 4, Part I, of the Report.

On pages 41 and 42, you present a remedy for "the overhanging domination of capital"; namely, "the elevation of the masses by educating them better."

On page 56, in explaining the effect on male operatives' wages of the introduction of child-labor into factory work, by stimulating the cupidity of employers, you suggest that, instead of denouncing employers, we "should rather find fault with human nature." You add, "And it is in this shape, as pertaining universally to human nature, that it is to be dealt with. It is for legislation to regulate human nature."

Will you pardon me for criticising these two remedies, or rather for making some remarks on them as a text? Not that I am opposed to the education of the masses,—on the contrary, I believe it to be the duty and interest of the State to see that every child born receives the fullest development of all his mental and physical faculties that can be obtained during his minority, and should have an equal start with every other child in his career of life: not that I think the regulation of the faculties of our human nature does not come within the realm of State supervision,—on the contrary, I believe that such regulation in accordance with the fundamental laws governing human relations is one of the most important functions of just government.

But the question is,—and this you do not touch upon, perhaps because it would extend your inquiries too far: Is it possible, under our present social and industrial system, for the State to exercise such supervision?

If the State was really, as it is theoretically, the collective authority of the whole people, governing for the benefit of the whole people, no doubt the interests of a few could be kept subordinate to the interests of all. Every individual citizen would be protected in his rights, but would not be allowed to trespass upon the rights of others. Nor would such a state of things be allowed to exist, as would give any individual or class the control over the means of livelihood and consequent independence of another individual or class. Every citizen would be secured in the just results of his labor, but would not be allowed to appropriate to himself any portion of the labor of others.

How is it now in this commonwealth, in this nation, in this stage of civilization all the world over? Do we not see everywhere two great classes, the rich and the poor? The rich, rich not because of superior natural ability, industry, or providence; but generally by inheritance, by superior advantages in their youth, or by some privilege not enjoyed by the masses of the poor. And the poor, poor not from the want of qualities possessed by the rich, but because of the disadvantages of birth and education, or in consequence of some privilege enjoyed by the others.

I believe it will be found on inquiry that, however great an influence is exercised by the accident of birth and early training, the great fundamental cause of the disparity of classes in wealth and power is to be found in the existence of a privilege held by one class of citizens, which affords to that class a controlling influence over the most important interests of the community.

The privilege I refer to is the private ownership and control by individuals and corporations of public or common wealth. By public or common wealth, I mean that species of wealth the possession of which by private individuals or corporations gives to them power over the lives or independence of their fellows. Such a privilege, in the Southern States before the war, was the right of private property in human beings held as slaves, and bought and sold as chattels in the market. Such a privilege is with us now the—

Right of property in land, and other natural wealth:

The right of property in railways, canals, telegraphs, and other avenues of trade and communication:

The right of property in manufactories, machinery, and other means of productive industry:

The right of property in the commodities and necessities of life, during the process of exchange and transportation.

I believe that these kinds of wealth cannot be considered justly as any other than public wealth, and, as such, ought to be placed under the direction and control of the collective authority of the whole people. If commonwealth means anything, it means this; if democratic government means anything, it means this; if government "of the people, by the people, and for the people" means anything, it means this. For it is only by placing in the hands of the government the power to govern, that just government can be secured.

The governing power of the world to-day is WEALTH: and whoever holds control of the wealth of a nation holds control over all its public interests.

If it can be shown that the wealth of this community is possessed almost exclusively by any class, it is clear that such class is possessed thereby of the governing power, and that it must be considered a privileged class. Our governments, national, state, and municipal, are but its creatures, and as such are subject to its interests and its will.

Also, if it can be shown that the wealth is accumulating more and more in the hands of fewer and fewer of such class, so much more and more is its power absolute and the effect pernicious.

Can any one doubt that this is the state of things to-day in these United States? Witness the growth in numbers and influence of giant corporations controlled by a few leading members of each; witness the general corruption of government, legislative and executive; witness the operations of rings and lobbies; witness the general demoralization of public sentiment. How can we expect then, by educating the masses with a fractional amount of school knowledge, or by reducing the hours of labor of our operatives, or by appealing to the human nature of their employers, to obtain a more equitable distribution of wealth and power, while such a monstrous privilege remains in the hands of such as can secure it? It is not in human nature to give it up. Our system allows and encourages the abuse of one of the best faculties of our nature, the faculty of self-preservation. Every one bewails the growth of selfishness, and our prominent teachers seem to consider that it is a vice inherent in human nature, the removal of which would remove all the evils complained of, and establish the brotherhood of man; but the fact is, in my opinion, that selfishness is but a too great development of the necessary faculty of self-preservation, the cause of which is, not anything wrong in human nature, but a neglect on the part of collective authority to keep a faculty, absolutely necessary in itself, within the proper limits necessary for the good of the whole community.

This is the fatal error in our system of society, and it consists in allowing individuals to exercise control over matters of public interest that can only be justly exercised by the people in their collective capacity.

Meanwhile the evil grows apace. It grows as fast as the growth of machinery and invention. The most rapid advances in science and art only strengthen it. The Church supports it. The press supports it. Public opinion, through all its agencies, supports it.

There is no hope but in conscience,—the conscience of that great body of the middle-class public who do not directly benefit by it, but are, at present, too conservative or too dull to perceive it. How, then, can we reach it? Through a subsidized press—a subsidized pulpit—a subsidized platform,—with editors, preachers, and lecturers interested as they think in maintaining it? We cannot expect many Carlyles or Ruskins willing to sacrifice friends, honor, and fame on the shrine of human progress.

There is one more hope—a terrible hope; and that is fear. The masses will know sooner or later the cause and remedy of their wrongs. They partially know it now. Witness the society of the Internationals,—the bloody and destructive work of the Commune! It is their interest to know it, and they wince under their oppression to-day in every civilized country. Yes; fear may do what conscience will not; but I hardly expect it. History affords us many lessons, but none that I recollect of a great revolution without a life-and-death struggle.

But why have I written all this to you? To incorporate such revolutionary ideas in your next report? No; but simply to suggest matter for your own thought, with the hope, perhaps, that, if you see any truth in them, you may help in your preparation of statistics to collect such facts as will tend to elucidate the right or wrong of these opinions.

Wishing you every success in your important and responsible office, and with great respect,

I am, dear sir, yours,

W. G. H. SMART.

"NATURE AND HUMANITY."

Mr. Charles Moran, in the last number of THE INDEX, undertakes the defence of Nature against the aspersions made upon it in Mr. Mill's Three Essays, and in an article in the Westminster Review based on the Essays. In the course of his criticism he makes a number of assertions without offering any proof of their correctness, and appears to misunderstand the aim of the writers whom he attacks. If Mr. Mill arraigns Nature, his real quarrel is with the theism which is based upon the false assumption that Nature is, on the whole, beneficent. With Nature itself no sensible man would dream of finding fault, any more than he would dream of decreeing a punishment against the bullet which takes away life! It is the sentient agent that propels the bullet who is held responsible. In the same way, when Mr. Mill accuses Nature of wanton cruelty, he does it for the purpose of showing the absurdity of the theory which proclaims the universe to be the work of a Creator who is at once all-wise, all-powerful, and all-good. He says the Creator may be all-powerful or he may be all-good; but he cannot be both; for, if he were, all the current attempts to explain the existence of evil would fall to the ground, and the whole argument from design becomes futile. Mr. Mill's deduction is that the only Creator whom the present share of our knowledge will permit us to believe in is one whose benevolent designs are constantly thwarted by the opposing machinations of an evil principle, and who does the best he can under the circumstances.

When Mr. Moran says that "most of the evils of which the Westminster critic complains are penalties inflicted by Nature for the violation of her laws," he simply repeats one of those gratuitous assumptions which are so often made to do duty as arguments, but which cannot stand the most elementary tests. Take the instance adduced by Mr. Mill, when he points out, as a conspicuous example of the cruelty of Nature, that whenever a human being is brought into the world another is literally stretched upon the rack, and, frequently, is sacrificed. What infraction of the laws of Nature are the pains of childbirth intended to punish? And will Mr.

Moran explain for what transgression the pains of dentition and other sufferings of children are intended to be a penalty? Almost his entire argument reads like a transcript from Voltaire's Candide. Indeed, a paragraph which he quotes from a New York newspaper even seems to be intended as a burlesque upon the optimism of the pious, as may appear from the following sentences:—

"There has been a great deal of talk about the devastations of Nature during the winter just closed. It has been entirely forgotten that all the devastations committed have been owing to man's getting in the way of Nature. The trouble of this harbor has been with the shipping, the ferry-boats, and the public. The trouble of the ocean has been with the steam-ships and the sailing vessels. The trouble with the ice-gorges has been with the villages, bridges, and factories."

If this means anything, it means that Nature is antagonistic to civilization, and delights to destroy what man, through centuries, has laboriously and painfully called into being. And that amounts to conceding the point at issue. Again, Mr. Moran says: "The natural penalties and rewards that follow every action of man are the means by which he is induced, voluntarily (?), to contribute to his own welfare and progress, instead of remaining, like the brute creation, the mere passive recipient of Nature's gratuitous bounties." Without remarking upon the comic effect of the word "voluntarily" in the foregoing sentence, it may be observed that the two ends of it contradict each other. The proportions are: (1) that man's sufferings are inflicted for the purpose of improving him; and (2) that brutes are incapable of improvement. In that case, how are the sufferings to which brutes, equally with man, are subject to be explained away? And how can Nature be absolved from cruelty in their regard?

I refrain from pointing out other inconsistencies and question-beggings in Mr. Moran's article, as I am afraid of trespassing too far upon your space; but there is nothing novel in them, and they have been refuted over and over again within the last hundred years. It is one of the beauties of Nature that error exhibits the most wonderful vitality, and, though often scotched, is seldom killed. A. T.

NEW YORK, August 14, 1875.

NATURE RESPONSIBLE.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—With all diffidence in appearing to be, be it never so humbly, a defender of that great logician and thinker, John Stuart Mill, I should like Mr. Charles Moran to answer the following questions:—

If the seeds that are produced by Nature's monstrous fecundity "become the food of other organisms, or enrich the soil in which they die," who but Nature is responsible for the clumsy means of attaining those ends?

If the "ravages committed by locusts, grasshoppers, and other insects, are mainly due to the destruction by man of birds and other vital organisms that prey on these insects," who made man of such qualities as induced him to this, if Nature did not?

When man launches steam-boats, builds bridges which become engulfed by ice-gorges, scales mountains, dives into the sea, plunges into the bowels of the earth, and, in a word (to use the language of the New York journal which is adopted by Mr. Moran), "tries to cross-examine Nature," and encounters calamity, is it not Nature that impresses him with the faculties which impel him to the several acts?

These questions, if answered in the affirmative, must land us again on the charges made by Mill against Nature.

The fundamental error committed by Mr. Moran is in ignoring Mill's definition of the word "Nature," to which he devotes so considerable a portion of his essay.

That definition includes, as I understand it, not only man's ignorance, but his ambition, his obstinacy, and all his other "natural impulses." If these lead him to destruction, that destruction is one of the results of the clumsy methods by which Nature seeks to obtain her alleged ends.

Yours truly, SAM'L R. HONEY.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 18.

KNOWLEDGE AND FAITH.

How little the faith preached by the Christian minister and sought by the credulous devotee of the Orthodox religion avails in the actual struggle of life! The laws of life are stern and inexorable, and no degree of faith in the supernatural can protect man from the consequences of his ignorance. Weekly do the pulpits of our country inculcate the principles of an anti-natural religion. In the very face of knowledge, superstition is taught as the guide of life. Every principle of reason and common sense which men are accustomed to employ in the practical affairs of this world is set aside by the religious teacher who seeks to perpetuate the old system of supernaturalism.

We hear people of every degree of character and of every condition in life admonished to "come to Christ," and be "one" in this supernatural faith; disregarding the patent truth that a disposition that has been acquired by hereditary laws and long years of natural education cannot be changed in a moment, and that those who have professed Christianity are not one in moral and religious character, any more than the adherents of a political party are one in fidelity and zeal.

Some time ago I attended a meeting of a Baptist congregation, and heard the preacher warn the members of his church against "laying up treasures on earth"; telling them to "take no thought for the morrow," but to trust the Providence that "feeds the sparrow." I looked around on the audience, many of whom had felt the severe hardships of that "ill-matched pair, age and want," during the past year of destitution in our country; and I felt with deep indignation the profane mockery of this ancient superstition. How many of our Western people have been protected from the ravages of want by this blind faith in a supernatural providence during the late famine that has prevailed in their country? How do starving innocence and destitute righteousness confront this doctrine? The wail of suffering that is now heard all over our country, proceeding from the very altars of prayer and faith in many cases, is a crushing refutation of this superstition which the pulpit still teaches, and many good people try to believe. The ever-present laws and facts of Nature are contemptuously ignored by those who claim to teach the "way of life"; and a vain, delusive, impracticable system of superstitions is inculcated instead of the true philosophy of life, which would make men and women strong and self-reliant in the struggle with the evils of this world.

How long must superstition in religion repress the saving philosophy of science, and stupefy the human mind by exacting belief in dogmas that were conceived in ages of ignorance, before the light of knowledge dawned on this benighted world? How long will enlightened men and women support a theology that enslaves reason, by thrusting the supernatural into the affairs of this life, where law and natural causation are seen to prevail by all who have eyes to see and minds to reflect? When will the palpable inconsistencies and absurdities of popular religious belief and teaching be subjected to that common-sense examination which man applies to other subjects, and the false and pernicious cast out of our systems of faith as the errors of science are omitted from new editions of text books?

H. CLAY NEVILLE.

OZARK, Mo., July 31, 1875.

ABOUT "BITTERS": MASKED RUMSELLING.

EDITOR INDEX:—

In view of the artful and persistent advertising of disguised alcoholic poisons, the following extracts from the Annual Address of the President of the Michigan State Board of Health deserve a wide, as well as attentive, reading.

Every paper (glad yours is not one of them) that, "for a consideration," admits to its columns those paragons of puffery above referred to, ought, for the sake of justice and humanity, to print beside them, in every issue, and as conspicuously, Dr. Hitchcock's warning. N. E. BOYD.

PORTLAND, Me., Aug. 4, 1875.

EXTRACTS.

The baneful influence which so-called "patent medicines," and especially those bearing the name "bitters," have in securing recruits to the grand army of inebriates, is a matter of common observation. Some men drink these vile compounds, it is true, intelligently, thinking it a concealed or an excused way of taking whiskey; but many others, somewhat ailing, and for whom a neighbor, or perhaps a lazy or ignorant doctor, has recommended some "bitters," take them in ignorance, and continue to do so until the depraved appetite has been generated and fixed, and the way down to confirmed inebriety is straight and swift.

That I might speak intelligently upon this point, I have requested Prof. R. C. Kedzie to make an analysis of two specimens of these "bitters." I give his analysis below:—

LANSING, Feb. 4, 1874.

H. O. HITCHCOCK, M. D., President of State Board of Health.—Dear Doctor,—I have examined a bottle of "Drake's Plantation Bitters," and find it contains 36.14 per cent. of alcohol. I have also examined a bottle of "Hostetter's Stomach Bitters," and find it contains 40.14 per cent. of alcohol. Very respectfully,

R. C. KEDZIE,

Member of State Board of Health.

The doctor adds, "It is horrible to think that the sick and feeble should be beguiled by the promise and hope of health to resort to the use of these 'bitters'—persons, too, who would recoil from the habitual use of whiskey and rum. Yet if they use these bitters according to directions, and follow this course for any long period of time, they are unwittingly on the road to drunkenness. Any one would recognize this danger, if advised to take 'a wine-glassful' of whiskey or rum before each meal; but when they do the same thing unwarned, they still run the same perilous course so far as the establishment of an alcoholic appetite is concerned."

"Drake's Plantation Bitters contain a pint of poor rum, and four ounces of other material for flavoring, etc. Its use as a morning appetizer old soakers will fully appreciate."

"Hostetter's Bitters are worse than Drake's, as they contain more alcohol, and that more nicely disguised with sugar and aromatics. A bottle of Hostetter's contains the alcohol of one pint of whiskey."

"Is it not the duty of this Board," continues Dr. Hitchcock, "to recommend to the legislature to pass a law requiring that the manufacturers of all such 'bitters,' if they are to be sold at all in this State, should put conspicuously upon the label of each and every bottle the exact per cent. of alcohol in its contents? This would compel these vile compounds at least to take their places with alcoholic drinks, where they belong. Let the failure to label each and every bottle of such medicines sold within the State be visited with condign punishment, both upon the manufacturer and upon the seller."

The legislature has wisely passed an act to prevent the advertisement and sale of drugs and medicines designed to produce criminal abortion; but shall the State put such obstacles in the way of a woman who would prevent herself from becoming the mother of a child by a debased and drunken husband, with all the possibilities attaching to that child of being idiotic, insane, a criminal from inherited predisposition, or a worse drunkard than him who begat him; and shall it not put any obstacle in the way of a father or a mother becoming unwittingly possessed of the drunkard's appetite, and unwittingly made to bequeath to their offspring the drunkard's entailments?

A FIFESHIRE MAN recently took his child to the minister to be baptized, who asked him, "Are you prepared for so solemn and important an occasion?" "Prepared!" he echoed, with some indignation; "I hae a firlo' o' bannock bakin', two hams, an' a gallon o' the best Highland whuskey; an' I wad like to ken what better preparations ye expect frae a man in my condition o' life?"

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 "	8 "	"
" 26 " 51 "	6 "	"
" 52 "	5 "	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
LEADING INDEX WRITERS.
Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. ABBOT, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interest in Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. ABBOT. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. ABBOT. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion;

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual;

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. Voysey has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work: A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights.....	1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.25
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	.75
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
CORBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old. of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grover Holmes, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE. Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous Part I.....	1.50
"Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising— Adam Bede.....	2.00
Romola.....	2.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	2.00
Felix Holt.....	2.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation. 3 vols.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Goethe's Aphorisms.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conscience. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronomics. By J. Ball Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	6.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English by A. J. Ellis and Introduction by B. Jowett, M.A. Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.) Versatilities. Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	1.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.) What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1868.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Undersay towards a Church of the Future, and the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trilby Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates. Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	2.50
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts. Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the Best of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Second, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.2
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Deeds, &c., &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Houses of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Shing and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	3.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	3.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES, IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of TWO DOLLARS.

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00. For sale by

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

B O O K

Card,

—AND—

Job

PRINTING,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 TREMONT PLACE,

BOSTON.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price. Address

THE INDEX,
Tremont Place, Boston.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. Frothingham, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform."

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership."

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Ednah D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by

THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247. Send for Circular.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEXIN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.

Address

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTONEnglish and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

REASONS FOR USING THEEUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY

335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance. Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL, for both sexes, MERIDEN, CONN. EMILY J. LEONARD, Principal.

MORSE'S SUMMER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

FRED GRANT & CO.

A capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

MORSE'S PAINE.PHOTOGRAPHS

For sale at the office of THE INDEX.

Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cts.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.

Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

R E P O R T S ,

SERMONS,

ESSAYS,

and PAMPHLETS,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly printed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 Tremont Place,
BOSTON.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address

THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

JUST PUBLISHED.!!THE SHINING RIVER!!*A New Sabbath-school Song Book.

By H. S. & W. O. PERKINS.

Price 35 cents. $30.00 per hundred.

"Rest in Thee," "What Jesus may Say," "Wandering Child," "What are These?" "Watchman, Awake!" are specimens of the titles of the beautiful new hymns, to sweet new melodies.

THE HIGH SCHOOL CHOIR. By L. O. EMERSON and W. S. TILDEN. Price $1.00. $9.00 per dozen.

The "High School Choir" is similar in general design to the very popular "Hour of Singing," which has been almost universally used in High Schools. The present work is in no way inferior to its predecessor, and is entirely fresh and new.

THE SONG MONARCH. Price 75 cts. $7.50 per dozen. By H. R. PALMER, assisted by L. O. EMERSON.

Do not think of teaching a Singing-school without using this attractive, popular, and useful book.

Specimen copies sent, post-paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,

711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1875.

WHOLE No. 298.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —:

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSES.

THE CATHOLIC RIOT in Montreal over the funeral of Joseph Guibord is a little cloud no bigger than a man's hand; but the shower is coming.

NEW YORK CITY has a debt of $120,000,000, more than one-tenth of its entire assessed value. It is the result of the alliance of Democracy with Catholicism.

MR. D. H. CLARK, whose excellent articles in THE INDEX have been so well appreciated by its readers, has just entered upon his new engagement with the "Cosmians" at Florence, Massachusetts.

THE NUMBER of Presbyterians throughout the world is estimated as 30,000,000, or about a third of the populations classed as Protestant. The new Alliance aims to unite them all in one powerful church.

HOPES ARE cherished by many that the Conference of the Old Catholics, Greeks, and Anglicans at Bonn will lead eventually to the "Reunion of Christendom." How is that to be accomplished, if Rome is left out?

THE BONN CONFERENCE has come to an agreement as to the Procession of the Holy Ghost. This intelligence must bring rapture to all pious souls, whose chief anxiety now will be to know when the Procession starts.

CHURCH UNION is all the rage now-a-days. The believers are closing ranks, while the unbelievers fight "each on his own hook." Old Æsop has a pertinent fable about a bundle of sticks which it might be impertinence to allude to in this presence!

SAYS THE Rocky Mountain News: "The opinion of the best informed is that woman suffrage in Wyoming has resulted in making everything just as it was before, only a little more so." Captain Jack Bunsby, it seems, has got as far West as the Rocky Mountains.

DR. DOELLINGER's plan of confederation and intercommunion among the separated churches is based "on a mutual recognition of primitive truth, which may enable each church to admit members of other communions to its privileges in respect of divine worship and the Christian sacraments. At the same time an actual fusion, or the sacrifice of national or traditional peculiarities of form or church constitution is not contemplated. An unambiguous expression of the substance of Christian Doctrine and Practice as taught by the Bible and Fathers of the Ancient Church is sought as the real bond of union."

AT THE organization of the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance, forty-eight bodies of that denomination, numbering twenty thousand congregations, were represented. Dr. Stuart Robinson moved the first resolution: "That, in the opinion of this meeting, it is highly desirable that means may be devised by which the Presbyterian churches distributed over the world may come into more formal and stated intercourse with one another." A second resolution was moved by Pastor Decophet of the Reformed Church of France: "That this meeting has learned with much satisfaction that it has been resolved to form a Presbyterian Alliance, meeting from time to time in General Council, and cordially desires that the Divine blessing may rest on the scheme which has been so hopefully begun." Dr. Duff, of the Free Church of Scotland, moved the third resolution: "That notwithstanding the aggressive attitude of Romanism, and the wide-spread prevalence of infidelity, and other evils, this meeting looks with perfect confidence to the coming of the time when, according to the word of Scripture prophecy, the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of God, as the waters cover the sea." All the resolutions were unanimously adopted.

A HIGHLY respected correspondent lately referred in these deserved terms to an occasional contributor to THE INDEX whose articles we are always very glad to receive: "You remember, perhaps, the remark I made to you at —, as coming from my departed friend —, that after awhile Radicalism would get in among the Scotch-Irish Presbyterians, and then it would organize and go like wild-fire. You opened your eyes incredulously; but in your correspondent, Dr. S. M. Whistler, you see some justification of —'s remark. Although I have never seen the Doctor, I could tell you of his courage, self-denial, and work done since his conversion to Radicalism. The Doctor is a Scotch Presbyterian by birth and education; and, if we had a hundred like him of organizing capacity, we could revolutionize the country in twenty years. Lord! how it gravels me to see the immense mass of mind, wealth, and influence the Radicals possess, all inert and of no account! What does it mean? If I were thirty years younger, I would make a spoon or spoil a horn!—Thanks for the exposure of C. F. Adams' weakness. He has never made a diagnosis of the Church case any more than Seward did of the State case in 1861, when he predicted in his dispatch to England that the Rebellion would disappear in sixty days."

SUCH UTTERANCES as the following, made in a sermon preached on July 25, by Rev. Florence McCarthy, minister of the Amity Baptist Church, Chicago, show what a vast change is going on all about us in the religious world, however little heeded or understood by the majority of the community: "It is agreed on all hands that the Christian Church is approaching some great convulsion. Tendencies in the public mind which cannot be the effect of design or effort, because they are epidemic and as yet unintelligible, indicate some universal upheaving like that of the sixteenth century as their objective point. The unexampled interest of the human mind in religious speculation, the contempt with which ecclesiastical tribunals are regarded, the growing impotency of creeds to influence human belief, and the merciless exposure of hypocrisy and licentiousness in the pulpit, which is a part of the current reformation, all point, like the handwriting on the wall of Belshazzar's palace, to a moral earthquake, in which all existing religious institutions are to perish, and on the crater and crags of which a new and better religious vegetation is to grow. I love to anticipate it. I am a natural iconoclast, and reverence nothing simply for its age. I luxuriate in the thought that the sects and the creeds, being in their dotage, are slumbering on the brink of eternal obliteration. For I see in it, not the ruin of Christianity, but restoration, and, saturated with that impression, I behold without alarm the gathering storm, and feel without dread the premonitory breaking of the ground under my feet. So far from it, I lift my unterrified face to the heavens, and cry 'Amen! Even so, Lord Jesus, come quickly.' One of the religious evils of which I have long been weary, and which I hope and believe will perish in the coming earthquake, is the professional Christian ministry. The men who occupy the pulpit of to-day are, as a class, unworthy, dishonest, insincere, selfish, corrupt, and useless. They make a trade of religion; they believe only what will pay in money; they are afraid to denounce sin; they live, many of them, in effeminate luxury and elaborate idleness; they are morbid, jealous, bigoted, and cruel; and the sooner they are cut out of the body ecclesiastic, and the sore place burned with moral lunar caustic, the better it will be for their hearers. These evils press upon my mind constantly, and I feel moved to speak to you concerning the kind of ministers of the gospel which this wicked and sorrowing world needs." Mr. McCarthy, it appears, is a lawyer, and earns his own livelihood.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBOO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carrie S. Burnham, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Pictures from My Life.

BY MRS. MARTHA C. WOODWARD.

All our lives memories come back to us in the form of pictures, standing out perfect and distinct from blank surroundings, like mosaics set in ebony ground-work. We have no memory of events before or after; simply the pictures, which are welded together by unnoticeable incidents into that consistent whole which makes up a life.

My first childish memory is of the outside appearance of an unpainted house, surrounded by an indistinct mass of grass and trees, hedged in from a deep sandy road by a zigzag rail fence. One day a deer came bounding across the road, away off in the distance, but plain enough to become daguerreotyped on my memory forever, child as I was. It was a grand sight, as I saw it then, which the long stretch of years since has glorified into a picture famous as one from the old masters. I did not know then, but I know now, that this was my first lesson in grace and grandeur of movement, as well as the deeper lesson which underlies life of the race for freedom, typified by the terror-stricken deer.

All our lives we long to cast off the trammels which bind us in fetters closer and closer, until we stifle or break our bonds, and, like the deer, go bounding away from our pursuers to broader plains, and to fields of deeper verdure, where rivers and skies alone bound our vision. This is our dream, and only a dream; the limitations of our own natures being our real trammels. Again and again we struggle for air and light; and louder the voice is heard of, "Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther." I remember that it was talked about as something of an event that a deer should venture so near the village. Doubtless, hunters were on his track, and he was fleeing for life.

Afterward the picture changes to another and larger house, and grounds about it, in the same vicinity. There is a room where some of the family are sick. They are sick for a long time, as it seems to my childish ideas, and I wander about by myself, everybody in the world seeming to be sick. I avoid the house, except to eat and sleep. I hear them talking about that "neglected child"; but I am only too glad to escape from this mystery of pain, which I cannot understand; and I quietly keep out of the way. I am torn and tanned, as I am told,—a fact supremely indifferent to me; and I vegetate and dream my childish dreams, unconsciously tintured to a sombre hue by the cloud that darkens the house.

The picture fades. It is a spring morning, cold and shivery. Somebody notices that the peach trees are in blossom, and that the frost of the night before, which still whitens the ground, will probably kill the buds. I go out with the rest to examine. The sun now shines brightly; the air is crisp and fresh; I feel its buoyancy, and jump and run; while older and wiser heads are picking the fresh, pungent blossoms to pieces to get at the germ, and wisely shake their heads, and lift up their voices in despondent prophecy of the blighted prospects of the peach crop.

My unquestioning faith in prophecy then made this announcement of deep import. Later in life, my faith in the peach crop would have been unimpaired by croakings of seers or prophets.

My out-door surroundings are all distinct in my memory. I am seated upon the rail fence farthest from the house. There is to be a horse race, which, I have found, is to pass this spot; and I am here to witness it. My coming has been opposed and sneered at in the house, as a very unlady-like taste for a little girl to have; and I feel very much ashamed of myself for being here. I am very sensitive to their remarks, and I feel lowered in my own estimation as I sit here watching for the horses; and, as I think of it, my pleasure is half gone. But, presently, the horses' hoofs come thundering along the road, and every other feeling is drowned in the supreme delight of the moment, when the horses approach faster and faster, and in an instant of time pass and recede in the distance, leaving me in a triumphant glow of enthusiasm, gazing until they become but a speck on the horizon.

Again I remember a day in the deep, dense woods. My father, who delighted in this new and primitive country, entered into its pleasures with real enjoyment; and furthermore took pleasure in having some one of us children in attendance, usually myself, as being more fond of "roughing it" than the others. So we were in the woods, ostensibly for nuts; but I think now that my father loved to penetrate to the very heart of Nature in this way, and liked my childish companionship as a protection from the intense solitude. The trees, as I remember, seemed to me awful in their height and grandeur. It was a sunny autumnal day; the woods were alive with the sounds of its denizens; insects and birds were clamorous; deer were occasionally seen bounding away from our approach. I see the sunlight struggling down through the tall trees, and feel the fresh breath of the woods, as plainly as if it were but yesterday; and I, the child, following my father close, awed and fearful in great Nature's solitude. And when we emerged from these depths to the broad light of day, my father carrying the bag of nuts upon his back, and I walking by his side, we felt like two Rip Van Winkles, returning from a twenty years' sleep.

I know we must have had a dazed appearance after our visit to those "vast primeval shades." We ourselves must have felt disappointed in the common-place indications of civilization which our village presented, after having all day dwelt in Nature's temples, with high, over-arching trees, and glimpses of sunshine penetrating through leaves and branches, and frescoing our shelter in fantastic and beautiful designs,—and all the time having a secret knowledge, which we of course did not mention to each other, of wood nymphs and dryads peeping out from nooks and hollow places in the trees at us. When we came to a fresh green sward, looking as if it had been newly swept, we instinctively knew that fairies had danced there. In some places the moss looked as if it had been crushed; and doubtless they had had a regular break-down the night before in this very spot, and in their abandonment to fun and frolic had sunk down upon the moss, disturbing its smooth surface. They might have been all the time in the tree-tops, pelting us with leaves; it might have been they who shook down the nuts, which we stupidly gathered without knowing that they were fairy gifts. What clumsy stoics we must have seemed to them! How they must have mimicked and made fun of us all day long!

"But then, my dear wood nymphs, dryads, and fairies," I might have said (I did not, but I might have reasoned the case with them in this wise, and I know my father would not have blamed me), "you must remember that you are a fantastic and airy race, like Will-o'-the-wisps, decoying the unwary into lonesome glens and through tangled briers. You simply live for your own pleasures; you gambol and sport in brooks and streams; you frolic in the moonlight, and sink to rest in the bosom of roses; you sip the breath of flowers, and proudly you throne yourself on the leaf of a lily to catch the first rays of the morning sun. In a word, my dear fairies, you are without souls; after a life of pleasure you are but a breath of wind. We, to be sure, beside your fragile forms, appear common and rough; our hands and feet are large; coarse garments clothe us; but we have souls. Therefore we have responsibilities; we have work to do for others; we are gathering these nuts for somebody, and you in sport have helped us in doing so, working better than you knew. There is a legend, dear fairies, that, when we die, we shall rise again in some happier land, provided for us by a kind Father!"

I can imagine that at this they would have made a grand rush for their buttercups and their anemones, to cover themselves from my just reproof; and quietly my father and I would have taken up our bag of nuts, as mortals having cares and responsibilities, turning our backs upon these creatures of a day with contemptuous pity.

No wonder that we should look dazed, and feel dazed, as we entered our village, or even that our civilization should appear such a poor effort. For had we not argued with fairies? Had we not asserted ourselves as mortals? Had not these fairies made an ignominious retreat to their buttercups, leaving us victors of the field?

I can imagine that there would have been wild doings in those grand old woods that night; that wood nymphs, sprites, fairies, elves, and dryads would assemble in solemn conclave to devise means for their better protection against future intrusion, disturbing the birds in the domesticity of their nests by their clamorous arguments. The woodpecker would come out, and beat his tattoo on the big beach-tree, not knowing if war had been declared; and the squirrel would venture out of his hole, cautiously gaze, and with scared eyes run for his life. And I can imagine that all this flourish of trumpets would end in a disorderly break-up, and that soon fun and frolic would take the place of these wise beginnings.

Already, in the brook yonder, naiads are building boats from the leaves of the wild rose-bushes which border its banks, while others are boldly pushing out to sea on one of the petals which the builders have discarded. There is a very whirlwind of flitting sounds in the air; fairies are careering about on moonbeams over the tallest trees, pelting each other with dew-drops, catching at the tiniest twigs, playing pranks upon respectable bugs and insects, who venture to chirp a disapproval of these midnight doings. So it goes on all through the night; but, by the time daylight dawns, and the sun's splendor illuminates the world, these revellers have all trooped back to their haunts. The hunter resting in these great shades through the day is soothed to sleep by their gossip with one another; and, when he wakes, looks about with a dazed feeling, as if he had been entertained with village stories. And well he may; my father and I can understand, for we, too, have been entertained by fairies.

I remember, in those long-ago days, sitting before blazing fires, studying lessons for the next day's triumphs at the village school,—our reputation for erudition being as much at stake then as at any time in after life.

I remember the moonshiny winter evenings, when we were allowed to go out to the fields covered with ice for skating. Then we could not have imagined the walls and amphitheatres and the brilliant illuminations of modern improvements. We should have missed the companionship of the stars; we liked to feel that they were looking down upon us, and shooting about in unusual excitement over our sports. The moon would have been indispensable to our pleasures, affording us the light of her countenance as well as lifting our souls to poetic inspiration by her grandeur of movement, sailing in space far above us. For, though we enjoyed our sports in themselves, we enjoyed more unconsciously to ourselves the poetry of motion and of sounds, the glamour of moonlight, and the twinkling of the stars overhead.

Old Boreas sometimes treated us to a good blowing-up. Whether he did not like our noisy sports, just because he was old and crabbed, I do not know; but suddenly clouds of snow would come down upon us, scattering us to the four winds in search of shelter. In return for this shabby treatment, we would shake our puny fists in his face, and declare that he was a very disagreeable old fellow. Or, if I did not then, I think I should do so now. There is nothing like looking our wrongs squarely in the face, and courageously defying them. I have learned never to cower before a misfortune, but to make a great bound for the reins, taking them in my own hands; and leisurely considering the matter in all its bearings reduce it to philosophical interpretation. I will not be ridden over rough-shod; if my heart is breaking, I must drive. Then I can make great leaps over rough places; but I shall drive with slow and nerveless hand around dead bodies. Fate may guide the reins, but let me hold them.

Nature inclines to meditation. The problems of philosophers are wrought out in her companionship. The soul expands to its full proportions under her ministrations, giving a healthful impulse to vice itself; and, if I unwittingly loved her in those childish days, now in the days of my maturity I worship her, as in her bosom containing the essence of all knowledge.

In memory I hear them talking with anxious voices about that "odd child," wandering off by herself in such a way, and getting tanned to a copper color. I was sorry, and to be called odd was like a blow to me; but I went.

All around the fences in the fields raspberry bushes grew. The field I remember most distinctly is the one where to me a miracle was wrought. All the morning I had picked berries with about my usual success, when suddenly seeing some rocks in the distance surrounded with bushes, I was tempted to venture through the tall, damp grass to reach them,—my desire for investigation overcoming my terror of bugs and snakes, which I must say was the one great drawback to my ruralizing proclivities. Presently, coming upon a small, flat rock overgrown with tangled grass and low, running vines, I knelt down, and parted the foliage with my hands; and lo, a miracle! The ground was covered with deep, large, luscious blackberries, such as never before were seen. I knelt, awed for a moment, gazing upon this phenomenon; I expected them to vanish from before my eyes; but, venturing to pick one, and even to eat it, I found that, like the forbidden fruit of the tree of knowledge, it was pleasant to the taste; and, gaining courage, I picked them all. Venturing still farther on to a clump of higher bushes, I came upon a variety of wild grape, or plum, as they seemed. I have never seen anything like them since.

What convinced me of the fact of this being a miracle was that a day or two after, on going to the same spot, no such bushes or berries were to be found. Some one may incredulously suggest that probably these marvellous berries were simply dew-berries, which, they will say, grow just in this way. Yes, of course; but have I not said that I never saw or tasted any such before? And in any case explanations are odious.

A little incident of my later years comes to my mind, connected with this subject of the unbelief of others in things plain as day to ourselves.

We were sitting on the piazza of our hotel, facing the waters of Lake Superior, watching the arrivals from the boats, each one looking for some familiar face among the number now approaching; when in the crowd we recognized our old friend, Judge, P. from home. Accompanying him were one or two others with whom we were casually acquainted. After greeting them, of course the weather was discussed with the interest exhibited by people who had come so far in search of the cool breezes of the upper lakes. The day was particularly fine and pleasant. Our friend remarked upon it, and compared it with the extreme heat at home, which he declared was intense and unendurable. Just then he was interrupted by one of the companions of his voyage quietly remarking, with unmoved countenance, "that it was just about such a day as this when we left." This remark came from a lady.

Our friend turned, and gave her a look of wondering surprise, and immediately changed the conversation. Nothing more was said then; but, after our return, again meeting him, I alluded to the manner in which he had been snubbed. Whereupon he indignantly broke out with the remark that, of course, she was cold; and added with emphasis that "she would be cold anywhere."

Another picture in my memory of those childish days is of a pair of butternut-stained hands in process of renovation through brushes, soap, and water. I shall never forget the shame of that time. An itinerant writing-master had, it seemed, come to the village, and, as it had long been felt by the family that some civilizing means ought to be used for my improvement, they took advantage of this school, about to be opened, to have me attend. But on inspection it was found that my hands were so thoroughly stained with the butternuts which I had commenced cracking long before they were in a state to be cracked, that at first it was thought I should be unable to hold a pen; and it was thrown at me that I was really not fit to go anywhere. To this day, one discouraging word from my friends is sufficient to dishearten me; and in the more sensitive days of my childhood it amounted to absolute misery. I felt that the wretch did not breathe, so lost to every sense of propriety. Disgrace was imminent, when one day a lady friend came to the house, and, the case being discussed, she volunteered, if I were allowed to go, to undertake the task of erasing the stains from my hands, and reducing them to their usual brown color. This lady was very handsome, and very fastidious, and to have her even look at such hands filled me with shame. Nevertheless, she took me in hand, and the scene of brushing and scrubbing is indelibly impressed upon my mind.

Afterward came those long lonesome summer evenings, when the family were out flitting about among the neighbors, leaving me in the house. But soon, as twilight deepened, and the rooms began to be peopled by unseen inhabitants (which, as my fears grew, seemed to fill the rooms to overflowing, up stairs and down, until I was suffocated and crowded out), with a long breath of relief, I would seat myself upon the front door-steps, in such a way as to guard approach from outside realities, or inside hobgoblins, and with untiring vigilance await their coming.

My surprise would be great, on entering the house at last with the rest, to find no evidence of any other occupancy than ours; although I always fancied that the rooms were a tired, mysterious air, as if borne down by the weight of untold secrets.

We have all been affected in a peculiar manner upon entering rooms after scenes of festivity, by the silent helplessness of the surroundings. Sad forebodings follow us, as we lift the faded garlands. "Gone forever!" is murmured by invisible voices as we pass on. Hurry,—bring the receptacle for the dead leaves and flowers,—let in the sunlight and the fresh air! Pleasure and Pain are then twin sisters—friends always.

My love for flowers, and of proprietorship in them, about this time became a passion. Heretofore the wild-flowers had been sufficient to satisfy me. I had been proprietor of them, so far as discovery went. I knew all their haunts, from the earliest buds in spring. I had watched carefully over them, concealing them from my companions by all sorts of devices. I had covered up with grass and bushes the clump of violets down by the spring, every day stealthily approaching the spot to examine the state of the buds, as well as to assure myself of their concealment being unviolated. I had gathered them in whole handfuls, and tied them in separate bunches for every member of the family. I had transplanted them to my own garden plot. I loved them well as ever.

But I had grown ambitious; some one had given me a double-pink root, a regular garden flower, very different from common wild-flowers, as I began to think. I knew of this pink root in passing the spot where it grew; I had looked with longing eyes upon its deep red blossoms, not dreaming of ever possessing anything so beautiful myself; and when at last a small portion of the root came to me as a gift, absolutely mine, my pride reached its zenith, and immediately I planted myself on heights far above any I had ever occupied before. I judged my less favored companions from these heights. My self-respect rose in proportion, hovering in mid air; finally settling down in calm dignity of demeanor, I bore myself as one having gifts closely allied to the gods.

But this state of feeling was doomed to disastrous overthrow. The pink root had flourished well, at last having put forth a bud which I had watched with jealous care; and when the red petals began to show themselves, I grew ecstatic, though calm, as one in my position might well do, over the wonder which would soon burst upon my expectant gaze. Any morning this new birth might take place, and every morning I was at my post as proprietor, to announce the fact.

It was an ideal morning, this of my disaster. The sun had just risen; dew sparkled on grass and trees. Had I overslept? What omen was this, that the sun should have gotten the start of me? I hurried out into the fresh morning air, turning instinctively toward the garden gate, from which extended a broad expansive walk, as it seemed to me then, straight through the garden, on each side of which were beds where live-forever, flags, and jonquils grew. But not the pink; that was growing in individual beauty at the farther end of the walk.

I hurried on. I knew the pink must be in blossom. I had almost reached the spot, when suddenly I came upon my sister with a pink, the pink, my pink, in her hand! I stood motionless and dumb. I had grown tall and straight; she was tiny and small. As I stood, and as my outraged feelings grew in intensity, I felt that my height increased every moment, until I seemed to have become an avenging giant in stature. If I could have forgiven then, my wrongs might have glorified my life. Without a word I turned, she standing careless and defiant, and seeing a rail which had been detached from the fence close by, I seized it, and deliberately approached her. I do not know how it might have ended, had not my mother interfered; and in a moment, as it were, I was hurled from my lofty estate to deepest humiliation. This was my first experience of my own helplessness,—wronged, unappreciated, and condemned, yet no redress. In an instant of time my greatest pleasure turned to pain, and through no fault of mine.

In after life, all through my life, I have pondered this problem of justice as it is meted out to us, and the solution, so far as I can see, lies in that one word, forgiveness. "Father, forgive them."

We arrive at this condition through experience. Forgiveness is no cant word to be bandied about by priest or bigot, as of scriptural authority only, but a word that must be branded into the soul through the sufferings of a lifetime, which at last lifts us to higher planes. To forgive is godlike; but can we forgive God, since we cannot hope to reach heights grand enough to understand His plan?

There is a stir in the village; there is hurrying to and fro of armed men, from early morn. In a word, the militia are out. There is to be a parade on the square in front of our house. We are all out; everybody is out. They march up the street, in fine style, to the music of the fife and drum. General Brainerd (who has lost an arm, as is vaguely understood, in serving his country; afterward it came out that it was shot off at a fourth of July celebration)—at any rate he ought to have been a general, his bearing is so erect and soldierly—manages his men well, and gives his orders in tones of command through the big trumpet.

How could we have dreamed then of real battlefields? How could we know of the thrill of anguish which would wring our mother-hearts in after years, for children yet unborn? How could we know that we should become the mothers of heroes? Strange that the future was not foreshadowed to us in these mimic wars! We might have known that nothing is lost,—that all things work to some purpose. We might have divined that our sons would do the deeds of these pretenders! But we were no prophets. Through the rosy haze of those far-off future years, we could only discern life's triumphs. Our every effort should be crowned with success. We ourselves were equal to battling with giants. Only after weary years, and as one after another of our illusions have vanished—only after we have laid down all our dreams and hopes,—do we begin to understand that life means renunciation.

TOLEDO, Ohio, June, 1875.

[For THE INDEX.]

SAINTE BEUVE ON PROUDHON.

TRANSLATED BY BENJ. R. TUCKER.

The letters of Proudhon, even outside the circle of his particular friends, always be of value; we can always learn something from them, and here is the proper place to determine the general character of his correspondence. It has always been large, especially since he became so celebrated; and, to tell the truth, I am persuaded that, in the future, the correspondence of Proudhon will be his principal, vital work, and that most of his books will be only accessory to and corroborative of this. At any rate, his books can be well understood only by the aid of his letters, and the continual explanations which he makes to those who consult him in their doubt, and request him to define more clearly his position.

There are, among celebrated people, many methods of correspondence. There are those to whom letter-writing is a bore, and who, assailed with questions and compliments, reply in the greatest haste solely that the job may be over with, and who return politeness for politeness, mingling it with more or less wit. This kind of correspondence, though coming from celebrated people, is insignificant, and unworthy of collection and classification.

After those who write letters in performance of a disagreeable duty, and almost side by side with them in point of insignificance, I should put those who write in a manner wholly external, wholly superficial, devoted only to flattery, lavishing praise, like gold, without counting it; and those who weigh every word, who reply formally and pompously with a view to fine phrases and effects. They exchange words only, and choose them solely for their brilliancy and show. You think it is you, individually, to whom they speak; but they are addressing themselves in your person to the four corners of Europe. Such letters are empty, and teach us nothing but theatrical execution and the favorite pose of their writers.

I will not class among the latter the more prudent and sagacious authors who, when writing to individuals, keep one eye on posterity. We know that many who pursue this method have written long, finished, charming, flattering, and tolerably natural, letters. Beranger furnishes us with the best example of this class.

Proudhon, however, is a man of entirely different nature and habits. In writing, he thinks of nothing but his idea and the person whom he addresses: ad rem et ad hominem. A man of conviction and doctrine, to write does not weary him; to be questioned does not annoy him. When approached, he cares only to know that your motive is not one of futile curiosity, but the love of truth; he assumes you to be serious; he replies; he examines your objections, sometimes verbally, sometimes in writing; for, as he remarks, "if there be some points which correspondence can never settle, but which can be made clear by conversation in two minutes, at other times just the opposite is the case. An objection clearly stated in writing, a doubt well expressed, which elicits a direct and positive reply, helps things along more than two hours of verbal intercourse." In writing to you, he does not hesitate to treat the subject anew; he unfolds to you the foundation and superstructure of his thought; rarely does he confess himself defeated; it is not his way; he holds to his position, but admits the breaks, the variations, in short, the evolution, of his mind. The history of his mind is in his letters: there it must be sought.

Proudhon, whoever addresses him, is always ready. He quits the page of the book on which he is at work to answer you with the same pen, and that without losing patience, without getting confused, without sparing or complaining of his ink. He is a public man, devoted to the propagation of his idea by all methods; and the best method, with him, is always the present one, the latest one. His very handwriting, bold, uniform, legible, even in the most tiresome passages, betrays no haste, no hurry to finish. Each line is accurate; nothing is left to chance; the punctuation, very correct, and a little emphatic and decided, indicates with precision and delicate distinction all the links in the chain of his argument. He is devoted entirely to you, to his business and yours, while writing to you, and never to anything else. All the letters of his I have seen are serious; not one is commonplace.

But at the same time he is not at all artistic or affected. He does not construct his letters; he does not revise them; he spends no time in reading them over. We have a first draught, excellent and clear, a jet from the fountain-head; but that is all. The new arguments, which he discovers in support of his ideas, and which opposition suggests to him, are an agreeable surprise, and shed a light which we should vainly search for even in his works; his correspondence differs essentially from his books, in that it gives you no uneasiness; it places you in the very heart of the man, explains him to you, and leaves you with an impression of moral esteem, and almost of intellectual security. We feel his sincerity. I know of no one to whom he can be more fitly compared in this respect than to George Sand, whose correspondence is large, and at the same time full of sincerity. His rôle and his nature correspond. If he is writing to a young man who unbosoms himself to him in epistolary anxiety, to a young woman who asks him to decide delicate questions of conduct for her, his letter takes the form of a short moral essay,—of a father-confessor's advice. Has he perchance attended the theatre (a rare thing for him) to witness one of Ponsard's comedies, or a drama of Charles Edmond, he feels bound to give an account of his impressions to the friend to whom he is indebted for this pleasure, and his letter becomes a literary and philosophical criticism, full of sense, and like no other. His familiarity is suited to his correspondent; he affects no rudeness. The terms of civility or affection which he employs towards his correspondents are sober, measured, appropriate to each, and honest in their simplicity and cordiality. When he speaks of morals and the family, he seems at times like the patriarchs of the Bible. His command of language is complete, and he never fails to avail himself of it. Now and then a coarse word, a few personalities, too bitter, and quite unjust or injurious, will have to be suppressed in printing; time, however, as it passes away, permits many things, and renders them inoffensive. Am I right in saying that Proudhon's correspondence, always substantial, will one day be the most accessible and attractive portion of his works?

HOW BAR-ROOM LIQUORS ARE MADE.—There may be seen daily on Chestnut Street, says the Philadelphia Bulletin, a man dressed in faultless apparel, with a great diamond upon his breast, vainly endeavoring to outglitter the magnificent solitaire on his finger. In a German university he learned chemistry, and not even Liebig knew it better. His occupation is the mixing and the adulteration of liquors. Give him a dozen casks of deodorized alcohol, and the next day each of them will represent the name of a genuine wine or a popular spirit. He enters a wholesale drug-store, bearing a large basket upon his arm. Five pounds of Iceland moss are first weighed out to him. To raw liquors this imparts a degree of smoothness and oleaginousness that gives to imitation brandy the glibness of that which is most matured. An astringent called catechu, that would almost close the mouth of a glass inkstand, is next in order. A couple of ounces of strychnine, next called for, are quickly conveyed to the vest pocket, and a pound of white vitriol is as silently placed in the bottom of the basket. The oil of cognac, the sulphuric acid, and other articles that give fire and body to the liquid poison, are always kept in store. The mixer buys these things in various quarters. They are staples of the art.

"IF A DOG'S TAIL is cut off entirely, will it not interfere with his locomotion?" "Not exactly; it will not affect his carriage, but it will stop his waggin'."

FROM ENGLAND.

LONDON, August 7.

The villager in little Epworth, Lincolnshire, will still show you on a gravestone in the parish churchyard the footprints of John Wesley. The great preacher, who to his dying day regarding himself as still in orders in the Church of England, and wore gown and surplice whenever he preached, once went back to that, his native place, hoping to tell the congregation in which his childhood had been passed, and which had heard the simple and honest sermons of his father until his lips were sealed in death, what were his real thoughts and feelings which the Church was caricaturing, but which were stirring the heart of the people to its depth. On the fair Sunday morning he approached the door of the little parish church so sacred in his associations, only to find the door barred by Episcopal command, and a large crowd gathered outside. The people wished to break in the door; but "no," said Wesley, "I will speak to you in the graveyard." Followed by the crowd he went into the graveyard, and taking his stand on the marble slab over his dead father, he preached such a sermon as had never before been heard in England. The traditions of it still linger in Epworth; and, as I have said, the peasantry still point to two hollows in the marble slab—worn there by the rains of many years—as the footprints of the holy man. It would no doubt surprise the flax-dressing Epworthites were they told that their superstition linked them across the centuries with those who first worshipped the footprints near Rome, said to have been left by Christ when he appeared there to Peter, and told him he was going to Rome "to be crucified afresh"; as these were linked to those who builded a church on Mt. Olivet over two footprints said to have been left there at the moment of ascension; and they again were linked on to those who, a thousand years before, had worn away with their kisses—while as yet there was no pope to hold out his foot to pilgrims—the footprints of Buddha, Krishna, Vishnu in Ceylon, Siam, and India. Probably, too, it would have surprised John Wesley had he foreknown what footprints he was to leave on his native land. Footprints he has indeed left, visible and invisible. Not altogether beautiful is that which is visible, and it is pretty well typified by those at Epworth, to which rustics pay homage; reminding one unpleasantly of the holy footprint of the Monk Augustine, which the Isle of Manet received when he came to bring Christianity to Britain, and which were visible to the eye of faith until the downfall of Romanism in this country. Wesley has been the means of sanctioning the belief in ghosts, and he gave a new lease of life to sundry other superstitions. The weight of his grand character went to the side of dogma, which has always found it easy to suppress his protest against the dogmatic spirit—which he carried even to the extent of editing the biography of a Unitarian. But the really deep and potent footprint of Wesley was that which he left upon the Church of England when he showed that a nobler life and character could be built up outside of it than in it. When, barred out of the parish church, he preached in the churchyard with an inspiration which all the pulpits in the kingdom put together could not gain, he proved that the Church could shut out the light, but could not shut it in. The power to make any sacred impress on heart or stone was outside there with Wesley, and the blue sky above him, the silent graves beneath him. He broke the old priestly monopoly of virtue forever. The keys of heaven fell from the hand of the Church never to be recovered. There is not one soul of man, woman, or child in this nation, which feels that it is less safe outside the Church than in it. The frantic efforts of the clergy to recover the old charm by the mass-in-masquerade process, by fine altars and candles and orientation, excite amusement, but make no serious impression. The clergy feel instinctively who the man is whose soul goes marching on, making all such efforts ridiculous—who the man was and is whose life represents the solemnity and success of "schism." A few years ago, the bishops seemed to have resolved upon a policy of wheedling the soul of John Wesley out of the land. Making the mistake of thinking that soul was embodied in the Wesleyan denomination, they began to tempt and bribe that sect to reënter the Church. They were too late for that. Methodism had grown strong and wealthy enough to prefer its own organization and first fiddle to the Establishment with second fiddle. So the leaders of the denomination had the inexpressible pleasure of snubbing a bench of bishops. A hundred years had brought round time's revenge, and a bishop was seen unbarring the door of the parish church and beseeching the once excluded prophet to enter, and be sure to bring the body of his society. The snubbed Church has now found its opportunity to return the indignity, but their blow back falls upon the Wesleyans of the visible, not him of the invisible, footprint. It has fallen upon those who wish to make the Methodist denomination a feeble copy of the Establishment. This class is apparently represented by Mr. Keet, who took care to have his child buried in ecclesiastically "consecrated ground," and to flaunt his title of "Reverend" on the gravestone. The clergyman says no, Mr. Keet is not a "Reverend," but a mere Wesleyan, whose orders the clergy cannot respect; and the Dean of Arches (fresh from deciding that a disbeliever in the Devil is a "notorious evil liver") maintains the clergyman in his position. As for this matter of consecrated ground, I recall a story which I heard from the lips of Dean Stanley. He (the Dean) visited the grave of Wesley behind the oldest Methodist chapel in the city, and after reading its touching inscription he asked the old sexton, who stood by with uncovered head, whether it was "consecrated ground." The sexton replied, "Yes." The Dean, who was speaking in the technical sense, further asked, "By whom?" meaning by what bishop. The sexton said: "It is consecrated by the deposition of the dust of the servant of God, John Wesley." The Dean—who will soon place a memorial of the brothers Wesley in Westminster Abbey at his own expense in money, and probably in the howl of a clerical mob—seemed more impressed by the sexton's answer than might have been the case with Mr. Keet, who means to urge his claim to "Rev." before a secular court. It is not the friends of the Church who chiefly hope he will fail. The case belongs to that spirit of nonconformist snobbery which bends low to the Church, aping its fashionableness and coveting its honors, simply because it is established. It is the baser spirit of the Establishment itself, and its success would but secure for that Church to acquire a little less unpopularity by enabling it to turn its enforced broadness into an evidence of catholicity. The Wesleyans in their various divisions have this week been holding their annual assemblies, and exhibit tokens of worldly prosperity; but one would be glad to see fewer of such tokens, with more signs that they are gaining that fervor and freedom which animated the life and preaching of their great founder. At any rate, a society that still has such a man as Morley Punshon might well be indifferent whether he be called Reverend or not. There are, however, indications that the Methodists are sore about the non-recognition of their ministers under that title. They would do well to recall the phenomena of the days of their "first love"; the example, for instance, of John Wesley himself, who did not use the title, and is rightly described on his tomb as "the patron and friend of lay preachers." Still more they should recall some of the warnings of their earliest preachers; as this, which once fell from Dr. James Hamilton—doctor of medicine, not of divinity, which, in those days, was healthy enough without doctors: "Let the formalist and the pharisee, the Church bigot and the sectary, contend for ways of thinking, gestures in worship, and modes of Church government; but may ye never forget that ye are sent for a nobler end; that your commission is the same as St. Paul's, not to baptize, but to preach the gospel. Although I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet, yet forgive me when I express my fears that, if ever the Methodists leave their several churches, if ever ye set up as a separate people by external distinctions and creeds, if ye substitute a silken gown and sash for rough garments and a leather girdle, and call one another Rabbi! Rabbi! then the glory will depart from you, and God will raise up another people." In these words one may see the invisible footprint of John Wesley, and if it be not discovered and "reversed," it will some day be recognizable only on the tomb of one of the sublimest movements which ever recorded its chapter in the religious history of England.

Leaving the Wesleyan side of the new agitation, we may see in the clerical side another indication of the tendency of our dear old Establishment to become a museum of sacred flint implements. Hebrew historians say that only after the great schools of Judea, which gave the term "Rabbi" significance, had decayed, did that title become a coveted designation. The learned also assure us that it was the importance of bridging the Tiber in early times that gave respectability to the "pontifex," or bridge-builder; and that it was only after the Tiber was fully bridged, and the title had lost its significance, that it became grand enough to be assumed by the Pope, along with all other high titles, and give him the affix of Pontiff, or "Pontifex Maximus"—Bridge-builder-in-chief. The English Church has long monopolized the title of "clergyman"—literally, "a writer,"—because once upon a time only priests possessed the clerk's accomplishment. And now the clergy add to their monopoly the title "Reverend," which even in Shakespeare's time was applied to the "most potent, grave, and reverend signiors," the Council of Venice. The Dean of Arches must have less sense of humor, if in his unofficial moments he does not see that he has made the term "Rev." what the savants call a "Survival." But, for that matter, the Dean of Arches is himself a Survival—as much as his wig. His Court survives for a little time the Court of Chancery which that clever Israelite, Sir George Jessel, has just dismissed into the fossil stratum; but he (the Dean) is already dealing with such ancient phantoms as the devil and the clerical titles, and his court cannot continue long after such phantoms are laid. Etymologically, "reverend" means a man to be feared; but the title is much more likely in the future to excite contempt than fear. Its significance, at any rate, is as far past as "venerable," applied to superior archdeacons, who are rarely philological enough to be scandalized by the alleged relation of "venerable" to Venus.

Perhaps I have been too fast in saying that our "reverends" are no longer feared. Whatever may be the case as regards their sacred performances, certainly they are still rather formidable as country magistrates. Their decisions are "survivals" of the Dogberry order; but having the army of England to back them until reversed, they are not without their terrors. Since the Rev. E. Jones sentenced little Sarah Chandler to fourteen days in prison and four years of the Reformatory afterwards for picking one geranium blossom (the child is free, but Jones is still Magistrate), people having children of flower-loving dispositions feel rather uneasy. A gentleman of my acquaintance, whose son is passing his vacation in Hampshire, was made frantic a few days ago, on receiving a letter stating that the lad had been sentenced to prison for a year by a clerical magistrate for gathering honeysuckles at Christ Church, and he had called for a solicitor before discovering that it was a hoax. It never occurred to him or his neighbors that there was any improbability in the story. The general feeling now is that a clerical magistrate is equal to anything whatever in his peculiar line. This week the Rev. G. R. Grey, of Alcester, has sentenced a boy of eight years to one month's imprisonment, to be followed by five years in a Reformatory, for putting tiny pebbles on a railway. The child said he put the pebbles there to hear them "go smudge," but plainly had not the least idea that there was any danger in the act. This clergyman, however, is not such an "evil liver" as to disbelieve in the devil; he saw the boy as one "instigated thereto" by an evil possession. The worst of these cases is that it takes about a week before these reverend fools can be corresponded with and their folly undone, and during that time their victims suffer untold tortures. And yet (if I may be forgiven the iteration) to deal radically with the evil involves so much that no political leader dares attempt it. It would be like the chemist's attempt, in Hawthorne's story, to draw the birthmark from his wife's cheek. Under his potent applications the birthmark finally disappeared, but the wife lay dead. When this country once undertakes to deal with the clerical magistrate, the "lords spiritual" will be found close behind him, and the root of all will be found bound up with the very heart-life of the whole State-Church system.

Under these circumstances, the English radicals are naturally well pleased when their morning paper unfolds a new clerical scandal. The imprisonment of little girls for picking geraniums, and little boys for putting pebbles where they "go smudge," may some day be read as old English folk lore—with Rev. Joneses and Greys for ogres, little Sarahs for beautiful victims, and Home Secretaries for good fairies; but for the present, thousands of children listen while their papas read the deeds of the clerical magistrate with the terror which prepares that worthy's way to ogredom. Poor Saint Nicholas by being held up as a bogey to children had his name identified with Satan, as old Nick; and if the saintly title of "reverend" does not share a similar fate in the rural districts it will not be because its exclusive possessors have failed to invest it with terrors enough for the infant generation.—M. D. C., in Cincinnati Commercial.

THE REUNION OF CHRISTENDOM.

The probable importance of the recent conference at Bonn can hardly be overestimated. It was something more than an assemblage of clergymen to discuss abstruse theological points, although we doubt not that many of our readers who have tried to make out the nice shades of distinction relating to the "procession of the Holy Spirit," which constituted an important portion of their proceedings, considered the whole gathering as utterly without popular interest.

The results of the conference may not be immediately apparent in producing any great popular movement; but it will hardly be an exaggeration to speak of them as laying the foundation for the reunion of the now dismembered portions of the Christian Church. It must be remembered that for some ten centuries there was no formal separation of the Christian Church into the two great divisions of Eastern and Western. There were controversies, it is true, but no formal division took place until about the year A. D. 1054. There were six councils, which are called Ecumenical, in which representatives from the whole Church assembled; viz: Nice, Constantinople, Ephesus, Chalcedon; and twice again at Constantinople, the last in the year A. D. 680.

One of the points leading finally to the separation of the Church into two great fragments was the insertion in the Apostles' Creed by the Western Church of the words "And from the Son," as relating to the Holy Spirit. The Eastern portion declared it an unauthorized addition, because not adopted in a general council. The decrees of the six undoubted general councils were received with the greatest veneration by the whole Church; but the "procession" question led to controversies, and these to others, until finally separation followed.

For a long time past the views and practices of the Eastern Church have been but imperfectly understood, the non-intercourse between the two branches having been very thorough. Within the last twenty-five years a great deal of enthusiasm has been manifested by members of the Church of England to make themselves acquainted with the doctrinal system and ecclesiastical usages of the Russo-Greek or Eastern Church, and various informal conferences have been held leading to the translation of liturgies and catechisms, and the comparing of standard authorities. Of late the Episcopal Church in this country has taken part, and has aided in gaining one very important point; viz: the extension of certain religious privileges by the Greek clergy to members of the Anglican communion sojourning in the limits of the territory of the Eastern Church.

Nothing, however, has tended to such important results looking to reunion as the Old Catholic movement in Germany. The avowed object of this movement being the restoration of the Roman Catholic Church to the purity of the Church of primitive times, it was brought at once into singular sympathy with the Eastern Church. And the Anglican reformation having been carried forward with the same object—viz: a restoration to the usages and doctrines maintained in apostolic days,—it was natural that there should be an intense interest in the aims of the Old Catholics. No sooner did the leaders of this movement come into notice, than they found themselves encouraged and sustained both by the Anglican and the Eastern branches.

The conference which has just ended, although not the first of the kind within the last few years, is decidedly the most important; because now the distinct questions of reunion, and the hinderances in the way, received special attention. A number of well-known names appear as taking part in the deliberations, among whom Dr. Liddon of the English Church, and Dr. Potter of Union University, will be recognized as best known to general readers.

Without entering into the details of the discussions, it will be sufficient to note that there appeared no absolutely insuperable difficulties to prevent friendly intercourse between the Russo-Greek, the Anglican, and the American churches. Of course, the matter of organic union is a question of the future, but it follows as a natural sequence when once there is free intercourse. The subject is not without interest for the non-Episcopal bodies, for it is well known how deeply they have been interested in the question of bringing together the divisions of Protestantism. The work of the Evangelical Alliance is fresh in all memories. It will not be a great stride for them to look forward now to the still broader field of a reunited Christendom.

The conference at Bonn will, in this view, be of use in establishing the one important principle,—that the basis of reunion is the faith as held, while the whole Church could meet as one in general councils, prior to any divisions. It is manifestly improper to devise new symbols of the faith, or to make platforms; the only safe plan is to ascertain what Christianity was in its purest days, and return to that. If it involve changes in some directions in modes of government, and changes in other directions in expressions of belief upon minor points, these are but slight difficulties compared with the advantages to be gained by the breaking down of barriers which have grown up with the progress of time and the clashing of parties.

It will not be at all surprising when, with honesty of purpose, and with the calmness and freedom from passion which are needed for the examination, Christian people begin to think of reunion, they will find the points of agreement much more numerous than the points of difference. If the time should come when the great resources of the branches of the Christian family should be united in earnest efforts for the elevation of men, instead of being used for the building up of conflicting sects, the world would be infinitely better.—Boston Advertiser, Sept. 1.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE IN WYOMING.

A gentleman from Cheyenne, who has devoted some time to gathering the details, gives us the following interesting facts on the practical workings of woman suffrage in the Territory:—

The first notable point is, that there are not women enough in the Territory to make any particular difference in the state of government, though they were ever so active and wise. The population is estimated at 18,000, of which 2,000 are under the age of twenty-one. This leaves 16,000 adults, of whom 1,500 are women eligible as voters. This would leave 14,500 male voters; though, in point of fact, it is very rare for all to vote, so many being remote from the polls. Ten men to one woman is, however, the usual proportion.

The moral and social statistics are worthy of note. Cheyenne has thirty-five saloons and forty-five prostitutes—known as such. Laramie has twenty-six saloons and some twenty prostitutes. This includes "beer-jerkers" and variety girls of all grades. In Evanston there are supposed to be eight saloons and twelve prostitutes. Hilliard, Rawlins, Sweetwater, Fort Laramie, and other places, average about the same in proportion to population; the summary being that the whole Territory contains at least one hundred saloons and three hundred prostitutes! This does not seem to indicate that woman suffrage has tended in any great degree to abolish either of the "social evils."

But the most interesting facts are in regard to ladies as jurors. Good and evil are strangely mingled in the new Territories, and Wyoming contains a large proportion of intelligent and eminently religious and good women; it was hoped, therefore, that great good would result from placing them on juries. After a few trials, however, the system was quietly abandoned, and has never been revived. The reasons for this are many. First is the fact that so few women are eligible. The following classes are, from the necessity of the case, exempt: All nursing mothers; all approaching a condition of maternity; all the delicate, nervous, or hysterical; all who from temporary physical condition are not fit for sitting on a long trial; all of notoriously bad character, and all who are exempt from the same causes as men would be. These classes include nine-tenths of the whole sex. When to these are added those who have sick or very young children who need frequent care, it seems that all Wyoming has no more than a hundred women at any one time fit for jury duty. The system, therefore, was given up, not as a failure exactly, but as utterly impracticable.

Another difficulty presented itself. When a jury, consisting of men and women (five of the latter) was long detained and locked up for several hours, the resulting inconvenience was so great, and the expense so much increased, that both sexes were heartily sick of the experiment. The general result is said to be that both the friends and foes of woman suffrage are disappointed, as neither the good nor evil predicted has come to pass. One good is claimed—that there is better order at the polls than formerly. If any other benefit has resulted, it is not apparent yet. Some complain that the cost of running for office has vastly increased, as the candidates have to bring out their lady supporters in carriages; but the ladies, in their convention a few weeks since, unanimously resolved against it, declaring themselves "as able to walk to the polls as to church or market." A few fights have resulted from challenging the votes of ladies. The first lady whose vote was challenged at Laramie dropped her ballot and indulged in a good cry, whereupon her escort sailed in and made it hot for her challenger. After a few fights on this subject, challenging ladies was, by common consent, discontinued; and in that particular at least they have an advantage of the men.

As to the effect of suffrage on the ladies, there are almost as many opinions as there are people in Wyoming. The majority, however, declare themselves unable to see any change. As far as can be known, the ladies divide their vote between parties as much as men do; rather more, perhaps, voting for personal friends. To sum up: the opinion of the best informed is that woman suffrage in Wyoming has resulted in making everything just as it was before, only a little more so.—Rocky Mountain News.

THE TWO ORGAN-GRINDERS.

On Saturday there was sitting in front of the residence of E. A. Brush, on Randolph Street, an organ-grinder who had been blinded by fire. His face bore dreadful traces of the calamity which deprived him of his eyes, and there was a pitiful lack of nickels in his box. Still he hopefully ground out his dismal tunes, nodding now and then as he heard the chink of coin dropping into his little "bank," and at each such sound spurring himself to fresh exertion. Poor fellow! It was his only way of testifying his desire to give his patrons their money's worth, and one could not withhold a sentiment of respect for his honesty of purpose. Presently there came that way another organ-grinder. He carried his instrument on his back. He had only one leg and that was not a good one, but he thanked fortune for "as good a pair of eyes as ever did duty in a poor devil's head." As he came abreast of the blind organist he paused, unsling his own organ, and, thumping his crutch down on the sidewalk, looked at him long in silence. Finally he dived into his pockets, raked up a handful of pennies, five-cent pieces and other small coins, and deposited them in the blind brother's box. Still without a word he picked up his scratched and battered old instrument, resumed his crutch, and stumped away. The incident was witnessed by several gentlemen who, as if in repentance of their own thoughtless neglect of the poor wretch, looked at each other an instant, and then doubled, quadrupled the gift of the man with the crutch, filling the poor fellow's box with a harvest of shipplasters, the like of which in quantity he had not received in many a day.—Detroit Free Press.

GENERAL BUTLER's speech at the O'Connell banquet was the highest and the lowest bid for the Irish vote that has been made for a long time, and it may be struck off to him yet. He abused the Pilgrim Fathers; rekindled the flames of the Charlestown convent; "resurrected" the poor dead Know-Nothings, and flayed them as if they were alive; besides glorifying such abolitionists as Garrison and Phillips, whom he used to denounce and vilify when they were unpopular. Then he misrepresented the Protestant spirit as hostile to freedom of worship for Roman Catholics, and complimented Tweedville as "the largest Irish city in the world." Waxing more and more eloquent, the patriotic and pious General claimed to be "a not very remote son of Ireland" himself, and cheerfully announced that he looked forward to the time "when Ireland shall govern New England." The devout hero closed by turning his speech into a sermon which indicated a glowing admiration of "the teachings of a Church which inculcates the responsibility of man to God hereafter for sins committed in the body," and expressed a laudable and holy horror of "that infidel scepticism that acknowledges no God, no hereafter, no future state, and no responsibility, and teaches that we are like the beasts that perish and go to the ground." It is to be feared that General Butler will reach the ground before Ireland can govern Massachusetts by entrusting the State House to "a not very remote son" of the Green Isle. The priests must think that there is a great plenty of blarney-stones in the quarries of Cape Ann. If they ever secure the orator for the Confessional they will have, what Mr. Lincoln called the suppression of the Rebellion, "a big job." But the Pope may get as badly jilted as Jefferson Davis.—Christian Register.

A FAMILY in this city, the widowed father of which has been somewhat afflicted of late with an attempted intermeddling of uproarious sisters-in-law, has a six-year-old girl that has a "faculty of prayer." A few evenings since she enumerated the objects of her supplications as follows: "God bless papa and my governess, and my sisters and brother, and my Uncle Sam, and my Aunt Georgia, and my twin cousins, and Cousin Julia, and all my relations, except Maur and Jane and Ellen (the obnoxious aunts); and the less you have to do with them the better it will be for you."—San Francisco Chronicle.

ONE OF THE MOST ingenious advertisements issued at San Francisco during the summer was the following:—

"Tee, ice, ice—
If you want it pure and n
And at a reasonable pr
Follow no new dev
But send me in a tr

at my off-ice, for I have the largest and best stock ever put up in this city."

Poetry.

"COFFIN SHIPS."

BY ARTHUR MATTHISON.

In the great London Parlyment House, lads,
They're a talkin' about us Jack Tars;
'Bout us, and the ships as we sail in—
Bolts, timbers, sails, riggin', and spars.
An' it's pretty nigh time as they did talk,
Them big wigs as settles it all!
Tho' I wish we could tell 'em what we think,
In that Lingo ship, Westminster Hall!
D'y'e know what they call them old hulks, lads,
As all on us know, and all curse?
"Coffin ships" is the name as they gives 'em,
An' I don't want to give 'em a worse.
For, mates, we might just as well all be buried,
As sail in them thin-ribbed old craft,
As 'ain't got a sound timber in 'em,
From the hold to the mast, fore and aft!
I shipp'd in a coffin myself, lads,
From a port in the North, years ago;
An' back'd out—"Sail you must!" says the owner;
"If you don't man, to prison you go!"
I went as if it 'ad bin to the gallows;
But what can a poor fellow do?
Then—liefer than mould in a prison,
A true salt 'ud be drown'd in the blue!
You, most on you, know'd young Bill Severn,
The heartiest blue jacket afloat;
He was one of the crew of that ship, lads—
"Ship!"—it warn't strong enough for a boat!
Her bolts wasn't fit for a hen-coop,
She'd a swamped in a breeze on the Tyne;
Though she look'd trim and seaworthy too, lads,
And as bold as a ship o' the line.
Look'd so spick, and so span, and so new, lads,
They insur'd her for double her worth;
But them innocent chaps as insure ships
Thinks they're safer at sea than on earth!
In a week comes a gale as we'd laugh at
In the stout ship as holds us all now;
It stove that in, as if the Great Eastern
Had struck her 'midships with her prow.
She went down, lads, as quick an' as easy
As a bucket with holes in a pool!
Or as them little cockboats, all paper,
The land-sailor boys make at school!
When the day broke, there me and Bill Severn
Lay floating about on the mast,
Of the short muster roll of the living,
In that doomed barque, that man-trap, the last!
Poor shipmate! he was to bin married,
When the vessel come back, that same spring!
An' she'd giv' him, to wear for her sake, lads,
The half of a little gold ring!
An' there he lay dying afore me,
For he'd hurt himself bad in the wreck;
An' he takes of his half of the ring, mates,
As always hung round his brown neck.
And his big hand, now weak as a baby's,
Tremblin' plac'd the gold token in mine:
"Carry this—Ben—to Mary—and tell—"
Quick and dead were alone on the brine!
If the owner, that minute, before me,
Had stood with his throat near my hand!—
But there—thank the Lord as he didn't;
Thank the Lord, I ain't mark'd with his brand.
I was picked up, getting on tow'rds nightfall,
By a lugger bound out from South Wales;
But the rest of the crew in that "Coffin"—
They can't—poor fellows—tell tales!
Mates, I've spun this yarn, often and often;
Widows, mothers, and sweethearts have cried;
But in vain to make old England listen,
England's sea sons and daughters have tried!
Coffin ships they yet sail o'er the waters;
Death sneaks in his salt-water den!
Ship Owners—Ship Knackers! I calls 'em,
And sea-devil slayers of men!
But they're talking about us in London,
England's big heart, at last, mates, is stirred:
And though we can't speak for ourselves, lad,
Them as does talk, thank God! will be heard!

—London Hornet.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 4.

J. Church, $13; Fred Bird, $1.50; Chas. F. Blake, $3.20; J. Towne, $3; C. B. Darrow, $3; George Woods, $3; W. C. Fuller, $3.20; D. C. White, 20 cents; C. H. Goddard, 20 cents; H. W. Hazzer, 25 cents; Lucy E. Church, 20 cents; J. H. Miller, 10 cents; Chas. Moran, 50 cents; E. H. Aldrich, 50 cents; J. H. Ward, 25 cents; Kate G. Bliss, 20 cents; Clemens Vormegut, $10; W. P. Chambers, $10; Chas. Graeter, $10; G. W. Peckham, $30; S. L. Wilder, $20; Free Public Library, 20 cents; C. W. Newton, $10; A. Bate, $20; J. E. Oliver, $14.40; J. S. Ketcham, $2; Edward Hastings, 10 cents; T. B. Skinner, $2; James Westwater, $3; A. Miller, $3.20; W. E. Darwin, $2.25.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

The Index.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 9, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E.
D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS
W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
(England), Editorial Contributors.

AS THE lecture season is about to begin again, it gives us great pleasure to say that among the new candidates who will appear will be Mrs. Caroline E. Streeter, of Boston. This lady is not unknown already to many of the citizens of Boston as an interesting lecturer upon important social topics, she having spoken with great acceptableness in this city, upon several occasions, within the last two years. Mrs. Streeter is a lady of fine personal appearance and bearing, has enjoyed unusual educational advantages, possesses powers of observation trained in a wide and rare experience, and is capable to discuss the subjects of her lectures with excellent ability and judgment. We would especially commend her to radical and liberal societies, inasmuch as she is thoroughly sympathetic with the most advanced and progressive thought of the times. Among the topics Mrs. Streeter treats upon are the following: "Children's Woes;" "Woman Yesterday, To-day, and Tomorrow;" "Homes, Wives, Intemperance." Her personal address is Hotel Dudley, Boston Highlands, Mass. Her lecture agent is B. W. Williams, 114 Washington Street, Boston. A. W. S.

F. R. A. ANNUAL REPORT.

The Report, in pamphlet form, of the Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association for 1875 is now ready.

It contains an Essay by Wm. C. Gannett, on "Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and an Essay by F. E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. B. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

It can be obtained, in Boston, at A. Williams & Co.'s, and by mail by addressing "Office of Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass."

Price of single copy, 35 cents; package of four copies or more, 25 cents each.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

CALL FOR THE SEPTEMBER CONVENTION.

The Liberal Leagues throughout the country are cordially invited to send five delegates each to a Convention to be held in Philadelphia on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of September next, for the purpose of disseminating our principles and of making arrangements for a general Congress of Liberals to convene next year during the Centennial exhibition. It is very desirable that every Liberal League in America should be fully represented at the September Convention. Now is the time to work. The enemies of religious freedom are busy in preparing to utilize human ignorance and superstition for the strengthening and perpetuating of an organized system of mental repression, hostile alike to science, reason, and the right of private judgment in all matters of faith and conscience.

Let us endeavor to overcome ignorance by intelligence,—superstition by reason. Let each League send a full representation of men and women, so that from the combined wisdom of both sexes and all our societies we may be able to inaugurate a new era of impartial justice, perfect freedom, and scientific religion.

As soon as delegates are elected, Leagues are requested to notify the undersigned, and also THE INDEX.

JOHN S. DYE,
Sec'y Phila. Liberal League,
2527 Brown Street, Phila.

PHILADELPHIA, July 22, 1875.

N. B.—All Liberal Societies which sympathize with the objects of the Liberal Leagues and wish to be represented are included in the above Call.

DELEGATES REPORTED.

PHILADELPHIA LIBERAL LEAGUE.—Carrie S. Burnham (President), John S. Dye (Secretary), Isaac Rhen, Damon Y. Kilgore, Jesse B. Beam.
BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.—F. E. Abbot (President), Geo. A. Bacon (Secretary), A. Bronson Alcott, B. F. Underwood, John Wetherbee.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Convention of Liberal Leagues will meet in Philadelphia on Friday, Sept. 17, 1875, at 2 o'clock, P. M., in Lincoln Hall, at the south-east corner of Broad Street and Fairmount Avenue.

All liberals who are interested in the movement for Entire Secularization of the State, or in the perfecting of arrangements for a General Convention of Liberals in 1876, are invited to meet and consult together on this occasion.

JOHN S. DYE,

Sec. Phila Liberal League.

CASTING THE HOROSCOPE.

Mr. Dyer D. Lum, whose essay on "Buddhism Notwithstanding" in THE INDEX a few months ago attracted so much attention and admiration, makes in another column of this issue some "Prognostications" respecting the probable development of the Catholic question in this country which we cannot do better than to consider here. The extent of our agreement with the earlier portion of his article is so large that we shall confine our remarks to the latter portion of it; and we offer them not so much for the purpose of debating Mr. Lum's conclusions as for that of making some independent suggestions on the same subject.

1. It is indeed quite likely that the Catholic Church will continue to mask its designs in this country, until it feels strong enough to push them openly; and the result of this concealment will probably continue to be the effectual soothing and lulling of public suspicion. Meanwhile parties will divide on other issues, as heretofore; and the Catholics, consciously possessed of the balance of power, will be contented with accomplishing their aims through the subserviency of existing parties, rather than risk the loss of all they have gained by an open contest with the great non-Catholic majority. The danger to be apprehended is not that they will themselves outvote the rest of the community, but that they will control the votes of so large a body of non-Catholic voters as to carry their ends against the feeble and nerveless opposition of a disunited, though numerically superior, public. This is no dream of the excited imagination of enthusiasts or fanatics, but has actually been done again and again, especially in New York. In 1870, over a million of dollars was there appropriated to sectarian institutions, and the Catholic Church got by far the most of it; yet the Catholics were in a minority. As Mr. Lum says, their designs were "aided by dominant men within the [ruling] party"; and nothing but the overthrow of the Tammany Ring put a stop to this spoliation of the public by the Catholic Church. The priesthood practically controlled the votes of an entire great party which was only Catholic in part; and their power was the direct result of their own thorough organization. Just so long as the great opposing political parties are under the management of unprincipled leaders, the people will be exposed to the great peril of secret and corrupt bargains between these leaders and the Catholic priests. The wealth of the Church is a vast corruption fund, by which it can and will buy its way to power; and, in order to increase this wealth, the priests are all ready to barter the ignorant votes they control in exchange for all sorts of open or disguised grants from the public treasury. Yet the infatuated people suffer the non-taxation of church-property to continue, by which the wealth of the Catholic Church is so rapidly rolling up; and the Protestant sects, rather than surrender the little they themselves gain by the same privilege, are blindly and foolishly playing at the game of self-destruction. Money is here the sword of Rome; and kneeling America puts it into her hands, with its point aimed at her own heart!

2. Mr. Lum points out truly that, to meet the gathering and darkening cloud of danger, moral principle is required—moral principle that is a vital, controlling force of public action; and he intimates with equal truth that the radicals give little indication of possessing it. Now what is the "moral principle" demanded by the occasion? Neither more nor less than self-sacrificing devotion to the principle that IN AMERICA THE CHURCH AND THE STATE SHALL BE ABSOLUTELY SEPARATE. On this principle the republic was founded; on fidelity to this principle its future existence depends; by neglect of this principle it will surely die. To-day it is simply untrue that the Church and the State are absolutely separate in point of fact: the "Demands of Liberalism" sufficiently indicate where they are still practically, though not avowedly, connected. Numerous transient questions are now absorbing the attention of the American people,—all important, doubtless; yet this question of State Secularization is deeper and in the end more important than them all. The republic has no need more vital or pressing than that of intelligent, ardent, heroic men who shall take up this neglected duty of completely secularizing the State, resting not and faltering not, despite all discouragements, till the great end is achieved. The principle at stake is a thoroughly positive, not "negative," one; for it demands the further and higher fulfilment of the national ideal out of which this great republic was born, and aims at nothing but the completion of its architectural building-plan. That the radicals of the country should be so little enthusiastic at present in the service of this principle is mortifying enough, but perhaps not much to be wondered at; they do not yet appreciate the necessity of making the republic still more secular in order to keep it even as secular as it now is. It surely cannot be that they are unteachable by events, which after all are the chief teachers of mankind. Inert and supine as they now appear, we believe they will yet rouse themselves, though late and after the experience of public misfortunes which prompt action might have averted. Not so much resistance to Rome (which is incidental) as devotion to America is what is needed; and we have not yet lost confidence in the substantial patriotism of the radicals, despite the apathy they now show in the practical application of their own ideas.

3. When the necessity of actively opposing the denationalizing influences of Rome becomes generally apparent, Mr. Lum thinks that the Protestant Christian party will take the lead and shape the issue; that there will be, as of old in Europe, a battle between Catholicism and Protestantism, and not between "Rome and Reason"; and that in the end the Protestant Christianizers of the Constitution will triumph alike over Catholics and radicals. In this, of course, Mr. Lum may prove to have possessed more penetration than any of us; yet we doubt the likelihood of any such issue of the coming struggle. The conditions are not here what they were in the old world, when the cry of "No Popery!" was merely the battle-cry of Evangelical Protestantism. By the ineffably fortunate fact that the framers of the United States Constitution were so profoundly and so largely imbued with the principles of free thought, the mighty and subtle influence of the organic law has been for nearly a hundred years moulding the mind of the nation in the direction of absolute secularism—an influence which has powerfully affected even the Protestant Evangelical party itself, and habituated them to the idea, at least in the abstract statement of it, that Church and State must be separate.

If, therefore, the radicals only do their duty, and give moral, intellectual, and political force to the demand for a thorough practical secularization of the State, as the only sure defence against the ambition and wiles of Rome, the Protestant party may greatly dislike the utterers, yet will perforce recognize the utterance as the proclamation of their own traditional policy. The Protestant sects suppose to-day that the State is actually secular; they do not generally comprehend the objectionableness of the practices against which the "Demands of Liberalism" protest, or perceive that they are so many points of attachment, so many ligatures, between Church and State. In this fact that the Protestant Evangelical party are perfectly familiar with the verbal, abstract statement of the true American principle, and suppose themselves to be its champions as against the Catholic Church, lies the great opportunity, as well as the great duty, of the radicals; for the latter alone are qualified to perceive the actual incongruity of the American practice with the American theory, or to point out the vast advantages derived by Rome from it, or to insist with any degree of moral force on the rectification of it. The radicals, therefore, owe it to their country to give to the American ideal of a purely secular State a broader and fuller meaning in the popular apprehension, to educate the Protestant party in a better knowledge and more faithful practice of the principle they nominally accept, and thus to erect an impregnable barrier against the encroachments of Romanism. This is the special duty of the radicals to-day—a duty of great importance to the future welfare of the nation. It can only be discharged by a bold, vigorous, and persistent agitation of the whole question, covering all the points of the "Demands of Liberalism." The Evangelical Protestants (thanks to the influence of our "infidel" constitution!) mean to stand by the principle of a secular State; they think they do so now; they fail, however, to do so, and are meanwhile greatly strengthening the Catholic Church by their fail ure. Can anything be clearer than the place and work of the genuine liberals of the land at such a junct ure? Is it not self-evidently to show to the Protest ants what a secular State really is, and to exert themselves to the utmost to induce the Protest ants to abolish those surviving Church-and-State connections, which are now ripening the seeds of great national peril?

If Mr. Lum, then, is correct in supposing that the Protestant party are going to be the only considerable bulwark against the incoming tide of Roman Catholic aggression, on the radicals it rests to lead this party forward to the only true or safe position. Without their active exertions, the Catholics have every chance of flanking and defeating the Protest ants. Leave the privilege of church-exemption untouched,—leave the Bible in the common schools,—leave the other similar abuses unreformed,—and the Roman Catholic Church will grow stronger every day, and laugh at all the efforts of the Protest ants to hinder it. But let the Protest ants make clean work of all these abuses, and put in active operation the principle of universal guaranteed education,—and all danger of serious trouble from the Catholic Church will have passed by. Moreover, in defending themselves effectually against the Catholics, the Protest ants will also have effectually defended the whole community against the Christianizers of the Constitution; for the latter can do nothing in a secular State. But the Protestant sects are not sufficiently well-grounded in American principles to act in this intelligent way without being led far in advance of their present confused position on the Church-and-State question; and, to secure this result, the radicals must go to work. Will they do it? If not, Mr. Lum is correct, and the Constitution of the United States, unprotected by the intelligence that should be its shield, will lie at the mercy of Christianizing bigotry. If "Liberal indifference" is to remain a "constant quantity," his "prognostications" will probably turn out to be verified prophecies. But we still reckon on a generous devotion of the liberals to the cause of liberty, and on their willingness even yet to agitate earnestly for the absolute secularization of the State.

NATURE'S TRUSTWORTHINESS.

That was a deeply significant saying of Confucius, "Does Heaven speak? The four seasons pursue their courses, and all things are being continually produced; but does Heaven say anything?" Nature does not reveal her purposes by any articulate message; she does not tell us in advance what she means to do; not from the heavens above or the earth beneath is anything said in her realm, but only something doing. Yet the things she does are done with such constancy of aim and result that we come to know her in intimate and trusting security. Though the skies have never opened to give miraculous revelation of her intent, yet we know her and can trust her almost better than ourselves. She utters herself only by actions. But knowing her by our own familiar experience of her actions, and by the aggregate inherited experience of unnumbered generations of our ancestors, her character is revealed to us through all this gathered knowledge. No life-long friend, beloved, leaned upon at our side, is more thoroughly known, or a surer reliance. Even the dependence of the child on parental love is not more sure than the confidence with which we cling to the hand of our silent mother, Nature,—the mother who never spoke one word of promise to us, but whom we know by her past faithfulness to all the generations of men.

For thus knowing Nature, we know her not only as power, but as power that aims at order, method, use, harmony, beauty. We know that her forces work with such constancy, and with such regularity of tension towards fixed results, that we call her operations Laws. To them we know that human law must bend and human power be subservient. And if by any means any of her methods which we name Laws can be evaded or abrogated, it is only by calling into service some other of her forces that is for the time and place superior,—that is, by setting into operation another law. Nothing, indeed, is more clearly known in the universe than that Nature is a law-abiding power; that she is moved by an impulse that is not reckless, not chance nor whim, but an impulse that aims at and accomplishes definite results. Whatever apparent exceptions there may be in the working of her energies, human experience has yet learned that her aims may be trusted, her forces confided in for reaching certain ends. The whole stability of human society depends upon this trust,—the trust, begotten by experience, that what Nature has been and done she will continue to be and do.

Thus much is within the experience of our common humanity. But science is beginning to indicate something more than this. Scientific discovery is beginning clearly to show that along with this law-abidingness, this constancy of method, there is an order in Nature that means advance, progress, ascent, unity of forces in one plan, gradual growth into finer symmetry of proportion, and higher beauty of form, and more useful capability. Deep within the beauty which all eyes see, there is advance to a higher idea of beauty. Deep within the movement of forces which all minds can perceive, there is the unfolding of a mighty plan, which only scientific research has revealed, wherein it is seen that these forces are self-improving and self-regenerating; so that, when we look upon her vast periods of activity, it is clear that Nature has been advancing upon her own work, making the bad good, and the good better, and aiming, as it were, ever at a Best. Thus has Nature, though working in silence, revealed herself through human experience and knowledge, and won the trust of mankind.

And it is much the same in human history as in the history of Nature. Man is the energy of Nature become self-conscious, and capable of articulate expression of itself. Yet it is mainly by the faithfulness of hidden and silent human energies to certain definite tasks of their place and time that the great advances of mankind are made, and the inner meaning of the forces that thus work through Nature and man is finally revealed. Not so much, indeed, by any uttered words in behalf of righteousness, though spoken never so eloquently by prophet or martyr, as by the silent grip with which the masses of civilized humanity adhere to truth and virtue, the stability of society is assured. There are certain principles of mental and moral intelligence which have come to have the same constancy in the world of mankind as the laws of physical force have in the world of matter, and upon which we rely with the same trust and security. They may never have been spoken from any miraculously opened heavens; they may not even have been clear endowments of the human mind when man first made his appearance on the earth; but may, as now seems most likely, have been gradually and slowly evolved through the long disciplinary struggle of human and ante-human experience, and may be variously mingled with human infirmity and error; yet, deeper than aught else in man's nature, these principles declare the purport and destiny of his being. Whatever their origin, these common and now inherent attractions of the human mind to the true and good are the silent witnesses which, growing continually clearer with man's historic advance, interpret for him all other revelations, and "Which, be they what they may,

Are yet the fountain light of all our day,
Are yet a master light of all our seeing."

W. J. P.

THE NEXT ANNUAL MEETING OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

The following communication deserves especial attention from all who are interested in the proposal to hold a free thought convention at Philadelphia in 1876:—

EDITOR INDEX:—

The prospect of a convention of free thinkers at the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia next year is cheering to all earnest radicals. The annual meeting of the Free Religious Association occurs, according to custom, two or three months earlier.

As the spirit and purpose of these two gatherings will be similar, would it not be well that they should coincide in respect to time? It would be somewhat out of order, it is true; but the objections to such a plan, it seems to me, would not be of so much weight as the considerations in its favor.

Though dispensing with the usual public exercises of the Free Religious Association of anniversary week, it need not preclude a meeting for the transaction of business at that time, if deemed advisable. The special advantage would be that those who desire to attend both occasions could do so without performing separate journeys; while the essayists and speakers of the Free Religious Association, if called upon for a similar service at the Philadelphia convention, would be relieved from the necessity of a double preparation. I throw this out as a suggestion, and would be glad to know what others may think about it. Certainly, if the convention referred to takes place, we all desire that it shall be a grand success, if possible; and this may be easily achieved, if the liberals of the country possess an adequate appreciation of the opportunity, and respond to the proposition with becoming interest. D. H. C.

FLORENCE, Mass.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—I am tempted to invite your readers to examine the following extract from a sermon by the Reverend Charles Spurgeon, entitled Advice to Revival Converts. The extract has come to me in a very roundabout way; and it gives me pleasure to have seen it first in the Indian Mirror, which is the organ of the Brahmo Somaj of India:—

"Now I do pray you who profess to have found Christ, do not make a sham of it. Do let it be salvation from sin that you have got. Salvation from hell—is that what you want? That is not the salvation you ought to try after. It is salvation from sin. That will bring salvation from hell. You know every thief would like to get salvation from going to prison, and that would not be of any use to him. The salvation that is worth having is the salvation from thieving any more, Mr. Thief. If you get that, you will get salvation from prison, too. Salvation from hell is not the matter, but salvation from sinning. Now let us see how you live, you converts. You go home, madam, and be snappish at your servants. You go home, servants, and be slovenly over your duty. You, working man, give half a day's work for a whole day's wage. You, master, act the tyrant over your men. And then you have been converted, have you? I pray God undo such a conversion, and begin again with you. There are lots of people who need to be unconverted before they are converted,—to have the rubbish they have built up themselves pulled down before Christ can begin. Suppose you have some ground, and it has an old ramshackle building on it. You have to get that out of the way. There are plenty of people who have a good-for-nothing conversion that wants sweeping away before God can do anything with them."

I claim the hearty thanks of your readers for putting before them this little gem of right-down good religious teaching. Come from whom it may, it is welcome; but from Mr. Spurgeon, of all people, it is doubly so, and still more because boldly spoken at the very time when the other sort of revival was raging. Moody and Sankey never said or sung anything half so good as this—to my knowledge; and I question much whether they would give such a hearty welcome to it, as we can who have seen the frightful consequences of the preaching of hell-fire. The "Come-to-Jesus" Gospel does not quite harmonize with the conversion to good works advocated by Mr. Spurgeon. I imagine no words spoken against the Moody-and-Sankey revival were so potent as these. Wherever they travel and are thoughtfully read, there they will eat into the very vitals of the popular gospel, and leave little besides the mere shell.

You may perhaps think I am making more of these words of Mr. Spurgeon than he intended them to carry, or than can fairly be drawn from them. If, however, you thoroughly appreciate their drift, you will see that Mr. Spurgeon throws overboard the Moody and Sankey theory altogether, and puts another in its place.

Roughly stated, Moody's theory is this:—

"If you want to escape hell-fire, believe in the Lord Jesus, and you shall be saved. The moment you believe, you are converted."

Spurgeon's theory takes up the man where Moody left him, and says: "You are converted, are you? How do you live, man? If you are not good, you shall still be damned for all you believe to the contrary. Your conversion is not worth a half-penny if it be not a conversion of your soul from love of evil to love of good, and of your daily conduct to match."

I say these two theories of conversion are directly antagonistic to each other, and thus mutually destructive. If Sankey sings—

"Cast your deadly doing down; Doing ends in death;"

Spurgeon would say:—

"Doing is the chiefest thing;
Doing leads to life."

Some two years ago I wrote to you about a visit I paid to Mr. Spurgeon's tabernacle; and I spoke warmly of the impression made upon me that he was an honest man—good and true,—and doing his best. I believe his integrity is being now rewarded by the opening of his mind to clearer and truer views about man and God, and that this timely protest of his is the best proof we could have that he is growing himself, and is leading others to grow likewise. Relatively speaking, who would care about the theological views of one who thus vigorously teaches practical righteousness? What can it matter whether or not it be mixed up with obsolete or old-fashioned notions which would not bear a severe rational test? As a member of society, Spurgeon deserves our hearty thanks for putting things into their right place, and seizing the right moment to administer an antidote to the religious poison which was circulating around. As a sign of the times, this extract is of very high value. Spurgeon's name is a great power among millions of professing Christians, because his life is a useful one, and he is always in earnest. What he says about conversion will, therefore, have immense weight with all who, like himself, are earnest and good at heart.

He is no slave of expediency; no trimmer to popular breezes; and should he ever come to a conviction that more still of the prevailing Orthodoxy is false, rotten, and mischievous, he will not wait long before telling it right out to his nearest and most powerful friends. The clouds of ignorance, error, and superstitious fear have brooded over us long enough. We have never lost our faith in the glorious sun behind them; and now on every hand there are golden and silvery streaks which tell us that our faith was well founded, and our brightest hopes are hastening to fruition.

I am, sir, very truly yours,
CHARLES VOYSEY.

Communications.

PROGNOSTICATIONS.

F. E. ABBOT:

My dear Sir,—The opponents of Rome are growing alarmed at the rapid increase of wealth of that mighty and unscrupulous hierarchy that stands today faithful to the ideas of its past. The astute Bismarck has long seen the nature and significance of the impending struggle between modern and mediæval ideas, and sought to arouse the Protestant mind to a sense of the danger. The ex-Premier of England (Gladstone) has startled Protestant England with his earnest words and prophetic warnings. Are they alarmists? The supposition is absurd. Is it a mere appeal to religious fanaticism as a stepping-stone to power? The general prevalence of the feeling of danger among all the Protestant nations evinces that the causes of these fears lie far deeper. America, too, is agitated by the same questions. Church-and-State independence and the preservation of our common-school system have become vital questions in politics. From the West already we hear these questions discussed in political gatherings; State conventions expressing themselves on the subject, and the party orators growing eloquent over the threatened danger. In other States we can see evidence that the feeling is by no means a local one; for leading journals, such as the Evening Post, Times, and Tribune, of New York, are giving their attention to the subject, and adding to the feeling of insecurity. Day by day it acquires new prominence, and bids fair soon to be the vital question of the hour.

What position will the Liberals occupy in the contest? Will it be a prominent or a subordinate one? For years Mr. Abbot has sounded the alarm through THE INDEX, and sought to enlist our sympathies. A League has been formed in Massachusetts—one solitary League,—and the State flooded with petitions to obtain a popular protest against the exemption of church property. Yet while Liberals are complacently smiling at the extravagance of Mr. Abbot's zeal, Roman Bishops continue to add to their already immense possessions, and smile incredulous at the idea of taxation.

But the question is no longer a trivial or forced one; it has gained legitimate entrance into the political arena, and it requires no very profound mind to see that, with the settlement of the currency question, it bids fair to overshadow any question of tariff and revenue reform.

While all indications point to the Republican party as the self-chosen "defenders" of civil liberty in the impending conflict, it is not at all likely that the question will ever be presented so baldly, or at least that the lines will ever be drawn so closely, as to constitute the Democratic party the "defenders" of the Roman hierarchy. Even now in Ohio the Democratic platform demands "the complete separation of Church and State; religious independence and absolute freedom of opinion; equal and exact justice to all religious societies; and purely secular education at the expense of the tax-payers, without division among or control by any sect, directly or indirectly, of any portion of the public-school fund." Political parties are not proverbially guided by great moral principles so much as by expediency, and platform resolutions offer but a slender reliance where political chicanery and Jesuitical craft have a controlling influence.

Is it possible to forecast the future? However hazardous the attempt, I cannot resist the temptation to point out a few of the results that may be likely to arise in the near future. Is it not true that the law of motion, "following the lines of least resistance," is not only applicable in the domain of physics, but also in the social organism? This law, so important in the explanation of mental action by rendering the psychological acts of the individual subject to the universal law of evolution, may enable us to forecast the social actions of the future; inasmuch as a clear apprehension of the course of individual mental action leads us to see more clearly the actions of society. In the social organism, the "lines of least resistance" are more readily discerned than in the individual; and, however changeable they may be under special causes in the individual, the laws of sociology but exhibit the general average of individual action, and consequently offer us a relatively constant quantity.

While firmly believing that the social organism cannot be radically changed, even by the most zealous reformer, except by efforts made in unison with the prevalent spirit of the age—in other words, unless the motive force of the idea be in the well-defined "lines of least resistance" presented by society,—still the task of the reformer is not a hopeless one, if he confines his efforts to pointing out the laws of health to which the social organism must conform, and does not seek to accelerate the process of Nature by unnatural methods; it still remaining true, if I have to whisper it, that disease (or disordered action) often becomes chronic, and even incurable, in both the physical and social organisms alike.

A few of the results of my efforts at prognostication I offer for your amusement, though with no thought that your fervid faith will accept my by no means cheerful conclusions.

I. The designs of Catholicism will be pushed without an open avowal of the ends desired, and the opposition to its claims will continue divided and led astray by party glamour and side issues. Where political leaders do not see or act clearly, the masses will not manifest a superior sagacity. While false issues will probably be the leading ones, yet, if party platforms should be eventually driven to a clear expression of the great underlying principles involved, the Romish designs will be aided by dominant men within the party, supporting the party platform for party ends (vide Thurman in Ohio), yet consciously or unconsciously aiding and abetting the Roman hierarchy.

II. To meet successfully the threatened danger to our institutions requires the dominance of moral principles. Their intellectual acceptance will not suffice; they must become assimilated into our moral natures—must become a vital and controlling force. Where have we such a vital force? Force can exist only in its manifestation, and with radicals the controlling force is mainly a negative one; but philippics against "old Orthodoxy" will avail nothing. Can we rally to save under the banner of an anti-something? The Spiritualists, intoxicated with the eloquence of "Red Jacket," "Big Thunder," and other departed worthies, offer us but a sorry spectacle and a slender hope.

III. The leadership of the organized opposition will naturally devolve upon the Protestant Church: and under the fervor of their appeals the cry of "No Popery" will sweep the land in the avowed interest of Protestant liberty and the Protestant religion. One of the direct results of such appeals to the religious sentimentalism of the age would undoubtedly be what is known as a "revival of religion," and a host of Moodys and Sankeys,—a "revival" on so grand a scale that the designs of Rome would be effectually frustrated, and the Protestant religion preserved.

IV. Out of such a struggle the Protestant cause would come with such acquired momentum, so to speak, that, "following the lines of least resistance," there would be required new guarantees for Protestant liberty, and the country would be formally dedicated to the "Cause of Christ." Our government would become a Christian government; and the dream of the Liberals of a contest for religious and civil liberty would become a fact only in so distant an age, that I frankly confess my inability to forecast either its advent or result.

V. Will you tell me that the principles of truth and justice forbid the betrayal of the cause, and repeat the old and hackneyed sentimentalism that "Truth is mighty, and will prevail?" I listen incredulously, and ask for its verification in the pages of history. Has truth always prevailed? Is "truth" a clearly defined force among the factors of social evolution, and of so potent a character that it will inevitably prevail, and determine the result? Will you tell me that I have not embraced all the factors in my calculation? The main factors upon which I have relied are (1) Romish persistence; (2) Protestant zeal, embracing the moral force of the country, as auxiliary factor; (3) political chicanery; and (4) Liberal indifference,—its force spent in negative assertions. Are not these constant quantities? While zeal and moral enthusiasm are alone to be found in the "religious" camp, where shall we look for the "vanguard of liberty"?

Therefore, I frankly confess, the struggle to which you invite us, or rather which you discern as inevitable, appears to me to be a struggle between Rome and "Christ," rather than Rome and Reason. On whichever side Liberals range their forces, it must still be under the standard of the cross, and they will eventually find themselves ground to the dust under a moral enthusiasm that now but provokes their derision.

DYER D. LUM.
NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Aug. 23, 1875.

TRUTH UNVEILING FALSEHOOD.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I lately visited the studio of Mrs. L. M. Spencer, in Newark, where I saw her allegorical painting of "Truth Unveiling Falsehood." The idea which it embodies seems so fully in unison with that for which THE INDEX is working, that I am prompted to send you a notice of it. It has been exhibited in Boston, and perhaps you may have seen it; but many of your readers, I presume, have no knowledge of it. The artist herself gives the following description of it:—

"Truth is the centre figure. Falsehood is on the left, with Ignorance at its feet. On the right is Confidence, resting against Truth, with Innocence in her lap. The picture is intended to represent and contrast the beauty and power of Truth, with the opposite results under the deceiving cover of Falsehood. Truth is represented as a spiritual being, to typify its eternal principle. It is represented as shedding light, because Truth dispels the darkness of Ignorance, as day does that of night. The face of Truth is calm, passionless, and inscrutable; for in Truth there is neither love nor hate. It is not through revenge that it exposes villainy, but because it is a law of the great All, that light will banish darkness. It is not from love that it protects Confidence and Innocence, but because it has, with them, affinities. Naught can change its calm, for it is the source of all power. Under its mere presence the veil and mask of Falsehood arise, and are dissolved by the attraction of Truth, as the mists and fogs of night disappear at the approach of the morning sun. Ignorance, grovelling at the feet of Falsehood, is frightened, not at the brutal monster that Truth unveils, for she refuses to look or hear; but her weak and perverted vision is dazzled and horrified by the beautiful light of Truth, and she buries her grey and dishevelled head in the folds of what she has always supposed, and still supposes, to be her only support and protection. Quite the reverse is the case on the other side of the picture, where Confidence and Innocence, protected by Truth, nestle against her pure and simple robe in blissful security. Truth is represented as assuming the human form, because it is humanity that needs Truth to enlighten and protect it; and woman in particular, that her smile and her words, which are the first that mankind in its innocence looks up to, may not teach it error."

I am not a critic in art, and cannot say what technical faults this picture may have; nor did I even, at the moment of looking at it, desire to know. It was enough to give myself up to the impression of the exceeding beauty of many of its details, and of the force and truthfulness of the idea conveyed by the allegory. The face of Truth has in it, to me, an impress of the Eternal Beauty; and Confidence and Innocence—the mother and child—have, to me, far more expression and interest than those copies of the Madonna and Child that are presented to us.

But perhaps my impressions would not have been so vivid and satisfactory, if the artist herself had not been at my side, diffusing the glow of her own idealizations and enthusiasm over this offspring of her brain and heart. Though not very familiar with the term Free Religion, and scarcely knowing of the existence of THE INDEX, I found her in full sympathy with the principles and spirit of each; and in her way laboring and sacrificing for what she believes to be truth, irrespective of pecuniary reward. Besides giving the impression of being a woman of rare genius, she also gives evidence of being actuated by high-toned, moral principle.

Mrs. Spencer does not wish, at present, to sell this picture. It is the first of a series of three which she has planned, and is an embodiment of ideas which she felt constrained to put upon the canvas, which she feels to be a part of herself, and which she hopes may, at some time, be a benefit to the world by its teachings. Pecuniary circumstances, however, induce her to make the attempt to realize something from the work, without further delay. She has therefore made arrangements to have a limited number of photographs of the highest order taken of it, for which she wishes to obtain subscribers, at $15.00 a copy. The original painting may be about six by eight feet in size, and the photograph about eighteen by twenty-four inches. The copy gives a good rendering of the original. It seems highly desirable that the artist should succeed in disposing of these photographs; and the lovers of truth and freedom, as well as those of art, can hardly fail to appreciate and encourage her noble efforts. A. H.

THE BEECHER-TILTON CASE.

OZARK, Mo., Aug. 12, 1875.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—I have been pleased with the course you have pursued in regard to the Beecher-Tilton scandal during the progress of this sensational drama. You have very commendably refrained from making any of those unchaste or prejudicial comments on the case during the trial that other papers have so unscrupulously given to the public. Since the evidence on both sides of the case has been given to the public, and a partial technical verdict rendered, I think THE INDEX has done its duty as a journal of independent and honest convictions, in expressing its own opinion of the scandal, and the moral which it teaches.

If Æsop's personified foxes and crows could teach the ancients the spirit of those times, certainly this great modern scandal, involving some of the leading characters of the age, is not without its moral for us, if we can discern what the "Hæc fabula docet" is. Whether this protracted trial has proven Henry Ward Beecher guilty of adultery, or Theodore Tilton guilty of a dark, malicious conspiracy against his friend and benefactor, the partisans of the two principal actors in this unique legal drama will continue for a time to dispute; and whether the whole truth can ever be extracted from the falsehood and intrigue that have been employed by the parties from the incipency of this affair may be reasonably doubted. But that the public estimate of the cardinal virtue on which our whole social structure is founded—marital fidelity—has been explicitly expressed, as you have said, during this trial cannot, I think, be denied by any observing mind. What that estimate is, the agonizing wish of thousands to see Mr. Beecher's character exculpated from the charge of adultery, and the crushing denunciation of others who believed him guilty, have unmistakably shown during the six months of the trial.

Whatever may be the extent of secret licentious practices and marital incontinence beneath the public life of society, chastity in both man and woman is still esteemed as a virtue of inestimable worth; the marriage vow and the purity of home are still sacred to the moral sentiments of civilized mankind; and a libertine, though a gifted and popular minister whom the world has loved to honor, finds no protection from the doom of his iniquity, when he violates the public conscience by invading the sanctity of home, and forming illicit relations with the wives of other men. Ignoring the guilt or innocence of all the parties in this trial, the case, as you have shown, has a moral for this age. It reveals, with a truthfulness that few other events could have done, the real views of the public on the most important subject of social life. This seems to be a transitional age in regard to many philosophical and religious beliefs; and during this transition we may naturally look to see the wildest and most pernicious theories and practices prevail among some. Reforms are always accompanied by fanaticism and dangerous heresies. Seeing some of the old beliefs and customs retreating before the march of modern thought and progress, a few hasty theoretical adventurers have concluded that all the institutions of religious, social, and political life, the collective wisdom of the past, are without any foundation in the nature and wants of man, and have attempted to inspire the world with their own infatuation.

Prominent among such agitators are the advocates of the "free love" doctrine. The discussion of woman's rights has revealed the dark picture of woman's subjugation to man. A strong feeling of rebellion against this condition has been excited in many minds that love justice and hate tyranny. A general and healthy feeling of opposition to the unjust restrictions and oppressions which have retarded the development of womanhood has been produced by the woman's right's movement, which will not abate till woman receives her rightful position as the equal co-laborer with man in the struggle of life. But some infatuated social theorists have rashly attempted to destroy the most sacred and indispensable institution of our social life, by advocating a sickly, sentimental doctrine which they are pleased to call "free love." To analyze this so-called "gospel of freedom," and show its radical incompatibility with social order and moral purity, would require more space than you can afford one correspondent. But is not the Beecher-Tilton scandal a more lucid commentary on this new theory of sexual ethics than any a priori argument could present? Whether Henry Ward Beecher has been proven guilty or innocent in this late trial, "free love" has certainly been tried on its own boasted principles, and found by the verdict of the public mind hopelessly defective as a basis of social organization.

Admitting all that has been charged against the parties in this trial, they have but acted in conformity with the teachings of "free love." They have but exercised the sexual rights which Mrs. Woodhull and her coadjutors maintain inalienable. If Mrs. Tilton yielded to the amorous solicitations of Mr. Beecher, she was but manifesting a "beautiful and womanly concessiveness"; while Mr. Tilton, in attempting to protect his household from the rapacity of this clerical sensualist, or in concerning himself about the secret relationship between his wife and her gifted pastor, was following the promptings of a selfish and barbarous nature, and deserving the withering rebuke of all the generous men and women emancipated from the old thralldom of sexual slavery! Will the advocates of this perverted freedom consider the moral which this noisome scandal teaches, and study more thoroughly the broader ethics of the sexual relation, which lie at the very foundation of domestic security and social welfare?

Yours truly, H. CLAY NEVILLE.

ANOTHER WORD ON "SELFISHNESS."

MR. ABBOT:—

I wish, with your permission, to occupy a small space for the purpose of saying a few words touching my "Short Essay on Selfishness," which you did me the favor to publish in THE INDEX of July 15.

I frankly confess that I believe the motive which prompted me to write it, and send it to you for publication, was nothing more or less than pure selfishness. I will explain.

I have a great desire to entertain an exalted opinion of our race. Anything that I can hear, see, or experience, tending to the establishment of that opinion, is intensely gratifying to my feelings, and, therefore, of inestimable personal benefit to me.

Being well aware that the views I hold in regard to the selfishness of mankind are opposed to those of a great majority of people, I hoped, and much desired, that the publication of my thoughts on the subject would bring forth from some of your very able correspondents evidence sufficient to convince me that I am wrong.

I am thankful to "W. C. R." for criticising me in THE INDEX of Aug. 5. His article indicates that it is not the first time he has given thought to the subject; and, no doubt, he fancies he has finally succeeded in persuading himself into the belief that man is not, "under all conceivable circumstances, selfish." He says some things that, upon superficial observation, sound pretty correct, but will not bear the test of close scrutiny. He fails entirely to gratify my selfishness with that which I have been, and am now, so earnestly seeking; namely, satisfactory proof that the views set forth in my essay are incorrect.

Permit me to add that "W. C. R." cannot possibly be more strongly opposed to the dissemination of anything having immoral tendency than I am. I presume I am as thoroughly convinced that I am right, as he is that I am wrong. I am a seeker—I might say a worshipper—of truth; and, when I think I have found it and give it publicity, I cannot see that I am guilty of doing wrong. When I sent my essay to you for publication, I did not intend, or for a moment think I was, doing anything immoral; nor do I now, after having had time for due reflection, think so.

J. R. S.

A QUESTION.

MR. ABBOT:—

In your article, "The Republic's Need," you say that what the republic needs above all else is the "religion of universal consecration to intelligence and virtue"; and that, as means to this end, every child should be required to receive as good an education as the common schools can furnish. All of this I heartily indorse. You must, however, be aware of the continued and exhausting struggle, on the part of the masses of the people, for a bare subsistence, and of the assistance that many children are compelled to render towards paying house rent, securing food, fuel, and current expenses.

I wish to ask you the question, How shall these children be allowed time, furnished with needed clothes, books, and incidental expenses, to attend school, and the entire family not be caused to suffer from lack of the lost means? Would not many families really suffer for physical comforts were the children sent to school?

I am not discussing the question whether people have a moral right to keep children from school, and impress them as laborers; but simply ask, if a still greater injury would not occur, if this class of children were forced to attend school while the present unjust relations between capital and labor exist?

OLIVE N. PRESTON.

[This is a very proper question to ask, and it is very well put by our correspondent. We cannot pretend to give it, however, a full answer in detail; for the difficulty is one which only experience and great practical sagacity can fully meet. But no system of universal guaranteed education would be complete or feasible, which should take no account of it; and the community should in some manner provide that no real suffering should follow in the cases described. The children must be educated for their own future welfare, and the temporary needs of their parents are no sufficient reason for depriving them of schooling; but honest and industrious parents who are so poor as to require the earnings of their children to eke out the family expenses should receive all the assistance needed to make good this loss. Whether this end should be accomplished by public or private philanthropy, might be a question; but there can be no question of the children's right to education, or of the parent's right to all necessary help while the children are receiving it.—ED.]

A MAN OF STRAW.

EDITOR INDEX:—

When your correspondent "Pendragon" was a boy, I think he must have been a leader of his associates in the sportful practice of setting up and knocking down men of straw. What he could find in my letter from which to spin such a yarn of a lecture on liberality as he did in THE INDEX of Aug. 19, I am wholly unable to see. He must either have read my letter very carelessly, or else on that particular occasion used Christian spectacles. I am the more inclined to accept the latter hypothesis, from his facility in the use of that endearing title, "brother." Now let us look over his communication a little, and see if he is not belaboring an enemy of his own creation.

Brother Pendragon says: "Christianity and the creeds may be no preventive of crime." Now this remark contains "the head and front of my offending." Brother Pendragon here admits everything I asserted in my letter, the whole drift of which was to show that the claims set up for "Christian influences" as a corrective of morals are not supported by facts. I did not say that Piper killed the little girl because he was a Christian; I said that the much-vaunted efficacy of "Christian influences" was powerless to prevent his killing her. I did not say that Dr. Lorimer's ear-splitting homilies and ludicrous contortions incited Pemberton to the commission of his awful crime; but I said that a church that defended and approved the lasciviousness, the intemperance, the debaucheries, and the hypocrisy of a Kalloch cannot be expected to tolerate a man in its pulpit who does not put sectarianism above morality, and consequently that such a church is a frail defence against the crime of which this "worshipper" Pemberton has been proved guilty.

Now, brother Pendragon calls me many hard names, all because in his heedless reading of my letter he tortured a meaning from it which its language does not justify. He went off at half-cock. Read it again, brother Pendragon, and you will see, if you will wipe a little of the Christian dust from your spectacles, that I called attention to these murders committed by attendants on the sanctuary, not as a consequence of such attendance, but to show that the claims set up for the influence of Christianity upon the morals of those within the sphere of its influence are without foundation. Now what is there in all this that so stirs the ire of brother Pendragon as to lead him to characterize me as illiberal, bigoted, intolerant, unwise, unfair, absurd, insulting, false, and inconsistent?

Z.

DIVINITY.

EDITOR INDEX:—

The equanimity with which Mr. Voysey answered my letter (INDEX No. 286) is worthy of an admiration I am sorry I cannot extend to the reasons he offered. His temper is sweet, but his argument is defective. He slides off the subject in hand to others not in controversy.

First, he has "no doubt I will agree with him, if there is a God at all, He must be good." Well, what of it? Gravitation is good. The quality or standing of the being referred to I did not, and do not now, inquire about. Before we talk of the properties of a thing, let us make sure it is a thing in reality, and not a figment of the imagination that is before us.

Secondly, Mr. Voysey says: "Mind as we know it upon earth is no more fathomed yet than the Divine mind." Now I make no move to fathom any mind, either human or so called divine. The human mind is a fact; not so the other. Let us know if we have or can find a divine mind at all, before we talk about measuring it. Here Mr. Voysey indulges in a current sophism it seems needful to notice. He places the mind of earthly beings and the Divine mind, by way of comparison, in juxtaposition, and then diverts attention from the real point of the proposition by declaring our inability to fathom either of them; at the same time he forgets to take note of the difference between them. A prime difference is that one is a thing we know, while the other is a supposition "only assumed as the necessary cause of mundane phenomena." Is not this "necessary cause" another assumption? Is it logical to draw the same conclusion from an assumed postulate as from a known one? He falls to the work of comparing two things before he is lawfully possessed of one of the two objects of comparison.

Thirdly, he says that "evolution required mind," or his synonyme, God. Such is the easy method and habit of theology. It found a God behind every truth, while the painstaking scientist finds behind those truths, not mind or God, but law; and the expounders of evolution of life and form banish mind, eject gods, and demonstrate in their stead the adequate supremacy of law. Law is without heart or brain, void of sympathy or feeling, and respects nothing but itself—its own rule of action.

Agassiz propounded a truth which his friends seemed disposed to dissipate, when he said: "God goes out of the universe as fast as Darwinism comes in." Theologians winced under the force of this fact, long before it was uttered, as they saw it from time to time pointed out by the index-fingers of astronomy and geology. Mr. Voysey does not know the "mode of God's existence." Again we say, Never mind the "mode": what God does he mean? "The gods have fled, but man is here"—the only known sovereign of the universe, the suns excepted.

Thus Mr. Voysey goes from problem to properties. Mark Twain says he can always make an impromptu speech, if he have three weeks to prepare it in. The celerity with which Mark goes from the impromptu to something else is laughable. Mr. Voysey's transit from the main point to collateral ones is almost as dexterous, but not unctuous enough to laugh at.

A. S. H.

OAKLAND, July 18, 1875.

GOD.

The assumption of materialism that intelligence is not commensurate with that which involves a tissue of absurdities. For if intelligence is not commensurate with that which is, then (absurdity number one) the finite transcends the infinite, the effect surpasses the cause; and therefore (absurdity number two) the infinite itself is finite, or limited. Now as the limited, no matter how vastly beyond conception it may in the aggregate be, cannot be self-sustaining, we reach absurdity number three; the climax, i. e., the non-existence, of all things. On the other hand, if we assume the existence of a personal God who knows all things, who is the source of all power, from whom all things proceed, we arrive at the same absurd conclusion—the non-existence of all things. For if there is a personal God, then there is a culminating point; and if there is a culminating point, then infinity is a myth; and if infinity is a myth, then we and all things else are myths. It is by virtue of there being nothing outside of which there is not an infinity of things, that anything is in existence; it is by virtue of there being no power outside of which there is not an infinity of power, that there is any power at all; it is by virtue of there being no knowledge outside of which there is not an infinity of knowledge, that there is any knowledge whatever. It is by virtue of there being nothing outside of which there is not an infinity of things, by there being no power outside of which there is not an infinity of power, by there being no knowledge outside of which there is not an infinity of knowledge, that there is nothing outside of God; i. e., that he has no outside, and, therefore, no limit. Hence, it is evident that intelligence and power are commensurate with, but cannot transcend, that which is; and that that which is God.

In a word, it is obvious that God is that which is (something), or that which is not (nothing); and as he cannot be a part of that which is, as a part is necessarily limited, he must be that which is in its infinity. To which must necessarily attach infinite power, infinite intelligence; for to be infinite in one is to be infinite in all; to be finite in one is to be finite in all.

E. B. B.

Boston, Aug. 4.

ACCEPT COMMOTION before stagnation, the leap of the torrent before the stillness of the swamp.—Tyn-dall.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON, has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAHAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. ABBOT, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interest in Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. ABBOT. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. ABBOT. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5. PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL.

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogmas.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
1 vol.....	1.00
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	1.50
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poetry Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gottinger Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
The Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor, 2 vols. Per vol. Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.00
HAMILTON'S Lectures. 1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse. The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance. The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image. The Marble Faun. The English Note-Books. The American Note-Books. The French and Italian Note-Books. Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Life.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings for Stories.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physical and Political; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. 1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body, and the Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with the Writers treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A. Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.) Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from Day. 2 vols.....	1.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. 1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women. Essay on Liberty--both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN) Songs of the Sierras. 1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASHY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. 2.00
Catholicism: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans--Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Mis-demeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations--A. D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologicus-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Glass-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNINSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair. The Newcomes. Adventures of Philip, Pennicott. The Virginians. Esmond, and Lovel the Widower. Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.2
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
On Soaked in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
The Voyage Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldsworthy's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES, IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heresies and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of TWO DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.

For sale by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

B O O K Card,

—AND—

Job

PRINTING,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 TREMONT PLACE,
BOSTON.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX,
Tremont Place, Boston.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. Frothingham, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform."

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Ednah D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247. Send for Circular.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Landaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY

335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!

THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL, for both sexes, MERIDEN, CONN. EMILY J. LEONARD, Principal.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

FRED GRANT & CO.

A Capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

MORSE'S PAINE.

PHOTOGRAPHS

For sale at the office of THE INDEX. Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cts.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS. Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

REPORTS,

SERMONS,

ESSAYS,

and PAMPHLETS,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly printed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 Tremont Place,
BOSTON.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

JUST PUBLISHED.

!!THE SHINING RIVER!!

A New Sabbath-school Song Book.

By H. S. & W. O. PERKINS.

Price 35 cents. $30.00 per hundred.

"Rest in Thee," "What Jesus may Say," "Wandering Child," "What are These?" "Watchman, Awake!" are specimens of the titles of the beautiful new hymns, to sweet new melodies.

THE HIGH SCHOOL CHOIR. By L. O. EMERSON and W. S. TILDEN. Price $1.00. $9.00 per dozen.

The "High School Choir" is similar in general design to the very popular "Hour of Singing," which has been almost universally used in High Schools. The present work is in no way inferior to its predecessor, and is entirely fresh and new.

THE SONG MONARCH. Price 75 cts. $7.50 per dozen. By H. R. PALMER, assisted by L. O. EMERSON.

Do not think of teaching a Singing-school without using this attractive, popular, and useful book.

Specimen copies sent, post-paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,

711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1875.

WHOLE No. 299.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, it is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —.

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT: PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

SEVERAL AMERICAN clergymen attended the Bonn Conference, which lasted three days.

OF THE 70,000 voters controlled by Tammany Hall in New York city, 60,000 are said to be Irish Catholics.

FATHER BEKK, General of the Jesuits, is the Pope behind the Pope, and has made Pius IX. for twenty years or so the instrument of that crafty society.

THE RAPID increase of rascality among mankind might excite alarm lest Virtue should finally forsake the earth, were it not that there is at the same time a notable increase in the number of Upright Pianos.

PROFESSORS TAIT AND DEWAR, according to Nature, have disproved the supposed discovery of Mr. Crookes that light exerts a mechanical action, and refer the highly interesting motions of his little "wind-mills" to the action of heat.

THE NEW YORK Herald's correspondent has been lately indulging in a week's "investigation" of the materialized ghosts exhibited by the Eddy brothers, but returns only to scoff in a very perverse way at what he saw—or didn't see.

HON. J. W. THORNE, who was expelled last winter from the North Carolina Legislature for alleged blasphemy and atheism, has been elected to the Constitutional Convention in that State by a larger majority than that by which he had been elected to the Legislature.

AT A MEETING of the Bavarian Academy of Sciences on July 28, Dr. Döllinger stated that in the fourteenth century monks were burned as heretics, under the Emperor Ludwig, for asserting the infallibility of the Pope. Times have bravely changed since that day.

A RUMOR that the Prince of Wales had recognized at a garden party the princely rank of Cardinal Manning, which of course was conferred by the Pope alone, was enough to excite attention and inquiry in the House of Lords. England is very sensitive to the Pope's claims as a sovereign just now.

REV. W. H. H. MURRAY, ex-pastor of Park Street Church in this city, is to start a new weekly paper, called the Golden Rule, on October 6. It will be of the "Liberal Orthodox" order, and is probably designed to supplant the Christian Union—Mr. Murray being compared by his admirers to Henry Ward Beecher.

THE ABBE MICHAUD thus exposes in the Independent the miserable position of the "Liberal Romanists" of France, who are ground between two millstones: "They are despised by strict Romanists, who treat them as heretics, on account of their Liberalism; and they are despised by the Liberals on account of their Romanism." These words apply with a slight change to the "Liberal Christian" sects here at home.

THIS TELEGRAPHIC despatch in the daily papers is certainly a sensational one, and we only give it for what it is worth: "WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—A singular story has been current here for two or three days to the effect that Cardinal McCloskey carried with him to Rome the details of a scheme devised to break down the public school system of this country, and, if approved by the Pope, it will be immediately inaugurated."

GEOLOGISTS are divided as to the probable effect on the climate of Europe, if the proposed conversion of the Desert of Sahara into an inland sea should be actually accomplished. Some think that the cessation of the hot winds from the Desert would so lower the temperature of Europe as to cause a new glacial epoch; while others think that it might so diminish the rain-fall of the Italian and Swiss Alps as actually to reduce the existing glaciers. It would be wise to arrive at some degree of unanimity of opinion on the subject, before taking a step which might be fraught with momentous consequences to the whole civilized world.

THERE IS something very touching in the joy of Ernst von Bandel, the aged sculptor of the colossal Hermann monument, in the final completion of his life-work, and its dedication in the presence of thirty thousand spectators on the pine-covered Grotenberg. For thirty-seven years he had toiled patiently over this magnificent realization in art of his ideal of German unity and strength; and when at last the Emperor grasped him by both hands, and congratulated him amidst the wild applause of the spectators, he sank into a chair overcome with emotion. His great statue was finished; the national ideal it embodied was already an accomplished fact; and now, at seventy-five years, the venerable artist beheld the double fulfilment of his life-dream. Seldom has human ambition been crowned with such success; and seldom has it deserved the crown so well.

IT APPEARS that we were misled by the now forgotten journal on the authority of which we recently referred to Judge Taft, of Cincinnati, as the Republican candidate for Governor of Ohio. A correspondent writes to us: "He was not nominated for Governor of Ohio by the Republican party. It had not the pluck to nominate so good a man." We are sorry to have made this mistake, and still more sorry to learn that it is one. Another informant states that Judge Taft would undoubtedly have received the nomination, if it had not been for his connection with the Cincinnati Bible-in-Schools case in 1870. All the greater is the pity, if his bold defence of the right side of that important question frightened the Republicans of Ohio from making so excellent a nomination. It is the State of Ohio, not Judge Taft, that will prove to be the loser by their moral cowardice.

THIS communication to the Montreal Daily Witness of September 3, on the Guibord riot, from a writer characterized by that journal as "one of our foremost and most thoughtful citizens," contains a lesson even for the United States: "It has become too evident that here, as in Spain and in Sicily, Vaticanism adopts as its natural allies disloyalty and brigandism, and is striking at the very roots not only of constitutional government but of social order. It may be doing this blindly, and may not be directly responsible for the lawlessness of its mobs; but it is responsible for its fruits, and in any case it has become absolutely necessary that Montreal shall promptly and decisively remove the stain cast upon it by the apparent lawlessness of its people. This should be done under form of law, and by the properly constituted authorities; and if they feel themselves weak, let them not hesitate to swear in every loyal man in the city as a special constable, and overawe the conspirators and ruffians by force and numbers. A second failure to enforce the law would be an irretrievable disgrace to the city, and the police authorities are bound to exonerate themselves from the blame of allowing yesterday's riot to proceed unchecked. Still the matter should not be made an occasion of unnecessary display or parade of any kind. It is altogether an occasion of humiliation and sorrow that in Canada, in the nineteenth century, the interference of the highest court in the realm should have been necessary to secure common justice in such a case; and the less said about it the better. We should also bear in mind, independently of higher considerations, that the reputation of Montreal for neglect of sanitary precautions, priestly domination, and for mob rule, are already driving capital and skill from our doors, and damaging seriously our commercial prosperity. The checking of these evils is, therefore, becoming not merely a question of sentiments of loyalty and patriotism, but of absolute self-preservation for all classes and creeds of our people."

The Struggle for Supremacy over Conscience.

A DISCOURSE DELIVERED IN NEW YORK, JAN. 31, 1875.

BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

The recent discussion in England between the friends and foes of the Church of Rome, on the question of civil allegiance, may yet reach us with its agitations. But whether it does or not, it touches a matter of vital concern to ourselves, even to all mankind; a matter of deep, practical, and permanent interest—this, namely: the lawful supremacy over conscience; to whom does it belong? Is there any such supremacy? And if so, where is the claim to it lodged? This is the heart of the issue in England. All other issues cluster about this, and owe their significance to it. This, indeed, is the only radical issue. The friends of the Church affirm that she is, by divine appointment, king and priest over conscience; the opponents of the Church dissent, going so far as to say that no such king or priest has been anointed; that in fact no such king or priest can ever be acknowledged. The very idea of such authority on the one side, such submission on the other, must be repelled; conscience is not bound, but free.

In this discussion it should not be forgotten that the Church of Rome has, in every period, borne faithful testimony to the dignity and authority of conscience. The strongest words on this point have been spoken by its greatest teachers. Conscience is called "the commander and messenger of God"; "a divine tribunal, placed by God, and made supreme for us"; a power that "binds by virtue of divine precept," "so binds that he who does not fulfil its commands commits sin." She teaches even, according to some, that "an invincibly erroneous conscience, when dictating what is positively wrong, must be followed under pain of sin"; for conscience is the rule by which all morality is measured. High authorities in the Church declare that to go against conscience is never lawful. Dr. John Henry Newman states the case forcibly in this language: "Certainly, if I am obliged to bring religion into after-dinner toasts (which, indeed, does not seem quite the thing), I shall drink—to the Pope, if you please; still, to conscience first, and to the Pope afterwards." This is strong, though not especially strong, language. It sounds like the speech of a rationalist. It might proceed from an advocate of the extreme doctrine of freedom. Hearing it, one is tempted to exclaim: There is then no controversy on this point between Rome and Reason. If God judges through conscience; if disobedience to conscience is guilt; if obedience to conscience is virtue; if conscience is before priest and bishop; if they, who, without any fault, are convinced that theirs is the true religion, and serve God in justice, are to be reckoned among the members of the true Church,—then the case of the free rationalist is conceded. Nay, not quite. The Church bears this emphatic testimony to the dignity and rank of conscience, only to make more august the authority to which it must bow. It seems to say: Yes, conscience is high born; it holds a sceptre, and wears a crown. How noble, then, must be the power to which it must submit! The Church is not a king of menials, but a king of kings!

These lofty encomiums are never pronounced without qualification. The most liberal Catholics are careful to urge the necessity of having "a right" conscience, of "loving the supreme good," of "seeking light for the removal of doubts." They are particular to say that in praising conscience they mean conscience "properly understood." If they mention conscience before the Pope, they do mention the Pope in the same breath with conscience. Dr. Newman expressly defines the "rights of conscience" as "the rights of the Creator," and the "duties of conscience" as "duties to the Creator"; intimating plainly that the Creator has established a tribunal at which conscience must render an account. He denounces in strong terms the popular notion of conscience as a natural faculty which is a law to itself, not amenable to any other law, lawgiver, or judge, and independent of unseen obligations; that he calls "a counterfeit of conscience," "the fiction of an irreligious age." The authority of the Church over conscience has been asserted too often, too recently, and too unequivocally, to be denied or questioned now. Such authority is implied in the very existence of the Church as a divine institution. The Churchman who believes, as every Churchman does believe, the Church to be a divine institution, established to meet a human necessity; an institution planted, illuminated, guided, inspired, empowered by God himself; the organ of the Holy Spirit, and the visible body of the Christ who is the Creator's fullness; its sacraments charged with grace; its dogmas vital with truth; its priesthood instinct with regenerating life,—must concede the authority of the Church over conscience. What other authority is there than that? What can be the function or the use of a church that has no such authority? The papal syllabus does not go out of its way when it denounces, as a fatal error, the notion that any but members of the "true Church of Christ" can be saved, and brands as heresy the doctrine that moral laws "stand in no need of divine sanction." The Vatican decrees teach no novelty when they declare that "man being wholly dependent upon God, and created reason being absolutely subject to uncreated truth, we are bound to yield to God, by faith in his revelation, the full obedience of our intelligence and will." In a volume of Essays on Religion and Literature, edited a few years ago by Archbishop Manning, the submission of conscience to the supreme authority of the Church is taught with a fullness and a positiveness that leave nothing to be desired. It is there stated, on page 36, that "Catholics regard Christian virtue as the will's abject prostration before Almighty God,—an attitude of mind which their opponents condemn as degrading and unmanly; and, since they happen to be our fellow-countrymen, they brand it as un-English." Elsewhere, on page 45, the natural virtues of "justice, benevolence, courage, patriotism, and the like, which their opponents regard with much respect and admiration," are pronounced "the distortions and caricatures of virtue rather than real virtues." "The Church," it is written on page 90, "we must never forget, is an infallible guide, not in faith only, but in morals also; and every single proposition of which right or wrong is a predicate is under her direct jurisdiction." To quote further: "The society (Church) is supernatural solely in virtue of the fact that Christ is its head; and since without him it would be no divine society at all, it would be wanting in the one condition required for success in readjusting and restoring the spiritual nature of man." And once more: "Unless the society could do more than offer an opinion, it could not enlighten; truth alone can enlighten. But the society has the truth; any body of men which has not, or does not teach, the truth is not the society, or any part of it; but to teach the truth is at once the object of the society's existence, and to be conformable to the will of God, that is to be holy." Numerous passages to the same effect might be cited from this volume, but they are unnecessary; in fact, no declarations are necessary to establish a position which follows inevitably from a first principle. The claim of the Church to be king and priest over conscience is implied in its mere existence; the confessional is a visible assertion of it; the pretence of infallibility covers it. By freedom of conscience the Romanist means freedom to have and exercise and enjoy such a conscience as the Church approves—freedom to surrender conscience to its dominion, freedom to submit conscience to its decree. As I once heard an eminent doctor in that communion say in public—the words are as fresh in my memory as if heard yesterday:—"Freedom of religion is freedom to profess the true religion, which is the Catholic."

That this doctrine is fraught with extreme danger to society, who but a Romanist will dispute? He who claims authority over conscience claims authority over all human concerns, public and private, of great and of small degree. On this point Mr. Gladstone, dropping for an instant the judicial calmness of the reasoner, breaks out in glowing indignation: "I care not to ask," he says, "if there be dregs or tatters of human life, such as can escape from the description and boundary of morals. I submit that duty is a power which rises with us in the morning, and goes to rest with us at night. It is co-extensive with the action of our intelligence. It is the shadow which cleaves to us go where we will, and which only leaves us when we leave the light of life." It is strange that any should fail to perceive that spiritual authority carries temporal authority with it; that the right to rule conscience conveys the right to rule the State, society, the home, the details of individual existence. It is strange that any should fail to perceive that the resignation of temporal authority is a resignation of all authority whatsoever; that to decline interference with political, social, household, private affairs is to decline interference with intellect and morals—with the most interior concerns of the soul. There is simply nothing men do, in any department, in any relation, in any direction, that does not involve in some proportion the elements of the moral law. It is plainly impossible for a human creature to act at all without putting into his action, knowingly or unknowingly, a moral sentiment and judgment.

The authorities of the Church, when they speak sincerely, have no hesitation in admitting this. In the volume of Essays just quoted, Archbishop Manning himself says, page 18: "If England is ever to be united to Christendom, it is by submission to the living authority of the Vicar of Jesus Christ." And on the next page he declares that "the royal supremacy has perished by the law of mortality which consumes all earthly things; and at this period of our history the supremacy of the Vicar of Jesus Christ reënters as full of life as when Henry VIII. resisted Clement VII., and Elizabeth withstood S. Pius V. The undying authority of the Holy See is once more an active power in England; the shadow of Peter has fallen again upon it." It is not within the capacity of the English language to make a more explicit declaration than that. The right to control education, marriage, the nurture and instruction of children, follows as a thing of course, and is asserted with an unreserve as frank as it is imperative.

This danger of interference with civil concerns is no imaginary one. It is concealed in the mere existence of a spiritual power. It is covertly avowed by every one who professes faith in the authority of such a power. It is no bugbear, but a very real peril. It is not a peril that menaces England alone, though it menaces England seriously at present; it is a peril that menaces every form of government, every State, every mode of social organization, in proportion as allegiance to a spiritual authority is confessed in it. It may yet be a danger in America; it is already a danger and more than a danger in those portions of America where the Catholic faith is strong.

But the assertion of lordship over conscience involves another peril more subtle and radical still. I mean the peril of moral perversion, corruption—yes, disintegration. The legitimate fruit of this principle is that ugly thing called Jesuitism, the very name of which excites such horror in the modern mind, as being associated with the evil doctrine that the end excuses the means, and with the ingenious casuistry that makes the worse appear the better reason, and justifies, or seems to justify, treachery, deceit, falsehood, in the cause of God. "This," says Thomas Carlyle, "is the fell heresy bequeathed to us by Ignatius (the founder of the Jesuit order), that no man speaks the truth to you or to himself; but that every man lies—with blasphemous audacity, and does not know that he is lying,—before God and man, in regard to almost all manner of things." "There had been liars in the world; but there was in this of Jesuit Ignatius an apotheosis of lying, a kind of subtle quintessence and deadly virus of lying, the like of which had never been seen before. Measure it if you can: prussic acid and chloroform are poor to it! Men had served the Devil, and men had very imperfectly served God; but to think that God could be served more perfectly by taking the Devil into partnership—this was a novelty of St. Ignatius."

But this, too, was a simple, we may even say an inevitable, consequence of the doctrine that the Church has authority over conscience. For the Church, being an institution in society, an organization among others in the world, having at heart the security of its dominion, the extension of its sway, the spread of its influence, the confirmation of its authority, becomes, from the exigency of the situation, committed to diplomatic relations, and immersed in the complications of politics. Its divine right to exist being assumed, the divine right to preserve its existence follows. That is naturally justified and warranted which is conducive to this end; the expedient is regarded as lawful; the convenient is confounded with the right; and the precept to do all for the glory of God is construed as a command to equivocate and palter and lie for it. The Jesuit principle conducts immediately to this conclusion. The assumption of a divine authority in any organization contains all that this conclusion implies.

Idle is any protest against this inference. Idle is the attempt to confine the practical confirmations of its justice to past times and obsolete conditions of society. The principle, if valid at all, is valid in one period as much as in another; the inference from it is as clear in one period as in another. And if the inference is not openly illustrated in processes of law and conduct, it is partly because opportunity for such illustration is not given; it is not because the laws of reasoning are abolished.

The attempt to reconcile the doctrine of authority with any conception of moral freedom is sheer casuistry. The Catholic theory of freedom of conscience is at the heart fallacious. "Freedom of conscience is freedom of conscience to obey the divine law." Very well; but who is commissioned to announce the divine law? To say that the Church of Rome is so commissioned is simply to beg the whole question. As cordially as I admit the truth of the definition, so heartily I deny that the divine law has any organized tribunal, or any authorized expositor, among men. Neither Church nor State, neither code nor book, neither popular usage nor established ethics, have any title to so august a dignity. The divine law, I contend, has never been voiced so that all may hear it, or written so that all may read it, or instituted so that all may consciously live under it. It is to a great extent undiscovered; its revelations are to be gathered from many different sources by the exercise of observation and reason. It is proclaimed in the material creation; it is wrought into the texture of society; it is inscribed on the tablets of the heart; it is articulated in the lessons of experience; it is expressed in literature; it is enunciated in the first principles of reason,—but we see no ground for thinking that it is committed in full and explicitly to the keeping of any human power, spiritual or temporal; that it surrounds any crowned or mitred head with the halo of its majesty; that it bestows its immortal sanction upon any soul, or any collection of souls, however arranged and disposed.

The Romanist would gladly drive the objector to an alternative. He says: You must either accept this doctrine of freedom that I contend for, or you must avow a doctrine of license, which, so far from being freedom, is bondage to animal passion. There is no freedom, he cries, worth speaking about, but rational freedom. Rational freedom is freedom to obey the dictates of reason. Reason dictates that one shall love the truth and practise righteousness. To love error and practise unrighteousness is bondage. Is the magnetic needle free when it deserts its watch of the North Star, and, veering unsteadily from side to side, points to any shining orb that chances to pass before its vision? Is the mind free when, throwing off its allegiance to knowledge, it offers up its enthusiastic devotion to every fancy of the hour?

Of course not. The errant needle is simply discharged of its magnetic force, and demoralized. The disloyal mind has lost its intellectual principle. But what should we say of a needle that pointed to a gilded ball in the sky, mistaking it for the North Star? What should we say of a mind that soberly surrendered itself to a dogmatic fiction, under the impression that it was the full and final knowledge? We should say that the needle retained no quality of the magnetic needle whatever; that the mind was destitute of all the attributes that belong to intelligence. To us the Church of Rome is such a gilded ball; to us the authority of Rome is such an ecclesiastical fiction.

The doctrine of the Church makes itself impressive and persuasive by the stress it lays on the grand virtue of obedience. It is put forward as the guarantee of that virtue, the bulwark on which it reposes; and by the solemnity with which it insists on the dangers of moral and social anarchy, it half convinces the timid and thoughtless of the validity of its principle. But here again the words of Thomas Carlyle occur to me: "Obedience, a virtue universally forgotten in these days, will have to become universally known again. Obedience is good, and indispensable; but if it be obedience to what is wrong and false—good heavens! there is no name for such a depth of human cowardice and calamity, spurned everlastingly by the gods."

Dr. Newman is eloquent over the contemptibleness of conscience, falsely so-called, "the right of thinking, speaking, writing, and acting, according to judgment or humor, without any thought of God at all; the right to be one's own master in all things, and to profess what one pleases, asking no one's leave, and accounting priest or preacher, speaker or writer, unutterably impertinent who dares to say one word against one's going to perdition, if he likes it, in his own way." But he cannot make a fair issue there between himself and the rationalists. No caricature like that can be passed off as a just description of the doctrine of a free conscience as held by thoughtful people. The import of that doctrine is no more or less than this: that conscience shall be free to obey the laws of reason, unrestricted by legal enactments, unembarrassed by social pains and penalties. The champions of the right of private conscience believed in conscience, or they never would have fought for the privilege of obeying it. They believed in conscience to the point of never confounding it with self-will, caprice, passionate impulse, or cold-blooded calculation of interests. They did not encounter persecution in its worst forms for the privilege of doing as they liked, but for the title to do what they ought. They wanted their own way in being religious, not in being irreligious. When they lived and struggled, conscience was not free. In not many places now is it perfectly free. If it be true that it is illegal for a Unitarian to vote in Maryland, conscience is not free there. If it be true that a Catholic cannot legally vote in New Hampshire, conscience is not free there. Conscience is free when no law or usage hinders its effort to yield allegiance to the rational laws as they are apprehended. Freedom to disavow conscience, to repudiate it, may be called freedom of wilfulness; it is a misnomer to call it freedom of conscience. Freedom to have no religion at all may be a desirable thing, but it is not freedom of religion. Freedom to blaspheme may be permitted, but it is not freedom of worship. The advocates of a free conscience merely claim the right of conformity with truth, conscientiously held, and of practising goodness as honestly revered. They believe in obedience, but to rational powers. They are earnest with a double earnestness,—an earnestness of desire to find what the rational power is, and an earnestness of loyalty to it when discovered. They are students first, and subjects afterwards. If they repudiate artificial authorities, it is only that they may revere authorities that are not artificial but genuine.

Theodore Parker, like other sturdy men of the transcendental school, in place of the tribunal of the Church, erected a tribunal in his own breast. He claimed for conscience a peculiar gift of vision by means of which it gazed on moral verities face to face, and by intuition beheld the eternal law of right. As the eye, by virtue of its structure, he said, takes cognizance of the forms and colors of material objects, so the conscience, by virtue of its constitution, takes cognizance of the unseen shapes of the moral world. "Conscience enables us not merely to learn the right by experiment and induction, but intuitively and in advance of experiment; so, in addition to the experimental way whereby we learn justice from the facts of human history, we have a transcendental way, and learn it from the facts of human nature, from immediate consciousness."

A doctrine like this seems to open the way to all manner of license. For in thus legitimating the individual conscience, and removing all outward standards whatever, room is given for every possible freak of wilfulness; self-delusion, passion, self-will, have full encouragement to play out their parts, and cloak their escapades under the mantle of conscience. But Mr. Parker was cautious. He would study the constant facts of the spiritual world, and thereby obtain a rule of conduct. He will hear what his friends have to say, what public opinion has to offer, what the best men advise; then he will consult his conscience, and follow its decision. "I am to do God's will soon as I know it, not before, and to take all possible pains to find it out." There is surely no license of wilfulness about this! The claim is for perfect but reasonable freedom.

The earnest conscience stands before a tribunal, but it is an invisible one. It admits the authority of a church, but a church never yet instituted or organized among men. It bends its head before a lord, but a lord whom human hands never crowned. It turns its gaze to a great crowd of witnesses, but no eye ever saw them, or ever will see them. When the early Christians refused to burn the pinch of incense in honor of pagan Jupiter, preferring death by the lions to life with an affronted conscience, they behaved not wilfully, though they seemed to. It was no individual conscience they consulted. They had regard to a vast body of moral conviction, stored up in the creed and lives of noble forerunners who had finished their course, and kept the faith. When Garrison, a poor, lonely youth, without helpers or mates, felt his conscience burn against slavery—still burn, though no kindred fires kept it in countenance; still burn, though the authorities he had revered failed him, society refusing its sympathy, law withholding its sanction, religion expressing its dissent; still burn, when all these turned against him, called him presumptuous and fanatical, and would fain have held him to silence,—he was far enough from yielding to the bidding of private caprice; far enough from repudiating the authority of the divine law over his conscience. It was then most of all that he showed his reverence for that authority. It was then that he bent lowest, and disavowed most utterly the wrestling impulses of his own breast. It was then, when to all appearance his personal conceit touched its sublimest point, that his personal humility touched the lowest; for then he felt most profoundly the presence of those eternal powers which were supreme over Church and State and society. Then, through the letter of his faith, he felt its spirit; then, through the form and semblance of his religion, he felt its soul; then, through the chapter and verse of his Scripture, he felt the Word.

This was authority, genuine authority, palpable authority, supreme authority, the authority of the invisible Church, which is the real Church anywhere and everywhere; this is the essential authority of the Church of Rome. "One with God is a majority." Indeed it is. But a man must be very sure that he is one with God, and not with some fiction he chooses to call God, some phantom of his fancy, some ignis fatuus of his desire, before he claims to be. It will not do to hang celestial robes on some immense Ego, some overtopping and overshadowing vanity, some private infallibility of judgment or whim, and, calling that God, to claim the spiritual world as on one's side. That is simply being one with an inordinate and exaggerated selfishness, which, sooner or later, will topple over into insanity. But where there is simplicity, sincerity, reverence for essential greatness, enthusiasm for large aims, sympathy with broad objects, the claim, even of an individual, to be one with God is no dream. He may be one with great principles; he may be one with spiritual laws; and these are the best representatives of God we know. To apprehend these may not be easy; it is very far from easy. One cannot put himself in communication with them by joining even the oldest and most comprehensive church, by professing even the most venerable creed, by accepting membership in the most Orthodox communion; for they are not embodied thus. They are made real and familiar only by the earnest exercise of the highest faculties, bent on discovering the principles on which the social world is governed, and on conforming to them. These laws "have their seat in the bosom of God; their voice is the harmony of the world."

A great teacher says: "Conscience is authority, is supreme authority." He means the moral law which gives to conscience its sanction is authority. Conscience can hardly be called authority. Authority is not in the priest; it is in the sanctity the priest represents. Authority is not in the king, but in the principle of social order the king stands for. Authority is not in the conscience, but in the truth the conscience reports. Only as conscience reports that, or means to report it, is it venerable. The conscience that does not report it, or mean to report it, or care to report it, has no title to veneration; for it ceases to exercise the functions of conscience. It is an organ whose pipes are bent, and full of dust, and disconnected with the bellows; it is a loose-stringed harp without a player. The thing that gives authority to conscience is the bond of obligation which unites men in brotherhood; the effectual spirit of humanity which makes people in sympathy and interest to be cordially one.

Is it anything but this that gives to conscience the universal character of sacredness that belongs to it, clothes it with such noble associations, and makes its very name so majestic? If we ask what it is that imparts to the idea and fact of conscience a dignity that is not shared by the thought of interest however urgent, or expediency however pressing, the answer is that interest and expediency are words that call up incidental, occasional, or external objects, comfort or well-being of a physical kind, on the material level of life; while conscience is a word that calls up substantial, permanent, essential objects, advantages of an intellectual, social, or human sort, on the rational plane of life. There are degrees of sentiment, taste, appetite, affection. Some pleasures are coarse, some refined; some joys are base, some elevated; some satisfactions are low, some high; and the element that constitutes them one or the other is the quality of the associations they gather about them. The pleasures of the table are keener than the pleasures of music. A thousand enjoy the former to one who enjoys the latter. The verdict of the multitude would unhesitatingly pronounce in favor of a dinner at Delmonico's as preferable to a Philharmonic concert. Put a symphony of Beethoven in competition with an oyster supper, and the symphony would have the smaller number of patrons. And yet the pleasure of music is the higher pleasure. It is not only claimed to be such by those who can appreciate it, but it is allowed to be such by the general sentiment of mankind; nay, it is conceded to be such by those who cannot appreciate music at all, who would immensely prefer the oyster supper, to whom the delight of modulated sound is unknown; and for the reason that music is associated with art, intellect, sentiment, delicacy of feeling, sweetness of aspiration; with creative genius and the response of heart to heart; with beautiful singers, and marvellous composers, and wonderful instruments of metal and wood; with emotions that have stirred, and passions that have exalted, mankind; while the oyster supper is associated with bivalves and stew-pans, the gullet and the gastric juice.

For the same reasons conscience is counted noble above private ambition or selfish interest, the love of ease, or power, or fame. Its associations are with more majestic concerns, and with grander people. As peddling is less dignified than systematic trading, as trading is less dignified than large commercial business,—so conscience, which deals with relations that concern all mankind, is more dignified than the self-regard which busies itself with the affairs of an individual man or woman. The faculty is ennobled, not through any quality inherent in itself, but through the company to which it grants introduction. That ennobles.

The battle between the powers that would hold conscience subject and the powers that would make conscience free has not yet been finally fought, in any land. In America it has not yet been joined. And before it begins, as it may at any moment, it will be well to state the issue fairly. In the judgment of many of the most thoughtful and earnest people it will be a great mistake to make the issue between an instituted authority, like the Church of Rome, and the utter rejection of all authority whatsoever; between conscience on the one side and whim, caprice, fantastic notion, and levity on the other; between bondage and license; between subjection to established powers and revolt against all powers. The issue is between two authorities—established authority on one side, rational authority on the other; a historical authority on the one side, a human authority on the other; on one side an authority of priests, on the other side an authority of principles; on one side an authority of statutes, on the other side an authority of law. On this issue let the battle be fairly joined. In these two camps let the combatants be massed; the one camp containing the hosts of formal authority, the other containing the hosts of rational authority—the idlers, pimps, vagabonds, and dissolute camp-followers being sent to the rear; then there can be no doubt on which banner victory will perch. But even an artificial and mechanical order cannot be fought with disorder. Any miserable despotism will be preferred to anarchy. The merest figment of law will be clung to when lawlessness is the alternative. To the figment of law oppose law; and the friends of virtue, perceiving clearly the party to which they belong, will easily put the enemies of rational goodness to flight.

THE GUIBORD CASE.

The person concerning whose mortal remains the great conflict was to be waged between the authority of Pope Pius IX. and that of Queen Victoria was a printer, and worked nearly all his life industriously at his trade, most of the time with the late Louis Perrault. He bore an irreproachable character, was quiet and unassuming, yet thoughtful and studious. He was one of the original members of the Institut, and in 1852 was elected first Vice-President. His wife was Henrietta Brown, of Canadian birth but of Irish parentage. Guibord was a sincere Catholic, and faithful in the observance of his religious duties. He died on the 18th of November, 1869. It was a curious fact that Guibord had a presentiment of the manner in which his corpse would be treated after his death. Hon. Mr. Dessaulles related, in an address before the Institut in December, 1869, that, meeting Guibord in the street one day, three or four weeks before his death, the latter asked him what was the latest news from Rome about their appeal. Mr. Dessaulles answered that he hoped they would get justice.

"Well," said Guibord, "I am glad of it; but I shall probably not live to see it, for I feel that I am failing every day. And if the matter is not settled before I leave you, there will likely be a row (tapage) about my coffin. I am a poor man, and haven't much chance of being protected. If they can do it, they will no doubt put me along with those that have been hanged."

"Don't worry about it, my dear Guibord," said Mr. Dessaulles; "your friends will take care that you are no worse treated than a rich man."

"Thank you," returned Guibord, shaking hands with his friend; "I shall rely upon it."

THE BISHOP AND THE INSTITUT.

The ostensible origin of the difficulty between the Bishop and the Institut was the pretence by the former that the library contained immoral books. In 1858 certain members of the Institut, acting under clerical advice, proposed a committee for the purpose of making a list of books in the library which in their opinion ought to be thrown out. An amendment was carried by a considerable majority, to the effect that the library contained no improper books, and that the Institut was the sole judge of the morality of its library. Shortly afterwards the Bishop published a pastoral letter in which he referred to the action of the Institut, and, after praising the course of the minority, pointed out that the majority had fallen into two great errors: first, in declaring that they were the proper judges of the morality of their books, an office that belonged only to the Bishop; and, secondly, in declaring that the library contained only moral books, whereas it contained books which were in the Index at Rome. His Lordship went on to cite a decision of the Council of Trent, that any one who read or kept heretical books would incur sentence of excommunication; and that any one who read or kept books forbidden on other grounds would be subject to severe punishment; and he concluded by making an appeal to the Institut to alter their resolution, otherwise no Catholic would continue to belong to it. The issue thus raised between the Institut and the Bishop continued for nearly seven years, until 1865; when several members, including Guibord, against the conduct of the Bishop, claiming to be entitled to all the rites of the Church. The authorities at Rome seemed, for four years, to take no notice of the matter. But in 1869, when the Bishop went to Rome to attend the Vatican Council, he, without communicating with the members who appealed, sent a pastoral letter to Canada, setting forth that the Pope had rejected the appeal, and condemned the Institut. The pastoral letter contained the De-cretum, in which it was pointed out two things were especially forbidden: 1. To belong to the Institut while it taught pernicious doctrines. 2. To publish, retain, keep, or read the "Annuaire" of 1868; and he added that any person who persisted in remaining a member of the Institut, or in reading the "Annuaire," would be deprived of the sacrament, "même a l'article de la mort." The Institut held a meeting on the 23d of September, 1869, and resolved:—

APPEALED TO ROME

1st. "That the Institut Canadien, the object of whose foundation is purely literary and scientific, teaches no doctrine of any kind, and carefully excludes all teaching of pernicious doctrine."

2d. "That the Catholic members of the Institut Canadien, having learned of the condemnation of the 'Annuaire' of 1868 of the Institut Canadien, declare that they submit purely and simply to this decree."

These concessions produced no effect. The Bishop, in a letter from Rome to the Administrator of the Diocese at Montreal (which that officer received, he says, on the 17th November, the day before Guibord's death), denounces these concessions as hypocritical for the following among other reasons:—

"Because this act of submission forms part of a report of the Committee, unanimously approved by the Institut, in which a resolution is proclaimed, until then kept secret, which establishes the principle of religious toleration, which has been the principal ground of the condemnation of the Institut."

THE REFUSAL TO BURY GUIBORD.

This "principal ground of condemnation" of the Institut, viz., that it had passed a resolution which established the principle of religious toleration, was entirely new, and, it would seem, could not have been known to Guibord. It should also be mentioned, in order to complete the history of the case, that Guibord, about six years before his death, being dangerously ill, was attended by a priest who administered unction to him, but refused to administer the holy communion unless he resigned his membership of the Institut, which Guibord declined to do. Guibord having died on the 18th of November, 1869, of a sudden attack of paralysis, on the 20th the widow caused a request to be made to the Curé, and to the clerk of the Fabrique, to bury Guibord in the cemetery, and tendered the usual fees. Previously to this application, M. Rousselot, the Curé, having heard of the death of Guibord, and knowing that he was a member of the Institut, had applied to the administrator of the diocese for his directions. The latter replied that he had yesterday received a letter from the Bishop directing him to refuse absolution, même a l'article de la mort, to members of the Institut; he could not, therefore, permit "la sépulture ecclésiastique" to Guibord. The Curé then refused to bury Guibord in the consecrated part of the cemetery where Roman Catholics were ordinarily buried, but offered to inter him in the portion allotted to criminals without religious rites. It seems that the agent of the widow offered to accept burial in the larger part, without religious rites; but this was refused. The remains of Guibord were, therefore, temporarily deposited in the vault of the Protestant Cemetery.

THE WIDOW INVOKES THE LAW.

This refusal of the Church authorities to allow Guibord Christian burial aroused the liveliest sympathy of the members of the Institut for the widow. Messrs. Joseph Doutre and R. Lafamme espoused her cause; and, upon her behalf, proceedings were instituted in the Superior Court to compel the Church authorities to bury the body in the consecrated portion of the cemetery. A writ of mandamus was applied for to this effect. Seventeen days were occupied in arguments, which were heard before Mr. Justice Mondelet. It was contended on the part of the Fabrique that, by the terms of the cession of Canada to Great Britain, the worship of the Roman Catholic religion was to remain free from all interference from the civil authorities. On the other hand, it was contended that the right to an ecclesiastical burial was a civil right which the Church could not deny.

Judge Mondelet, in an elaborate opinion, sustained the cause of the applicant, and quoted the opinion of Sir George Cartier to show that the Curé of the Parish of Notre Dame could be constrained by judgment of the Courts to solemnize baptisms, marriages, and burials in which his parishioners were concerned. The Judge ordered a peremptory writ of mandamus to issue, commanding the Curé and Fabrique to bury the deceased within six days. From this decision the Church authorities appealed to the consisting of Judges Berthelot, Mackay, and Torrance, who reversed the decision of Judge Mondelet, and dismissed the application upon the technical ground that the action should have been brought against the Curé personally, and because the writ was informal. An appeal to the

COURT OF REVIEW,

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH

was then taken by the widow. At the opening of the December term of this Court, Mr. Doutre challenged the four Roman Catholic Judges, viz., Chief-Justice Duval, Caron, Monk, and Drummond, on the ground that they belonged to the Church of Rome, which had, by the Syllabus of 1864, promulgated the dogmas that the ecclesiastical authority was exercised independently of the civil government; that the State, even when governed by a Protestant sovereign, possessed no authority, even indirectly, over matters of religion; and that in cases of conflict between the State and ecclesiastical authority the latter should prevail. When the last day of the term arrived, the five Judges (the Protestant Judge being Mr. ex-Justice Badgley) declared the petitions inadmissible, inasmuch as the charges contained in them amounted to accusations against the Judges of treason and perjury; whereupon Mr. Doutre moved for an APPEAL TO HER MAJESTY'S PRIVY COUNCIL.

The appeal to England involved a heavy expense. The Institut Canadien contributed $1,000 for that purpose, and various private citizens of Montreal, Catholic and Protestant, generously contributed the means to prosecute the case before the Privy Council. In the meantime, Guibord's widow was distracted at what she regarded as a dishonor to her husband's memory, and by her vain attempts to secure his remains Christian burial. She was, moreover, surrounded by people who tried to persuade her that, if she had recourse to law against the clergy, there would be no salvation for her. Finally the unhappy woman's reason almost gave way; and soon after she died, March 24, 1873. By her will she devised her property to the Institut Canadien, and also appointed that body as her universal legatee. Leave was granted by their Lordships of the Privy Council to the Institut Canadien to continue the case in her behalf. The case came formally before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, on the 27th of June, 1874. Mr. Doutre had proceeded to England to represent the Institut, and with him was associated H. M. Bompas, Esq., as counsel; Messrs. Few & Co. acting as solicitors. The counsel for the Fabrique were Mr. L. A. Jetté, of Montreal, and Messrs. Westlake, Q. C., and Matthews, of London; Messrs. Morris Ashurst & Co. being their solicitors.

Mr. Doutre, however, is the only member of the Canadian Bar who participated in the argument in London.

THE DECISION.

The case remained sub judice for several months; but on November 21, 1874, judgment was rendered at length by Sir Robert Phillimore. The judgment reviews the status of the Roman Catholic Church in this Province before the law, as secured to it by the Act of Session, and by the Treaty. It also narrowly reviews the laws of the Church itself, and grants that if a sentence of excommunication were passed against a Roman Catholic in Canada, it might be the duty of the Civil Courts to respect and give effect to it. But their Lordships find that no sentence of excommunication was ever passed against Guibord, which would, according to the Quebec ritual, or any law binding upon Roman Catholics in Canada, justify the denial of ecclesiastical sepulture to his remains. The plea set up by the defence that Guibord was a "public sinner," and had therefore forfeited his right to ecclesiastical burial, their Lordships find not to have been proven. They therefore advise Her Majesty to reverse the decrees of the Court of Queen's Bench and the Court of Review; and that a peremptory writ of mandamus be issued, directed to "Les Curé et Marguilliers de l'Oeuvre et Fabrique de Montreal," commanding them, upon application being made by the Institut Canadien, and upon tender of the usual fees, to prepare, or permit to be prepared, in that part of the cemetery where the remains of Roman Catholics who receive ecclesiastical burial are usually interred, for the burial of the remains of the said Joseph Guibord; and that, upon such remains being brought to the said cemetery for that purpose, at a reasonable and proper time, they do bury the said remains in the said part of the said cemetery, or permit them to be buried there. And that the defendants do pay to the Canadian Institute all the costs of the widow in all the lower Courts and of this appeal, except such costs as were occasioned by the plea of recusatio judicis, which should be borne by the appellants.

ACTUAL POSITION OF THE CASE.

On the arrival of the news in this country of the decision of the Privy Council, M. le Curé Rousselot declared from the pulpit of the Church of Notre Dame that he would go to prison before he would bury Guibord's remains in consecrated ground; and he has reiterated his refusal to conform to the decision in a letter to Mr. Doutre only a few days ago. At the present time the Institut Canadien is waiting the arrival of the Decree before proceeding to compel the Church authorities to obey the order of the Privy Council. The Decree is expected from day to day.—Montreal Witness, July 28, 1875.

THE GUIBORD FUNERAL.

DIGGING THE GRAVE—ALL QUIET.

This morning Mr. A. Boisseau, Superintendent of l'Institut Canadien, armed with a receipt signed by A. Choquet, and dated 16th May, 1873, conveying to the Guibord estate the lot 873 in section N of the Cemetery of Notre Dame des Neiges, proceeded to the Catholic Cemetery to oversee the digging of the grave. On the way a visit was paid to the vault in the Mount Royal Cemetery wherein repose the remains of the late Joseph Guibord. Mr. Spriggins, the very efficient superintendent of the cemetery, kindly opened the vault, and allowed an inspection of the coffin. It may be remarked that this coffin enclosing Guibord's remains was first laid in this vault—being the new or right hand one, as it is approached from the gate—in November, 1869, whence it was not long after removed to the old vault on the left. About three weeks ago, however, the coffin was moved back again to the new vault, as it was supposed to be more safe there than in the other. The exterior coffin is composed of rough pine boards, painted a dark red, and occupies a position on the lower tier of coffins, on the right hand side of the entrance, about midway of the vault. The coffin is covered with a damp and peculiar white mould, though it was apparently sufficiently sound except in one place on the top where the wood is slightly decayed. On the end next the passage is a cardboard with the name "Joseph Guibord," scarcely legible from the dirt and mould.

IN THE CATHOLIC CEMETERY.

Mr. Boisseau and his friend then entered the Catholic Cemetery adjoining, where they found the two workmen previously engaged waiting for instructions to dig the grave. Lot 873 is situated on the north side of the Catholic Cemetery, about sixty rods from the enclosure separating this from the Mount Royal Cemetery. The lot is seven feet long by four feet wide at one end, and seven at the other. The body of Guibord's wife occupies one side of the lot, leaving but a narrow space at one end. The two grave-diggers set to work at 9.50 o'clock. There was not the least sign of any suspicious parties about, and only here and there two or three small groups of individuals engaged in burying their own friends. A Catholic Irishman, a laboring man, came along, and after exchanging a few friendly words with the workmen and the gentlemen present, went off again on his business. Pretty soon a gentleman and lady, apparently Americans, drove up, and inquired if that was where Guibord was to be buried. Upon being told that it was, they alighted, and inspected the place with much interest, and then drove away. During the progress of the work two or three other laboring men employed in the cemetery came up, one by one, and, after a little friendly conversation, departed. Mr. Boisseau, finding that everything was progressing satisfactorily, left the ground at 10.30 o'clock, and expected the grave would be completed about noon. At 10.45 the workmen had reached the lid of Guibord's wife's coffin. The two will be interred in the one grave.

A gentleman who entered the graveyard by the entrance, and asked Mr. Deroche where Guibord's lot was, was told to go and find it, unless he had a certificate from the cemetery.

CATHOLIC CEMETERY GATE BARRED AND BOLTED.—A YELLING CROWD INSIDE.—FEARS OF TROUBLE.—MILITARY SENT FOR.

At 2 o'clock some two or three hundred persons had assembled in the Protestant Cemetery to witness the procession. Mr. Doutre presented a written order for the delivering of the body, which order was presented to the trustees of the Mount Royal Cemetery, Messrs. M. H. Gault, Wm. Turner, Andrew Robertson, and George Macrae. Among those present were a number of the members of l'Institut Canadien and old friends of Guibord. The only relative of Guibord present was Mrs. Rose, his wife's sister. At 2.10 o'clock Mr. Spriggins opened the door of the vault, and the coffin was lifted by three laboring men, carried out, and deposited upon a frame. Mr. Doutre then uncovered his head—so did also the other gentlemen standing about,—and asked Mr. Spriggins: "Is this the same coffin that was brought here on the 20th of November, 1869?" Mr. Spriggins answered, "It is the same." The coffin was then placed upon the hearse, which was supplied by Mr. Richard Seale, St. Antoine Street, and was driven by his son. The procession, comprising a dozen carriages, then formed, and left the cemetery at 2.25. The procession went round the mountain at a smart trot, and reached the gates of the Catholic Cemetery at about 3 P. M.

ON THE ROAD.

At 1.30 about three hundred people—mostly young men—were wending their way up the Cote des Neiges road toward the Catholic Cemetery. The majority were French-Canadians. About 2 o'clock the space in front of the little church in the grounds was well filled with a waiting crowd, who were earnestly discussing the situation; twenty or thirty women were also present. As soon as the procession had left the vault in the Mount Royal Cemetery, the crowd of spectators—some two hundred—gathered about, started to the boundary fence between the two cemeteries, and getting over it walked over to the grave. It was shallow, being only three feet in depth, and the lid of the coffin of the late Madame Guibord formed the bottom. A plain black cross stood at its head, on which was her name and the date of her death. This point seemed one of considerable interest, as the French Canadians came flocking up the dusty avenues, and threaded their way between the tombstones to get a look at it. Soon after the cry of "Here comes the procession!" made all start towards the gates, and as the hearse drove up at 3 P. M. the gate was found

BARRED AND BOLTED.

Mr. Doutre and his friends stood in indecision, while some hundreds of yelling and jeering French Canadians stood inside, refusing entrance, and pouring insults on Guibord and the Institut Canadien. The crowd grew very large, and the Canadians were filling their pockets with stones. The hearse was driven down off the entrance to the graveyard, and now stands facing the street. There is great excitement and fears of bloodshed. Military have been sent for.

AT THE GATES.

3.20 P. M.—Mr. Doutre has despatched Bailiff Boucher to notify the guardian of the cemetery that the hearse awaits admission; he is also communicating with the authorities in town. The mob inside is very quiet, and standing up close against the gates; the friends of Guibord and a number of prominent Protestants are outside, gathered in groups, and discussing the situation, which looks decidedly bad. Some fifteen hundred people are now present. The mob did not close the gates till the noses of the horses attached to the hearse had almost touched them. The hearse stayed facing the gates for a few minutes, and then it was turned about, facing the street, some stones being thrown,

The authorities of the Seminary are being asked by special messenger whether it is by their command the gates were closed. People think it was done solely by the mob, and without the order of Deroche, the guardian. The crowd is fast getting larger; nearly everybody is armed. Lines of carriages extend both sides of the road for a quarter of a mile. The crowd inside numbers about two hundred and fifty. At 3.30 the hearse was stoned off the ground, and the mob is stoning spectators at intervals. The hearse is in the road, a few yards from the entrance to the cemetery. Mr. Lumsden, of the Gazette, was hurt by a blow from a stone on the hip.

Another funeral has just arrived, and demands admittance.

THE BODY TAKEN BACK TO THE MOUNT ROYAL CEMETERY.

At 4.15 Mr. Dautre decided, after consultation with his friends, that it would be impossible to get admission into the graveyard; and as the bailiff had come back, and reported that it would take some time to get the volunteers, the hearse moved off, amid the derisive cheers of the multitude ensconced behind the gate. William Seale, the driver, was cool and collected, and walked his horses at a slow pace down the road, followed by carriages containing Mr. Dautre and friends. The mob for a moment made as if to follow and attack the receding procession; but when they saw the friends of Guibord and a number of Protestants close in behind, they desisted, and remained on the ground. A report was in circulation that Mr. Deroche, the guardian, had been seen to issue ammunition to the crowd at the gates. This was not noticed by our reporter; but others outside heard the crowd crying, "If you shoot, we can too." The roughs also shouted, "We are guarding this cemetery for the Fabrique." "Take the cursed Guibord away!" It was noticeable that the crowd was composed of a very low and debased class of the French Canadian population, and many of them were semi-intoxicated through drinking at taverns in the neighborhood. Not one Irish Catholic was noticed, though when the crowd heard Mr. Dautre had sent a bailiff for the military, they (the French Canadians) said, "We can get plenty more in Griffintown to help us."

Seale, the driver of the hearse, was struck by a stone, but many more aimed at him fell short, and his conduct in quietly keeping his seat showed great pluck. There was a rush when the first shower of stones came, and many got struck in the back, while others were nearly run over by the horses which were standing amid the crowd. It was at one time proposed for a resolute body of men to "go" for the gates; but Mr. Dautre thought it best to wait for the assistance of constituted authority.

Not a guardian of the peace was to be seen on the road, and some very uncomplimentary reflections were made on the inability to rely on the city police for help in an emergency. It is not known whether another attempt will be made to bury Guibord tomorrow or not; the military can be called out on the requisition of two magistrates. Bishop Bourget, it is said, notified the Mayor this morning that he feared a disturbance at the cemetery, and the Mayor is stated to have consulted with the Chief of Police, who, however, did not think any trouble need be apprehended.

THE ONLY FIGHTING.

After the hearse had departed the crowd remained for a few minutes, and then began to disperse. An elderly French Canadian, in his shirt-sleeves, who had made himself conspicuous at the gate in resisting the entrance of the hearse, and in kicking the horses, and violent conduct generally, was struck on the head with a stone, which laid the flesh open. A few moments after his assailant was attacked in turn and badly beaten; but a crowd of friends came to his assistance, and, driving away those who were beating, chased two of them over the hills, but without catching them. This is the only fighting that took place up to 4.30 o'clock, when the crowd began to disperse. It was remarked that nearly all the mob were French Canadians, who live in the country parts back of the mountain. A rumor has for two or three days been current that the Curés in some of the parishes on the western portion of the island had been preaching to their people last Sunday in a manner to excite them to violence. A great many one-horse carts were remarked on the road, and it is possible that most of the trouble was caused by habitants.

In the meantime the body of Guibord has been carried back to the Protestant Cemetery, there to await further and more decisive action.—Montreal Witness, Sept. 2.

THE GUIBORD RIOT.

The trustees of the Mount Royal Cemetery yesterday afternoon advised Mr. Dautre to place Guibord's remains in the vaults again till further action should be taken. The crowd of rioters were agreeably surprised to see the hearse moving off, though for some time they believed it was only a temporary departure, and refused to reopen the gates on any consideration; saying, "We know too much for them," and, "The police will never get in." Several gentlemen, however, got access to the cemetery through a gate farther west, and saw one of the officers of the Fabrique, who seemed somewhat excited and pained at the disgraceful conduct of the mob of his countrymen. He explained that he was there to receive the dues which were always paid on the entrance of a funeral, and that he had tried hard to persuade the mob to open the gates and be quiet. He admitted this was a hopeless task, and believed even the presence of Rev. Curé Rousselot himself would not have the least effect on the infuriated crowd, who were at this very time, as if to emphasize his words, yelling like maniacs. He, however, very singularly, held that the blame for the whole disturbance rested upon the shoulders of the friends of the deceased; for the reason that if no announcement had been made as to when the funeral would take place, the roughs could have known nothing of it. He, however, admitted that the Institut Canadien could hardly be expected to sneak into the cemetery with the coffin, as if ashamed of the job.

FILLING UP THE GRAVE.

In the meantime, while the yelling host remained at the gates, cursing Mr. Dautre and the members of the Institut, and bragging how easy it was to frighten off the funeral, another body of young fellows, fired with holy zeal, and supplied internally with something stronger than pump-water, went to Guibord's grave, and with shovel and spade rapidly filled it up, the clods clattering in an ominously hollow way on the lid of the wife's coffin. Some lads, when it was half full, rushed off to convey the glad news to their brave comrades at the gate, and cheers and laughter showed how welcome was the news.

The Mayor, who was with the funeral of the late Chief of the Fire Brigade, on hearing of the riot, at once despatched a body of police, and, entering carriages, they drove up to the cemetery; but by the time they reached the gates, 5 P.M., all the disorder was over.

When the Mayor, accompanied by Chief Penton, appeared, the gates were opened at once for their admission, and the crowd cheered them lustily as they rode towards the guardian's residence. At the grave, which had been filled up by the mob, a crowd stood eagerly discussing the situation; and it was not until the shades of evening had settled down that the last of them had left the cemetery, a few going round by the Protestant Cemetery vaults to watch the return of "the cursed Guibord" to his temporary resting-place, and the majority plodding down the dusty hill, recounting the exploits of the day with infinite gusto. Several women trudged along with them. One of the fair sex, young and strong, and who was in the cemetery when the gates closed, climbed up to the top of the fence to see the hearse. While so engaged, a volley of stones was fired over her head by her friends inside; she became frightened, and, in her anxiety to get down, jammed her foot between two of the palings, receiving a nasty fall. Her friends rescued her, and she left.

ANOTHER FUNERAL

came up while the Guibord funeral was standing in indecision, and the driver of the hearse called to those inside to open, as he was a friend. "Entrez, messieurs," replied a flushed French Canadian, in his shirt sleeves, as he took down one of the bars, and a moment after the gates swung half open; an array of clubs guarded the entrance as the funeral cortege trotted in, whereupon the gates were as suddenly closed again. It was soon after this that the third volley of stones was fired, which bruised several gentlemen. The crowd opposite the road on the cliff also contained enemies, who fired down rocks weighing four and five pounds. The men in the marble yard here knocked off work, owing to the interruption. The news of flew like wildfire through the Quebec Suburbs and the Tanneries, and thousands expressed themselves gratified. Last evening excited groups could be seen all about the streets, discussing the results of the riot. Some Catholics, while saying they were well pleased that the gates were closed upon the funeral, were sorry to hear that the mob had stoned the hearse, which in their eyes was a fearfully sacrilegious act. Mr. Dautre was denounced by many with fearful oaths and curses, and the feeling against him is singularly bitter. Among Protestants, there was but a single opinion expressed, and it was that the law of the land would have to be enforced at any cost and at all hazards; and many were the expressions of satisfaction with which the news was received that the Prince of Wales Volunteers had been ordered to hold themselves in readiness. They rendezvoused at their head-quarters on St. James Street last evening, ammunition was supplied, and they are ready whenever required. The "Vics" are held as a reserve, as well as the other forces.

THE VICTORY

A gentleman residing in the Tanneries says that early this morning crowds of young men set off for the cemetery, the impression being that the attempt to bury Guibord would be renewed to-day.

The coffin of Guibord was wrapped yesterday in the British flag, and on the hearse was a medium-sized gilt cross. The throwing of stones at these emblems is looked upon by many as an insult to both heavenly and earthly sovereignty—the cross having been struck and dented.

A young gentleman at the riot got several names of ringleaders, one an educated young man; a St. Jean Baptiste laborer, named Paquette; and another whose name is not given.

COMPOSITION OF THE MOB.

A gentleman belonging to the Quebec Suburbs states that a large number of the rowdies at the Catholic Cemetery yesterday were armed with revolvers, some of which were said to be new; and he heard many say last night that they were arming themselves for a bigger fight on the next occasion. He says that instead of the mob being largely composed of habitants, they were principally from the Quebec Suburbs, and known as frequenters of taverns, and low blacklegs, ready for any job of that kind, providing there is pay at the end. They say if Guibord should by any possibility be buried, they would dig his bones up and scatter them broadcast.

WHERE WAS CURÉ ROUSSELOT?

The question is asked, Where was Rev. Curé

Rousselot yesterday? Knowing well that there would be a disturbance, and that by his simple presence at the gates they would have been opened by the mob, why was he not there; and why did not Mr. Deroche, the guardian, come down from the chapel to the gates when he was sent for?

The Montreal Garrison Artillery were last evening ordered to hold themselves in readiness for active service. Some sixty of the men were assembled in the Drill Shed, till the return of the officers from head-quarters with the necessary orders.

WHEN THE BURIAL WILL BE ATTEMPTED AGAIN.

It is this morning impossible to say when the funeral will take place, though probably not this week. Preparations are being made on an extended scale, and it is determined, if possible, not to be balked the second time. Mr. Dautre is now engaged in consultation with friends as to what is best to be done.

At the office of the Fabrique this morning, an official, in the absence of Mr. Choquette, said he (Choquette) was up at the cemetery yesterday, and on seeing the gates closed sent his assistant Deroche to tell the mob to open them; that Deroche did so without the least effect whatever; that the affair is a sad one for all concerned; and that the burial would be a grievous insult to all good Catholics. He said no wonder the grave was filled up.

FURTHER PARTICULARS.

An eye-witness of the disturbance at the Catholic Cemetery yesterday states that among the leaders of the mob were two men from the Mile-End, named Galipeau and Paquette, who came out of the crowd inside the gate when the hearse bearing Guibord's remains drove up, and, seizing the horse's bridle, declared that they would kill the driver if he didn't turn back. A beadle from St. James' Church, St. Denis Street, is also said to have made himself conspicuous by exciting the mob. A large number of the carpenters and joiners at work in the French Parish Church were noticeable among them. Several of the crowd went into the little chapel inside the cemetery, and armed themselves with the handles of pickaxes, which were found there within easy reach. The desire of the mob appeared to be to get possession of the coffin containing Guibord's remains, and to murder Mr. Dautre and other prominent friends of Guibord who were present. Our informant says the rabble was composed almost entirely of a low, ignorant class of people, nearly every one of whom were French Canadians. During the afternoon Mr. Dautre found himself standing near a crowd of young roughs, who were saying to each other that it was Dautre they wanted to catch and give him a good drubbing. No one could have been more visible than he was at the moment.

It is rumored the funeral will take place to-morrow.—Montreal Witness, Sept. 3.

LACQUER WORK.—The Japan Mail quotes from a Consular report an interesting account of one of the oldest industries of that inventive people. According to the native chroniclers, the art of lacquering was discovered in the year 724 A. D. By the end of the 13th century it had attained such perfection that a distinguished member of the craft is recorded to have then started a particular school of painting in lacquer. The material used in the work consists of the sap of the urushi tree, a plant cultivated partly for its sap, and partly for the fruit, from which a vegetable wax is obtained. These trees attain their prime of life in the short space of five or six years, when the sap is drawn from them by an elaborate process requiring great judgment and experience, and in which the inhabitants of a particular district are celebrated for possessing a special skill. After the sap has been fully extracted during the four or five autumnal months, the tree is condemned and cut down. But its usefulness does not even then cease; for its wood is so light, and at the same time durable, as to be used very generally for making floats for fishing nets, and for many other purposes. As for the process of lacquer painting it is rather elaborate; but it consists in the main in applying successive layers of varnish, gold powder, and paint, followed again by varnish, and, lastly, rubbed successively with a particular kind of charcoal, polishing powder, and horn dust. The manipulation of all these various ingredients and appliances may well be believed to be a delicate matter, requiring manual skill and neatness as well as good taste. It would make a pretty amusement for some of those ingenious ladies whose talents are now devoted to the preparation of less elaborate ornaments, and who are on the lookout for a new sphere of decorative art.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 11.

Edith W. Bradford, $2.35; R. E. P. Thacher, $3.20; A. E. Ewing, $1; S. Cole, $2; Lucius H. Smith, $3; John Roberts, $3.20; P. V. Weaver, 75 cents; Robert Ormiston, $10; Pebe A. Palmer, $20.20; R. L. Gunter, 40 cents; E. E. Phelps, 30 cents; W. J. Kirkwood, 10 cents; W. J. Duffie, 35 cents; James Eddy, 35 cents; Cash, $20; T. M. Lamb, 35 cents; W. A. Clarke, 10 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 16, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HOLLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E.
D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRAN-
CIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
(England), Editorial Contributors.

SISTER ROSE EVERETT, a niece of Edward Everett, is reported to be about to establish a convent at Dallas, Texas. At present she is mother-superior of St. Vincent de Paul, at Jefferson, in the same State.

THE MASSACRE of negroes at Clinton, Mississippi, on the fourth of September, was one of the wickedest and most cruel of crimes. It is in vain to try to "get the negro out of politics," so long as such diabolical acts are of possible occurrence.

HERE is an item that is going the rounds of the press: "A Catholic priest refused to officiate at the funeral of a poor Irish woman at Battle Creek, Mich., recently, because the friends could not pay the assessment. But the oldest daughter stood at the head of her mother's coffin, read the Catholic service in a broken voice before the few sympathizing neighbors who had come in, and at the conclusion burst into tears. One carriage followed to the grave."

F. R. A. ANNUAL REPORT.

The Report, in pamphlet form, of the Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association for 1875 is now ready.

It contains an Essay by Wm. C. Gannett, on "Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and an Essay by F. E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. B. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

It can be obtained, in Boston, at A. Williams & Co.'s, and by mail by addressing "Office of Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass."

Price of single copy, 35 cents; package of four copies or more, 25 cents each.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

CALL FOR THE SEPTEMBER CONVENTION.

The Liberal Leagues throughout the country are cordially invited to send five delegates each to a Convention to be held in Philadelphia on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of September next, for the purpose of disseminating our principles and of making arrangements for a general Congress of Liberals to convene next year during the Centennial exhibition. It is very desirable that every Liberal League in America should be fully represented at the September Convention. Now is the time to work. The enemies of religious freedom are busy in preparing to utilize human ignorance and superstition for the strengthening and perpetuating of an organized system of mental repression, hostile alike to science, reason, and the right of private judgment in all matters of faith and conscience.

Let us endeavor to overcome ignorance by intelligence,—superstition by reason. Let each League send a full representation of men and women, so that from the combined wisdom of both sexes and all our societies we may be able to inaugurate a new era of impartial justice, perfect freedom, and scientific religion.

As soon as delegates are elected, Leagues are requested to notify the undersigned, and also THE INDEX.

JOHN S. DYE,
Sec'y Phila. Liberal League,
2527 Brown Street, Phila.

PHILADELPHIA, July 22, 1875.

N. B.—All Liberal Societies which sympathize with the objects of the Liberal Leagues and wish to be represented are included in the above Call.

DELEGATES REPORTED.

PHILADELPHIA LIBERAL LEAGUE.—Carrie S. Burnham (President), John S. Dye (Secretary), Isaac Rhen, Damon Y. Kilgore, Jesse B. Beam.
BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.—F. E. Abbot (President), Geo. A. Bacon (Secretary), A. Bronson Alcott, B. F. Underwood, John Wetherbee.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Convention of Liberal Leagues will meet in Philadelphia on Friday, Sept. 17, 1875, at 2 o'clock, P.M., in Lincoln Hall, at the south-east corner of Broad Street and Fairmount Avenue.

All liberals who are interested in the movement for Entire Secularization of the State, or in the perfecting of arrangements for a General Convention of Liberals in 1876, are invited to meet and consult together on this occasion.

JOHN S. DYE,
Sec. Phil'a Liberal League.

DISINTERESTEDNESS IN MORALS.

"Be good, and you will be happy." Yes, but don't be good for the sake of being happy, for that takes all the goodness out of it."

This was the off-hand, rattling good-by of a bright man, as he stood with his hand on the door and shot back his little moralism in a half-jesting way. But he hit the target in the bull's-eye.

Ever since men began to reflect seriously on the moral meaning of life, there have been two radically unlike modes of explaining the ultimate springs of human action. One is to regard all human conduct without exception as having its origin, directly or indirectly, in the desire for individual happiness—in private self-interest, either well or ill understood. The other is to recognize the full force of all considerations based on self-interest, and to concede the large and legitimate part which such motives play in the direction of conduct and the evolution of character, yet at the same time to affirm the existence, power, and positive influence of motives which are thoroughly disinterested. That all motives are exclusively self-interested ones,—that some motives are self-interested and others disinterested,—these are the two essential positions taken by the only two opposing schools of moral science which are logically clear and consistent.

But there are many other schools which are not logically clear and consistent, but build more or less evidently on contradictory principles. Of this latter class is the theory of those who hold that the highest possible moral motive is exclusive regard for the "greatest happiness of the greatest number": a theory which on the one hand affirms that the desire for happiness is the ultimate end and aim of all human conduct, yet on the other hand denies that the happiness desired must necessarily be that of the actor himself. The question at once arises, "Why ought I to desire and act for the greatest happiness of the greatest number? If happiness is the supreme good, why am I under obligation to sacrifice my own supreme good to that of others? If desire for happiness is the ultimate motive of all human actions, what motive can I possibly have for acting directly counter to this desire? How can the claims of others' happiness ever supersede the claims of my own?"

To these questions we are not aware that any satisfactory reply has ever been offered. So long as happiness is held up as the sole legitimate object of action, it will be impossible to show that the happiness of other people is, or can be, more desirable than our own; and the consequence is that the assumption of a superior desirability in their happiness is really made in violation of the principle ostensibly laid down. In itself considered, our own happiness is necessarily more desirable to us than that of any other person; and, if we find ourselves seeking another's happiness at the expense of our own, depend upon it that some higher principle than desire for happiness is at the bottom of our conduct.

"But," answers the advocate of this intermediate theory, "I seek the 'greatest happiness of the greatest number' because I find my own highest happiness in doing so." Very well, then; if you seek it because it makes YOU happy, what you really seek is your own happiness, and not the "greatest happiness of the greatest number," as you delude yourself into supposing. Either you do, or you do not, seek your own individual happiness as your highest object in life: if you do, you are not seeking the "greatest happiness of the greatest number," and are ready to sacrifice this to your own, on emergency; but if you do not, and really sacrifice your own happiness to that of the greatest number, then you must find some deeper reason than any desire for happiness as the explanation of your conduct. Happiness is exclusively an individual matter; the happiness of other people is not and cannot be yours; and, if you prefer theirs to your own, sacrificing the latter in reality, then you have not acted from the desire for happiness, but from some other motive. No one who fully comprehends this objection can break its force; he can only evade it in one way or another.

Disregarding, then, all attempts to find a middle ground of reconciliation between the two contradictory theories of human conduct, let us very briefly glance at the real issue to be met. One of these two things is self-evidently true: either men act always and everywhere from a sole regard to their own individual happiness, or else they act sometimes from other and higher considerations. Which is the fact?

The love of simplicity, the pleasure of explaining all things by a single principle, leads a large number of minds to embrace the theory that enlightened or unenlightened self-interest is the sole explanation of all human actions. But this seductive love of simplicity tempts them to throw overboard the facts which do most honor to human nature, or else to account for them in a way which destroys their peculiar nobility. The glory of disinterestedness crowns all the characters which have attracted the permanent love and admiration of mankind; it is this which lifts them above the crowds wrangling for selfish advancement, and sets the star of a nobler purpose upon their foreheads; it is this which constitutes the sole proof of the latent divineness of human nature, and startles us with a sudden blaze of unearthly beauty, when we encounter it, as we often do, shining in the unconscious faces of the good and true about us. Between self-love and self-sacrifice even the careless world knows how to distinguish; and, selfish as may be its own average daily life, it has yet even in itself enough of disinterestedness to perceive, to believe in, and to admire the not unfrequent cases of luminous self-sacrifice which redeem human life from intolerable meanness. Whence came this very word "disinterested"? Does it stand in our language as a representative of absolute unreality? Or is it a natural recognition by all men that self-interest is not the only explanation of human deeds? The charms of a simple theory are great and powerful; but he who would take account of all facts, as necessary to the fulness and completeness of truth, must often hold himself ready to admit the existence of things which no simple theory will explain. There is a baffling complexity in Nature which often defeats our crude essays at classification; and of all her products man himself is the most complex. Science has made as yet far too little progress to warrant the hope that we can succeed in the attempt to reduce all human actions to a single principle; and obstinate adhesion to a simple theory sometimes proves the most serious hindrance to her advance. So long as the self-interest theory of morals has no intelligible account to render of genuine disinterestedness, but prefers to deny point-blank a fact the explanation of which overtakes its intellectual resources, the sober thought of mankind will accept the fact and wait for the explanation.

What, then, is the fact? Put negatively, it is simply that self-interest, or the desire for individual happiness, is not an adequate explanation of certain classes of human actions which common language groups together under the word "disinterested"; that is, not-interested. The existence of these classes of actions must be recognized, if the spirit of science is not to be disregarded out of overweening attachment to theory. When, however, we come to a positive explanation of them, we may or may not succeed in pointing out other motives than self-interest which adequately account for them. It is altogether necessary not to lose sight of this distinction. To claim that a certain well-recognized motive, self-interest, fails to explain all human actions is one thing: to claim that we can assign motives which will explain them all is a very different thing. The first position we take decidedly, while we as decidedly decline to take the second. Mere instinct, blind and automatic,—desperate passion, riding rough-shod over all considerations of self-interest and all expectations of happiness,—exalted love, aiming at the highest welfare of the beloved object in utter forgetfulness of self,—lofty self-sacrifice of all private interests for the interests of a great cause,—these and other lower or higher motives may be instanced as springs of action which are not explicable as in any true sense identical with the desire for happiness; but it would be very presumptuous to attempt an exhaustive enumeration of them all. The happiness-theory does not go either high enough, or low enough to embrace all human impulses, motives, and acts; and this restrictedness of range in both directions is sufficient to prove the necessity of a broader and more thoroughly inductive treatment of morals, before there can be established a genuine science of ethics.

Is it possible, however, to attain a definite conception vast enough, profound enough, and vital enough, to serve the purpose of a commanding ideal of human life, and reign in the private soul as an ever-present, all-comprehensive, and supreme motive? To ascribe all actions to any one motive is indeed chimerical; yet may not thought rise so high as to blend all right motives in the unity of a single dominant life-purpose which shall identify itself with the current of universal being, and yet perfectly preserve the balance of the self and the not-self? This seems possible. In any one whose moral intelligence is well developed and whose will is in unison with it, the conditions exist for the formation and continuance of such a life-purpose. He will set before himself, as the permanent aim to which his being is dedicated in the nature of things, the MORAL HARMONY OF THE UNIVERSE. Of the universe he himself is a part; and, so far as he is a part of it, the harmony of the universe depends on the degree of conformity which he freely establishes between his own action and the universal laws of moral being. What to others will be a mere vague abstraction—the cause of truth, of justice, of purity, of benevolence, of freedom, of order—will be to him that Moral Harmony of the Universe to which he owes allegiance through the mere fact and recognition of himself as a moral being. The bare perception of the moral relation he thus stands in to the universal All,—the bare comprehension that truth, justice, purity, benevolence, freedom, order, are universal laws of all moral action in the very nature of things,—constitutes in his consciousness the fact of moral obligation; and this consciousness of moral obligation becomes itself the ultimate spring of his moral action. In other words, when he discerns that the Moral Harmony of the Universe depends, so far as he is concerned, on his voluntary obedience to the law of truth, justice, and benevolence in all his active dealings with mankind, he also discerns that he is bound, by his mere existence as a moral being, to promote that Moral Harmony of the Universe, to obey those laws, and thereby serve his own highest welfare incidentally in the very fact that he serves the highest welfare of all.

This is the only possible reconciliation of the selfishness-theory and the disinterestedness-theory of morals. He who aims at the Moral Harmony of the Universe aims simultaneously at the highest welfare of all moral beings, including himself; and it is to be achieved solely by obedience to the laws of truth, justice, purity, benevolence, freedom, order, irrespective of all calculations as to the probable effect of his actions on anybody's happiness. Things are so constituted that, on the average and in the long run, perfect obedience to the moral law best conduces to the general happiness; but it does not always conduce to individual happiness, which it sometimes requires to be sacrificed. The individual, in order to promote the highest welfare of all men, must be prepared to sacrifice his own happiness, if need be; he must know that the highest welfare of all men consists in the highest attainable Moral Harmony of all; he must know that the highest object of his own individual life is to promote this Moral Harmony, by individually obeying the moral law at any required sacrifice of happiness; and he who knows this and does this is a myth or an inscrutable mystery to the advocates of the selfishness-theory of morals.

Nevertheless, it is possible to become so thoroughly possessed by this ideal of the Moral Harmony of the Universe that it constitutes practically the dominant life-purpose. There are men and women all about us who would die at a moment's warning rather than do a great wrong,—many of them, too, without the least expectation of another life. They may not have philosophized about their own convictions, or shaped them into an abstract statement such as we have here given; but they substantially conduct their lives on no other principle than that of moral disinterestedness. They may not consciously have consecrated themselves to the Moral Harmony of the Universe, or they may have named it Jesus or Jehovah; nevertheless, absolute devotion to truth and right means nothing else, when translated into abstract terms, and it is the glory of mankind that moral disinterestedness, however doubted in the schools, is now and then so exemplified in daily life as to startle and thrill a beholding world with the spectacle of those who do not shrink to die, that truth, justice, and freedom may still live among men.

ONLY POINTS OF DEPARTURE.

In the history of the mental evolution of the wise, there is a beginning, but no end. The really wise man feels that he never can graduate from the university of knowledge; nay, that he can scarcely get beyond her primary school. No man is so foolish as to think that he can drain off the ocean into any private mill-pond of his own; no more does the wise man suppose that he can exhaust the sources of truth through any one of its countless streams. In travelling to reach the setting sun our journey never ends; so, too, the wise man in search of truth finds that she has an interminable road, and that the best he can do is nightly to "pitch his tent a day's march nearer home."

But so many are not wise; hence so many are dogmatists, partisans, and sectarians. The conceited collegian thinks he is learned because he has a diploma in his pocket. The narrow-minded believer supposes that he has decided the truth about infinite things, because he has set his name or given his consent to a platform or a creed. The world never has had but a few great travellers, who were never tired of going up and down the earth, making discoveries, and prosecuting enterprises of exploration into new and unknown lands; most are content to make only short journeys, to go only to frequented places, and to travel only by accustomed paths and methods. There are also, at any time, but few tireless and brave searchers after truth; few who are not content to go only where the many go, and to stop where the many stop; few who, like Livingstone, only allow death to overtake them while they are pressing forward on the road, with their right foot advanced, their face resolutely set towards the heart of the undiscovered country.

Oh yes, most of us are cowards and conservatives, say what we will; we might as well confess it, even the most liberal of us, and so have the virtue of frankness at least. We are radical and bold only for a little while; fear and foggism overtake most of us before we die. We say our brave and incisive word, and stick to it—until somebody comes along and says a braver and a keener one; then we dodge, and go to cover, from whence we fling a stone at the new man. It always has been so, in nine cases out of ten; all history shows it. It shows that the man and the party are rare who end as they begin, in being liberal; who are liberal all round the circle, and narrow nowhere. Luther and Protestantism began well in their day; nobody and nothing was so brave and broad,—but both ended in being illiberal and persecuting. So did the Puritans and Puritanism; so did the Quakers and Quakerism; so have the Unitarians and Unitarianism. Is any one fully prepared to expect that, in this respect, history will be contradicted by Free Religion and its followers? Or by Infidels and Infidelity? Human nature is human nature, yesterday, to-day, and forever. Resolutions and platforms may be as broad as broad can be; even the first intentions of individuals may have no flaw of narrowness,—yet fear and prejudice creep upon the hearts of men all unawares, like a thief in the night; so that before they know it they are regarding with distrust and dread some other movement or body of free thought.

It is so hard to have utter faith in the truth and in her power to take care of herself! So hard neither to be afraid of her nor for her! So hard to hold our convictions in earnest, without suffering them in time to become our Delilah, and to bind us in slavish submission! It is so almost impossible, also, to begin to put our convictions into parties, organizations, and institutions, without simultaneously beginning to be impatient and intolerant towards those who cannot see their way clear to work with us! To be a man of charity, of patience, of fearless faith, of quenchless hope, of broad, loving sympathies,—ah, this is a high attainment, and how few are equal to it!

The fact is that we are prone to emphasize only what we see; and the twin fact is that we almost always forget that what we see is finite, while what we do not see is infinite. "The things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are unseen are eternal." The truly wise man will lay even more emphasis on what he does not see than on what he does see. In the true spirit of the dauntless discoverer, the objective point of interest to him is always in the unknown rather than the known. He is always at the point of departure, never at the end of the journey. Like the bright-witted child who always wishes a new plaything, so the wise man, the moment he sees and thoroughly comprehends a thing, is seized with fresh desire to start on the quest of something unseen and uncomprehended. Not merely curious and inquisitive is he; rather generously hospitable and quenchlessly aspiring towards all truth. Socrates' idea of wisdom was that it is the condition of mind wherein a man knows himself to be ignorant. Why are we more impressed when we sit by the sea than when we peer over the rim of the goblet from which we slake our temporary thirst, except that in the one case we know that we are gazing at the unfathomable and boundless, whereas in the other we are looking only to the length of our finger's end? And even from the wide and deep sea we are fain to lift up our eyes to the wider and deeper night-skies, and revel in the thought that we are straining our vision into space that is infinite! When my friend has told me all he knows, and revealed to me all there is in him, it is time that he should step aside and suffer me to pass on to another. The beauty and wonder of a true love and friendship are that the object of them is an unfathomable soul that is capable of giving us fresh beauties and wonders every hour. Tame and tireful are all other social relations!

We must seek to grow young, not old, forever. We always must feel that we are infinite, not finite. We never must allow any belief, organization, or institution to grow round us, and become our shell or rind, imprisoning us in limitations and bad air until we shrivel and die; but our souls must continually exude through every environment, exhaling and efflorescing season after season.

"Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,—
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea!"

A. W. S.

DANTE.

An article by Mr. L. F. Soldan on "Dante," reprinted in pamphlet form from the Western, gives a very clear and interesting resumé of the leading incidents of Dante's life, and of the influences of the times upon the development of his life and thought. It also gives in very few words the plan of the Divina Commedia, and then proceeds to a more special analysis of the Inferno. The writer presents with great skill the peculiarly strong imagination of Dante, and his realistic force, by which he makes these purely imaginative scenes as solid and real as if he were describing the actual world. The young student too often reads the Commedia one canto at a time, with all the difficulties of a strange language to perplex him, and fails to grasp the unity of the whole. This rapid condensed sketch will aid him in doing so, at least as regards the Inferno. But it seems to be the tendency of nearly all critics to emphasize this portion of the poem to the neglect of the others; while, as Shelley truly says, the Paradiso is "a grand psalm of love," and is just the needed complement to the terrible spectacle of avenging justice in the Inferno. The horrors of the Inferno strike the imagination more forcibly; but the delights of the Paradiso are not meaningless rhapsody, but full of the same glowing imagination mingled with the tender beauty of the Vita Nuova.

Mr. Soldan criticises the harsh spirit of Dante towards the sufferers, and it is indeed with no gush of sentimentalism that he looks upon what he considers the just punishment of the sinner; yet, if memory serves us, there is many an expression of tender sympathy which shows us the great heart of Dante, always strong and severe, and capable of love and hate as we believe a healthy, vigorous nature always must be. We recommend this essay to all students of this great poet.

E. D. C.

FREDERICK THE GREAT was very fond of disputation; but as he generally terminated the discussion by collaring his antagonist and kicking his shins, few of his guests were disposed to enter the arena with him. One day, when he was more than usually disposed for an argument, he asked one of his suite why he did not venture to give his opinion on some particular question. "It is impossible, your Majesty," was the reply, "to express an opinion before a sovereign who has such strong convictions, and who wears such very thick boots."

ONE OF OUR lawyers was seen at the railway station, with carpet-bag in hand and overcoat on his arm, apparently waiting for the up-train. A brother lawyer seeing him, accosted him thusly: "Going north, Mr. F.?" "No, sir." "What then have you got your carpet-bag and overcoat for?" "Because, if there is any one thing in God's world I abhor more than another, it is to see a man standing about the station without any apparent business." Then the conversation ceased.—Lancaster Republic.

Communications.

THE "THOUSAND ISLANDS" CAMP-MEETING.

Within the score of years just past, and more noticeably within the last decade, a class of men have drifted into power in the counsels of the Orthodox churches, who, to use a common phrase, believe in "fighting the devil with fire." Every one, however prejudiced, must admit that, in a certain light, they have been eminently successful. So much tact has been displayed in selecting available weapons, and so much zeal has been manifested in practising with them, that to-day it is exceedingly difficult to distinguish the adversary and his host from their strategic enemies. They have promptly seized upon and appropriated all those sharp-edged blades wherewith Beelzebub was wont to wage war upon mankind—Pride, Envy, Covetousness, Luxury, Hypocrisy, and the like,—and have certainly attained to a remarkable degree of proficiency in the use thereof. The opulent sister in Israel can gather up her skirts just as disdainfully, and elevate her sanctified nose just as scornfully, when passing a less-favored and poverty-stricken sister, as can the most devoted hand-maiden of the Prince of Darkness; and how weak-minded and useless appears the Sybarite Dives, who lazily tolerated Lazarus, by the side of the rector who virtuously handed the starving beggar over to the charitable police, in our own metropolis the other day! They have thoroughly mastered Lucifer's own pet methods of warfare, and with them they loudly boast their power to conquer him; but there are some few humdrum, puritanical Christians still extant, to whose minds this pompous boast recalls that ingenious fable of the Tartar who was fairly captured, but who couldn't be brought to look at it in that light.

I have just had the rather questionable privilege of seeing these tactics in active operation, at the new Thousand-Island Camp-meeting, upon the St. Lawrence, near Claytown, N. Y. The grounds consist of a thousand acres upon Wells' Island, some six miles from the American shore, and are owned by an "association" composed of ministers and influential lay Methodists of the States and Canada. The object of the association is to combine the glorification of God with the more practical benefits to be derived from selling lots for over ten times their cost, and running a Christian boarding-house upon the most approved financial principles. Here they have "flung to the winds the flag of their Master," and under it sell dinner-tickets for sixty cents and lodging (two in a bed) for half-a-dollar. Now watering places are, in themselves, no doubt, praiseworthy institutions; indeed, there is no questioning the benefits accruing in the shape of ruddy cheeks, embrowned hands, and invigorated appetites; but there is a serious question of moral benefit involved in the consideration of a camp-meeting that is openly managed in the individual interest of ministers of the gospel.

The good done by camp-meetings is always of a questionable nature, and this one is very, very far from being an exception to the rule. The old-fashioned, primitive camp-meeting, which we all remember—and which, whatever its faults or absurdities, we were bound to admit, was sincere in purpose,—has passed away, gradually giving place to this hybrid abomination; and with this change has been lost the only virtue it ever possessed—that same earnestness of purpose. Then, the ministers, exaggerated and ridiculous as their extreme views might have been, still honestly believed in their absurdities, and were all aglow with the fire and enthusiasm of making proselytes, of spreading the faith of which they were the not unworthy exponents. Then, the religious element was all prominent; it demanded our respect, if nothing more. Now, the religious feature is of fifth-rate consideration. Everything is subordinated to gain. Take, for instance, the clergyman who used to be the life and light of the old-school camp-meeting, rude and rough in person and speech, with face and hands tanned and burned by a score of summer suns, yet with burning, fervid eloquence lurking concealed behind his homely dialect; with indomitable, unconquerable perseverance, that faced summer's heat and winter's snow, braving all things alike, in the service to which he had devoted his life. Where is he? In his place you find the man-of-the-world divine, who is clad in the glossiest of broadcloth; who holds stock in this enterprise for the furtherance of the gospel (it pays him a respectable dividend as well); and who—by a shabby trick played upon outsiders, which the least scrupulous broker in Wall Street would be ashamed of—owns the choicest lots in the thousand acres. And even he, intrenched in the brass of a thousand collections, or dedication beggings, is ashamed of himself. He is forced to garble his texts; to watch his words lest, out of his own mouth, he condemn himself. He dare not choose at random the subjects for his discourses, lest he stumble upon some one of the hundreds that rebuke and denounce him and his practices. As to the effect, the fervent, vivid appeals of old camp-meetings have regenerated into the rapid, flabby, namby-pamby conventionalities of the modern watering-place. What a horrid intrusion a sermon upon "come ye out from the world," or, "ye cannot serve God and mammon," would be, in the ears of these stock-holding gospellers!

It is very, very difficult to imagine Paul and Barnabas buying up a plot of ground just back of Lystria, building (upon a mortgage) a few buildings, getting a couple of policemen from Syracuse, and then inviting the Lystrians to come and buy lots at an advance of a thousand per cent.; to board and lodge in their houses at so much a head (Lystrialets under twelve, half price); and, if they wanted to come Sundays, not to come in at the big gate, "because we have our name to keep up, you know," but to go around, and climb over the back fence; and, finally, mentioning incidentally that a new kind of a religion would be preached at 10 A. M., sharp, which would serve to relieve the monotony! They and their fellows went forth without purse, and scrip, and shoes, in the highways and byways, proclaiming the gospel to rich and poor alike; living the life that they taught; meek and lowly and pure in heart. How does that picture of the poor fishermen contrast with the one spread out each day for us of our own modern divines? One owns the finest stud of horses in the State; another has pews in his new church valued at $8,000; a third has a salary large enough to buy up the greater part of Jerusalem.

Is it not time to cry out against these men, blind leaders of the blind, who bring shame and contempt upon our institutions, and are a dead weight, clogging and hampering every progressive step? Is it not the duty of honest men, of thinkers of all creeds, all races, who see this crumbling, decaying fabric of vanity, of covetousness, of hypocrisy, in all its naked enormity—to push it over before it engulfs another generation in its predestined, fore-doomed fall? What chance is there of instilling simplicity, or truth, or modesty, or any of the old-time virtues, in the minds of the rising generation, under the blighting shadow of this great evil? Gifted men, the leaders of the race, trimmings pick and weigh their words, lest peradventure they offend some one who sets a good table, or owns a swift-sailing yacht. The press, which has taken the place of the old orators and teachers, shrinks from the plain task that lies before it; it has no strong, emphatic words in which to denounce this upas growth of sanctimonious iniquity, but contents itself with an occasional fling, pun, or derisive smile. Twenty years ago, a little band of heroic thinkers overthrew a great system, a crying disgrace upon our institutions, that was entrenched in the precedents of two centuries. Where are the Sumners, the Garrisons, the Greens, that will throttle this new and deadly foe to free thought, to free institutions? Who will play Brutus to this new Caesar of the Republic? HAROLD FREDERIC.

WANTED, A POET.

It is a matter of regret that the genius of some of the great world-poets has been hampered by inadequate themes,—as Dante by a horrible theological hell, and Milton by a thoroughly fictitious war between God and Satan. The reader must be aroused by the sublime thoughts and glorious imagery of these poets; yet the unworthiness of the framework continually oppresses. One thinks, "Pity he did not write about something true!" Pope, although only a great literary artist, has shown in his Essay on Man what a field poetry may find in science and philosophy.

Absolute realism is impossible in poetry; we had best, however, have Nature at but one remove.

The mighty progress of the world in knowledge and culture since the great poets has furnished material and scope for another galaxy such as shone in the Elizabethan period in England; and they may be looked for when the rawness and abruptness of the recent works of Giant Science have mellowed into coherence and integration.

Imagination is based on knowledge. No facts, no images. And never was there so much and so accurate knowledge as now; never so much of suggestion in the sciences, pointing toward indefinite extension and correlation, and filling the mind with thoughts too bold and vague for the prose of scientific speculation, yet the very food for the poet. The poet of evolution may present to his readers in a pithy, sententious page the marrow of a laborious chapter or book; and an important condensation possible no other way may thus be effected.

A curious idea exists in some minds that science is essentially unpoetic; yet the great poems of the world are great just in proportion as they are scientific; that is, scientific in the widest sense,—true to Nature, keen in analysis of mind and motives, and pleasing in artistic beauty.

In a brief glance let us notice some of the materials that this coming poet might use:—

The evolving universe, holding in its first simplicity of air everything we now see,—men, cities, forests, oceans, skies.

The indefinite, but not infinite, future, when evolution shall run its course; until this universe, one of a series, ends where it began, and gives birth to another.

The evolution of the globe from the molten sea to the Europe and America of to-day.

The hierarchy of the forms of force; first simple gravity, then heat and light, then the electric current, and so on, until the crystal, the magnet, and the cell, give rise to nobler things; while laws of unbroken continuity connect grade with grade and state with state, from the atom at one end of the scale to the human brain at the other.

Wave motion, which now explains the phenomena of sound and light, has been shown to be made up of the circular motions of particles in wide circles, while the particles rotate on their own axes; a striking analogy, with astronomical motions pointing to a common mechanical origin of these motions, and of the medium making them visible to us.

The solidarity of the universe, never an atom nor a unit of force more or less than now; every part affecting every other; a mariner at sea now guiding his ship by a star, and anon having his compass deranged by a solar storm.

The wonderful interplay of forces, as when a drop of liquid, rounded on or in a plant, serves as a lens to divide solar beams to several uses.

The exact and legible registration by forces of the details of all their acts; as when an Owen builds a mammoth from a tooth, or a Lockyer makes a ray of light tell the constitution and motion of a star, separated from us by the radius of the visible universe.

Gravity, the simple and universal force, binding in a way that no genius has yet guessed all things together: now directing a constellation, and now moulding a fruit, or deciding the height of men.

Human evolution—the tragedy of the savage struggling for existence with types now much lower, which yet in the dreary past may have seemed destined to win the first place.

The tragedy of savage against savage, still surviving in the angry breasts of men!

Religions, always fit and never true, from the time when treps and clouds were invested with spirits only to be displaced by many gods, finally reduced to one, who is now being absorbed in the idea of the universe.

The growth of moral feeling, with victories ever attended by the perception of new possible ones, new wrongs to be righted. When the pirate was banished, the slave was felt to be a slave; the slave freed, the laborer, the criminal, and the drunkard engage the sympathy and demand the justice of men.

Hope and fear, the children of ignorance and weakness, gradually displaced by a knowledge increasing in power of prevision, knowing what to expect.

The spread of the belief in causation, doing away more and more with praise and blame; banishing at once revenge and adulation from the children of a common mother.

The recognition of the supreme justice of Nature, which gives no gifts, yields nothing unearned; and through mazes and difficulties ever maintains the even balance, to the disappointment of undue expectation, and the ultimate righting of apparent wrong.

Sociality, beginning when two together were noticed to be stronger than two singly; progressing to the nations and societies of to-day; destined doubtless to abolish war, and live in more and more of unity.

While each individual does his duty well, he insensibly helps the common weal. The coral insects produce such works of beauty as a skilful artist might design; yet each insect but takes the line that is nearest, and builds where it is easiest.

This coming poet shall be a Shakespeare; no specialist in verses, no mere teacher. He must be a great but an impersonal man, with his identity lost in his work; for that is a small banner of truth that does not hide the man who holds it up.

The opportunity is here, and it shall form its interpreter. J. G. H.

MONTREAL.

THE OHIO DEMOCRACY.

SALEM, Ohio, Aug. 21, 1875.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Will you allow me a word or two on the money question? It grieved me when I read your few words of condemnation relative to the new departure of the Ohio Democracy; your eulogy of the policy pursued by the Republican party; and, still more, your quotation from a New York daily that is controlled by the cold-blooded money power, to substantiate your ideas. You have not room in THE INDEX for one-tenth part of what I would like to say to the readers of that paper; but allow me to submit the following propositions and facts, without using space to offer proof or comments for the present:—

1st. There is a reform-element in the Democratic party; and that element was victorious at the late convention at Columbus, by declaring against the national bank system, favoring the legal tender (greenback) in place of the national bank currency, demanding the repeal of the act of Congress declaring that we shall resume specie payment on the identical day of July 1, A.D. 1879; et cetera.

2d. By a logical necessity this element of that party has come to the rescue of labor and our crippled and prostrated industries.

3d. The act of Congress aiming to force resumption has put the possibility of that attainment farther off (so says Peter Cooper), because it has prostrated our industries; and the building up of our industries is the only means by which we can ever reach specie payment.

4th. The national bank system, by which the producers of this country (through treasonable agents at Washington) have given the thirty thousand national bank stock-holders $354,000,000 for the period of twenty years without interest, and exempted them from taxation, is a robbery of labor to the extent of $31,000,000 per annum.

5th. If the government choose to tax our industries to the extent to which it has allowed national banks to tax them, and apply the same to the payment of our national debt, it would all be paid in less than twenty years.

6th. All intelligent people know that the national bank monopoly is a curse to our people; and yet the Republican platform of Ohio (and no other one that I know of) says not one word against the usurpation.

7th. The financial policy enunciated in the Democratic platform of Ohio is approved by the following named leading men of the times, all hitherto leading Republicans, or independent reformers; and some of them are known as having been leaders in the anti-slavery movement; namely, Wendell Phillips, Henry C. Carey (the oldest and most profound political economist in America), Wm. D. Kelley, Henry Carey Baird, Moses W. Field, B. F. Butler,

Mr. Buckingham, Alexander Campbell, Peter Cooper, Pliny Freeman, Wallace P. Groom, besides many other men of thought and worth. Most, if not all, of these men are assisting in the election of Allen, either directly or indirectly; and some of them are engaged to speak in his behalf during the campaign.—Henry Carey Baird for one (I forgot to mention E. M. Davis, President of the Radical Club and the Woman Suffrage Association, Philadelphia, who appeals to the old anti-slavery people of Ohio to support Allen.

8th. Many of the manufacturing establishments of the State, the proprietors of whom have heretofore been leading Republicans, are organizing green-back clubs, and I believe one hundred thousand Republicans of Ohio will vote for Allen.

Cordially yours, CHARLES BONSALE.

SPECIE PAYMENT RESUMPTION.

EDITOR INDEX:—

As you have permitted an occasional article on finance to appear in your columns, will you allow me space for an attempt to answer Mr. Boecklin's question, "How to resume specie payments." But first let us clear away a little fog in which Mr. Boecklin has thought proper to hide the "kernel" of the trouble, and which makes this "lump of painted beeswax" appear so much like a hard nut. Mr. Boecklin says: "To resume specie payments, we must reduce our eight hundred millions of currency to two hundred millions"; and he then exclaims: "Now crack this nut." But such a reduction of the currency is not necessary. The proof that this reduction is not necessary need not be given now, as it will appear as we go on.

There are two processes by which the country can reach specie payments: one sudden and violent, the other gradual and quiet.

The first is, without preliminary, to repeal the Legal Tender Act. This would accomplish the object most effectually, but would be followed by the immediate appearance on the streets of financial wooden legs, armless sleeves, black eyes, and bruised heads; though fortunately the victims would not generally be those who had "suffered for their country." This process would make the government, the banks, and individuals, competitors in the market for gold; the consequence of which would be the influx of that commodity, precisely the same as of any other commodity for which there was a sudden and increased demand. Of course many would be submerged, simply because they could not hold out till the flood had reached its level. But a level would be reached, and the amount of paper that would be displaced by gold would depend upon the general solvency of the country.

If Mr. Boecklin has no stomach for this method of conveyance to his desired lunar abode, we have another and better route, on which the Muses rather than the Furies shall be his companions. This other method is contraction of the currency, as a preliminary to the repeal of the Legal Tender Act. The amount of currency required for the traffic of any country of unimpaired national credit, but possessing an inconvertible currency, is unerringly indicated by its value as compared to the money standard of the civilized world—gold. A convertible currency is self-regulating; for by every issue of paper the same amount of gold is driven from circulation, and consequently the volume in circulation (which alone affects general prices of commodities) cannot be permanently affected by this process in respect to the wants of traffic; but an inconvertible currency, having no such means of self-regulation, can only make its superabundance apparent through its effect on prices, including that of gold. Suppose that every piece of paper of the currency in circulation in this country to-day should be stamped by the authority of its issuers with a figure representing double its present value; what would be its effect upon prices? Of course prices would be doubled; and gold, the exchange value of which is, like all other commodities, based upon the cost of production, would show the same rise.

Now here are two important facts which, being recognized, help to simplify the main question under discussion. A convertible currency tends to self-regulation in respect to the amount needed for trade. An inconvertible currency shows its superabundance for the needs of trade by its value as compared to the precious metals. Now if these positions are admitted to be true, it will be seen that the first step necessary, both in the direction of resumption, and also to bring the currency to a natural and healthy volume for the interests of trade, is to commence the process of contraction. This can be done so gradually that the debtor class, whose interests are popularly supposed to be endangered by the policy, will "never know what hurt them"; and by the time that we discover prices (including that of gold, of course) to have fallen about fifteen per cent., we shall also have the pleasure of observing that nearly all contracts will be based on conditions suited to the new order of things. But, so far, this only remedies an evil constantly liable to occur through the misuse of an inconvertible currency; namely, over-issuing. What we want now is a convertible currency that will hereafter take care of itself; to accomplish which all that is wanted is for the government to enact that a promise to pay gold shall mean what it says, and after a few plunges in the new atmosphere the "moon" is reached. When, however, the time comes in which there is nothing to be made in the speculation with gold, the transition from an inconvertible to a convertible currency will hardly be noticed; and it will not only not be necessary to reduce our currency to $200,000,000, or even to $600,000,000, but we shall not in all probability be obliged to displace a dollar of it with gold. As your correspondent

Mr. Mead amusingly illustrates: if gold is to be had, nobody wants it; and when speculators find that government means business in this matter their occupation is gone.

But Mr. Boecklin seems to think that a return to specie payments involves the necessity of the holders of $800,000,000 in currency making instant demand for gold therefor, when there are but $170,000,000 in gold to respond with. What object will they have to do so, since the gold will buy no more than the paper? But what if they should, out of mere wantonness or through panic, make a run for gold? Well, some might get hurt, but such a state of affairs would probably be anticipated in time to provide for it; and, if a people should ever entirely lose their faith in a paper currency, it will be replaced, as by a law of hydrostatics, by gold and silver, as those commodities will surely go where there is the greatest demand for them.

The nut that Mr. Boecklin desired you to crack for him was simply how to get back to specie payments. If I have cracked the nut to Mr. Boecklin's satisfaction, I shall be gratified.

Z.

"FIXED VALUE."

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

The currency question is quite too large to discuss in the few lines I propose now to write. But there are some fundamental errors in this question that crop out every time men holding certain views speak. They are such terms as "fixed standard of value," "fixed value," an "invariable measure of value," "intrinsic value," etc., etc. Now, strictly speaking, these terms have no such significance as is generally given to them.

The civilized world cannot give, as Mr. Meade says, "certain fixed value" to any thing. The value of one thing is some other thing for which it will exchange; and this is just as true of gold and silver as of any other commodity.

James Mill tersely expresses the truth in the following language: "Metallic money, or, more generally speaking, the precious metals, are nothing more, considered strictly and in their essence, than that commodity which is most generally bought and sold"; and again: "When we speak of the value of the precious metal (gold), we mean the quantity of other things for which it will exchange." There is, in fact, no real analogy between money, as a measure of values, and a yard-stick or a fixed weight. Value is necessarily a ratio, and cannot be fixed.

This does not alter the fact that the precious metals are more readily and conveniently exchangeable throughout the civilized world for all other commodities than anything else.

This currency question is not to be disposed of in a word; and I am not so sure that a thorough going over of the entire question would not lead to some modification of the expressed views of THE INDEX. At any rate, it is best to start with correct definitions, and get right on fundamental ideas.

A. J. W.

MARIETTA, O., Aug. 29.

DUNCAN, SHERMAN, & CO.

NEW YORK, Aug. 19, 1875.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Dear Sir,—The very favorable notice of the action of Duncan, Sherman, & Co., in a late number of your paper, should be criticised a little.

Any merchant receiving the property of others on trust should, while such property is subject to the risks of his business, do a careful business. Especially is this true of a banker who holds in trust money belonging to others, and promises to return the same when properly called for.

When a banking firm have by an established reputation gained the confidence of the general public, it is their duty to be more particular than ever that their transactions are made carefully. It is well also to remember that all large firms "make up," each half year, a statement of their business, showing actual assets and liabilities, any profit or loss for preceding six months appearing. If the firm in question properly considered this matter, and were not speculating (which, of course, no honorable banking firm will do), how can it be possible that now, for the first time, they realize that their assets are but about half as much as their liabilities; and, in fact, that they can safely pay creditors but thirty-three and a third per cent.? Perhaps their neighbors in similar business had not the same faith in their responsibility that the general public had; then, knowing this as they must, want of care in conducting their business was decidedly wrong. As it is, to express the matter kindly, the facts show that somewhere Duncan, Sherman, & Co. were far too careless in their business, at the very least; and there are times when carefulness and honesty are as one.

As an INDEX reader and a radical, believing "character is everything," I am jealous of any one receiving your generous praise who does not fully deserve it. Be kind enough to accept my words as not personal, and believe my motive the hope to assist to a proper decision of a now public matter.

Yours truly,

"A."

["A." is entirely right in this matter, and our original "Glimpse" was entirely mistaken. The mistake, however, was the consequence of trusting the flattering first statements of the Associated Press despatches; which warranted all we said, but which were afterwards totally overthrown. In these times of shamefully frequent corruption, we were eager to notice with praise an apparent case of honesty and high-mindedness in business; but we sorrowfully admit that our praise was undeserved.—Ed.]

PRAYERFULLY.

EDITOR INDEX:—

In this day of church premiums and pious lotteries, I have failed to notice any scheme which appeals more directly to religious enthusiasm, than the following extracts of an advertisement published in Western papers:—

"Gold! Gold! $600 in Gold will be paid to three agents who send us the largest number of subscribers between July 15 and Oct. 1, 1875, for the fast-selling book just out,—Marvels of Prayer and Leaves from the Tree of Life, illustrated by incidents from the Fulton Street prayer-meeting; by Rev. Matthew Hale Smith."

The great persuader is that the money will be gold, and must operate as a powerful tonic upon those pious colporteurs who have not heard its jingle since the inauguration of greenbacks.

The announcement then adds: "To save time, send $3.00 for an outfit" (whatever that may be), "which will be sent prepaid."

All this is for the benefit of the great "Evangelical Publishing Society," who request that all remittances be carefully made by post-office order, draft, or check.

This book, of course, will be a welcome guest to all who really believe that the requests of these Fulton Street fossils will change the decrees of an unchangeable God.

The "leaves from the tree of life" are not clearly defined, but we may infer they are lineally descended from that ancient vegetable which flourished among those four rivers of Eden, and proved to be a tree of death according to the story about Mr. and Mrs. Adam.

Probably the curse attending the eating of the fruit does not equally apply to the handling of its leaves.

Some poor radical, however, may insinuate that the raving maniacs of our insane asylums, who are constantly talking night and day about the visions of Daniel, and of the dreams of the Apocalypse, are slightly cursed by the stray leaves that they have plucked from this wonderful tree.

The fact of the whole matter is this: the tree of life about which we hear so many pious platitudes is an unmitigated nuisance, whether it is cultivated by Spurgeon, Talmage, Moody, Sankey, or this Evangelical Society, who are undoubtedly making a good living for decayed ministers out of the credulity and superstition of weak nerves and torpid livers.

J. E. HAYNES.

THE BIBLE IN VINELAND SCHOOLS.

MR. EDITOR:—

Quite a commotion has been caused here recently by Mr. E. R. Wood, a teacher in South Vineland, being deposed under the following circumstances, as reported by the trustees, George H. Church and J. P. Rooksby, in the Vineland Advertiser, Aug. 21, 1875:—

"Mr. Wood was engaged to teach school in this place last fall; and after the school had been in session a few days, complaints were made that the custom of opening the school with reading a passage of Scripture was departed from by the teacher. He was waited on by the trustees, and requested to read a passage from the Bible as an opening exercise, which he refused. This request was made several times; and, when the matter was pressed upon him by the trustees, he said he would consider. He did consider, and decided to read the Scriptures; but first prefaced the reading by saying to the scholars that he should read it because requested, but he wanted it distinctly understood that he did not consider it a sacred book. . . . The personal friends of Mr. Wood were anxious to have him employed next fall. . . . The trustees decided to have the matter settled by the legal voters. A meeting was called, and by a decisive vote Mr. Wood's services were rejected. It was also voted unanimously to continue the practice of opening the school by reading the Scriptures."

Mr. Editor, is not Vineland sadly in need of liberal missionaries? Have you none to send who will preach the "Demands of Liberalism," and teach the people that a good teacher who will not read the Bible, except conditionally, and who does not believe it to be a sacred book, is a better teacher for "Orthodox youths" than a poor teacher who can repeat it from Genesis to Revelation, who believes it sacred, and infallibly inspired by God?

ELLA E. GIBSON.

VINELAND, N. J., Aug. 25.

FRANKLIN ON RELIGIOUS TESTS.

The following is an extract from a letter of Benj. Franklin, written Oct. 9, 1780, to Richard Price:—

"I am fully of your opinion respecting religious tests; but, though the people of Massachusetts have not in their new Constitution kept quite clear of them, yet if we consider what that people were one hundred years ago, we must allow they have gone great lengths in liberality of sentiment on religious subjects; and we may hope for greater degrees of perfection when their Constitution, some years hence, shall be revised.

"If Christian preachers had continued to teach as Christ and his apostles did, without salaries, and as the Quakers now do, I imagine tests would never have existed; for I think they were invented, not so much to secure religion itself, as the emoluments of it. When a religion is good, I conceive that it will support itself; and when it cannot support itself, and God does not take care to support it, so that its professors are obliged to call for the help of the civil power, it is a sign, I apprehend, of its being a bad one."

The above is quoted from the second volume of Bigelow's Life of Franklin.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers. Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAHAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interest Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5. PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. Voysey has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, with uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
CORBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Leibniz and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Grey.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellaneous.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beats of the Universe.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Papers, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMILTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbora. Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin and Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms of Darwin and a Descriptive Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Emma the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Science," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions. By E. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities. Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 3 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	1.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays. Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subject of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature. Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hobbit Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith, or Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philosophy.....	1.75
Theism. Doctrine and Practice.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.....	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A. D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Held in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait, Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHELLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.75
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
SOCIOLOGY.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINIE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip.....	1.25
Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.2
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humors, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
On Soundings in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols. III. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
The Voyage Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
Vegetables: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES, IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.
For sale by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOOK,

Card,

—AND—

Job

PRINTING,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 TREMONT PLACE,
BOSTON.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price.
Address THE INDEX,
Tremont Place, Boston.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform.

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Ednah D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucetta Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, MO. Box 247. Send for Circular.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT

BETWEEN Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Landaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY

335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co's Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!

THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston

LANDS FOR SALE, near WALL-HALLA, S.C. Small tracts and easy terms. Address W. J. DUFFIE, Owner, COLUMBIA, S.C.

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL

SCHOOL, for both sexes, MERIDEN, CONN. EMILY J. LEONARD, Principal.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

MORSE'S PAINE.

PHOTOGRAPHS

For sale at the office of THE INDEX.

Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cts.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS. Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

REPORTS,

SERMONS,

ESSAYS,

and PAMPHLETS,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly printed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 Tremont Place,
BOSTON.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

JUST PUBLISHED.

!!THE SHINING RIVER!!

A New Sabbath-school Song Book.

By H. S. & W. O. PERKINS.

Price 35 cents. $30.00 per hundred.

"Rest in Thee," "What Jesus may Say," "Wandering Child," "What are These?" "Watchman, Awake!" are specimens of the titles of the beautiful new hymns, to sweet new melodies.

THE HIGH SCHOOL CHOIR. By L. O. EMERSON and W. S. TILDEN. Price $1.00. $9.00 per dozen.

The "High School Choir" is similar in general design to the very popular "Hour of Singing," which has been almost universally used in High Schools. The present work is in no way inferior to its predecessor, and is entirely fresh and new.

THE SONG MONARCH. Price 75 cts. $7.50 per dozen. By H. R. PALMER, assisted by L. O. EMERSON.

Do not think of teaching a Singing-school without using this attractive, popular, and useful book.

Specimen copies sent, post-paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,

711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 1875.

WHOLE No. 300.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———.

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSES.

MR. CONWAY is arrived in this country, and has, we doubt not, a brilliant lecturing season before him.

THE NUMBER of Old Catholics in Prussia is reckoned as 20,000, while that of Ultramontanes is about 8,000,000.

SAYS THE Catholic Telegraph, of Cincinnati: "The unbroken, solid vote of the Catholic citizens of this State will be given to the Democracy at the Fall election."

IT IS impossible to report this week the results of the Liberal League Convention at Philadelphia; but we shall do so in our next issue, and meanwhile are glad to say that the Convention was successful and satisfactory.

SAYS THE Toledo Catholic Review: "Every Catholic should vote for the Democratic ticket. Those who do not do it will be false to themselves and false to their own interests. The only political favors which Catholics have ever had in this country have been received at the hands of the Democratic party."

THE BAPTISTS and Methodists in this vicinity are getting restive over the "violation of the Sabbath" involved in the Sunday travel caused by their own camp-meetings. Some of them feebly lay blame on the railroads and steamboats; but others boldly tax the camp-meeting associations with the sin. It is a queer and rather embarrassing scrimmage.

THE NEW Spanish Constitution makes Roman Catholicism the religion of the State, allows freedom of worship to other denominations, and forbids all public processions and "manifestations" to Protestants—which are supposed to include announcements of religious meetings, open air preaching, and advertisements of religious books! This is "freedom of worship" with a vengeance; but it is all that the priests will understand by the phrase, if they have their way.

BISHOP BOURGET, of Montreal, solemnly cursed the grave of Joseph Guibord, on Sunday, September 12. The victory of the civil authorities over the Roman Church seems to be thus turned into a complete defeat; for it would be impossible to force the Bishop to bless the grave or withdraw the curse. The mandamus of the court requires that Guibord should be buried in consecrated ground; this is done, and the Bishop unconsecrates it! How can the State cope with an invisible and inaccessible enemy? The end is not yet.

THIS BIT of political gossip from the Boston Advertiser is worth noticing: "The Ohio Democracy find that troubles follow each other thick and fast. The latest blow they have had to meet is the re-nomination of Mr. John J. Geghan, the author of the Geghan law, which has given rise to the sectarian strife in the canvass. The Enquirer is equal to it, however, for it 'repudiates Geghan in the name of the Democracy of Hamilton County,' because his nomination is an 'insult to every intelligent voter,' since it is an open boast of an alliance between the Catholic Church and the Democratic party."

MR. AUSTIN KENT thinks we unintentionally misrepresented the "free love" theory in citing Philip Bessinger's conduct lately as a practical illustration of it. We certainly intended no misrepresentation, nor does Mr. Kent at all point out wherein we fell into it. The main features of Bessinger's course were forsaking an old love for a new one, offering his wife $2000 to leave him forever, threatening to kill her if she returned, and tendering to her two of his three children to support. The threat, of course, we regard as an illustration of free hate rather than of "free love," though a terribly natural result of the situation; we cannot see what else a fearless advocate of the "free love" theory could consistently blame in Bessinger's course. It could not make any difference whether his wife cheerfully acquiesced in the separation, or whether she went off in despair to drown herself and her children together: the right to "love freely" means the right to discard the outgrown love, does it not? If so, that involves the whole tragedy; and we misrepresented not a whit.

THE SUPREME COURT of Massachusetts decided on the first of September, in the case of Trinity Church versus the City of Boston, that "real estate held by a religious society not more than sufficient in extent to meet its reasonable requirements in this respect, and devoted by such society in good faith to the erection of a church-edifice upon which the work of erection already commenced is prosecuted without unreasonable delay, is entitled to the exemption from taxation given by statute." Assessor Thomas Hills, of this city, states that such property has always paid taxes hitherto in this State, until actually occupied for religious worship. The new decision does but illustrate the universal tendency to retrograde, when the process of advance has ceased. The State will certainly grow either more secular, or more ecclesiastical, year by year; and its growth now is in the wrong direction on the church taxation question. The Boston Liberal League made a stout fight on this question in 1874, as readers of THE INDEX will remember; but, being left by their fellow-liberals to struggle almost alone, and being met at once with powerful and concerted opposition, they were unable single-handed to secure the reform so much needed. Judge Wells alone dissented from the present ruling of the Supreme Bench.

THE FOLLOWING paragraph from the Nation of September 9 well exposes the character and probable result of the late attempt of the New Jersey Catholics to interfere in politics directly: "On Tuesday the people of New Jersey voted on the constitutional amendments described in our last issue, and which, with barely an exception, deserved the support of every good citizen, and were in harmony with the spirit of reform which has nowhere of late so powerfully and hopefully manifested itself as in our State Constitutional Conventions. A body called the Catholic Union of New Jersey appealed to Catholic voters to vote against four of the proposed amendments whose importance will be recognized: namely, forbidding any town or county to give money or property, or loan its credit in aid of, or own the stock or bonds of, any association or corporation; forbidding the State or any municipal organization to give land or appropriate money to any association; directing the legislature to provide for a thorough and efficient system of free schools; and forbidding special legislation in certain cases, as in granting to any corporation, association, or individual any exclusive privilege or franchise whatever, and again in providing for the public schools otherwise than by general laws. In accord with the Catholic Union, what was perhaps never before witnessed in New Jersey, prepared ballots were distributed in the Catholic churches last Sunday, with admonitions how to vote; and the Bishop of Newark went so far, on account of an amendment (otherwise objectionable) which threatened to make church property liable to taxation, as to recommend cancelling all the amendments. In fact, at many of the polls one saw Catholics distributing ballots which were entirely erased. As we write, the result of the election is not known. One result, however, cannot be doubtful. Whenever and wherever the religious issue is raised in this country by the priests, it will be taken up, and it will not be disposed of to their advantage. In the long run, they will gain no more in the United States than they lately did in Bavaria by interfering openly in politics."

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBOO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland; L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carrie S. Burnham, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Züning, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint.

ABSTRACT OF A LECTURE DELIVERED IN BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, AUGUST 29, 1875.

BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.

There is as much evidence, it is said, of mind as of matter; if the latter is indestructible, why not the former? "Matter immortal, and shall spirit die?" exclaims the poet Young. To this we reply that, if mind be regarded as an element or combination of elements, its imperishability as such is not to be supposed; but since matter is constantly changing—its forms appearing and disappearing,—if we reason from analogy in regard to mind, we must conclude that its individual forms are transitory, while the substance alone is without end. So if mind is something diffused throughout space like the ethereal fire of the Stoics, it is no proof of the immortality of any individual mind. But science does not speak of mind as a substance. It knows only the living, thinking organism, with its activities and aptitudes.

It is frequently said by our Spiritualist friends that, if life commenced on this globe with a speck of protoplasm, and organic forms have been evolved during the ages until the perfection of the human form and the present intellectual condition have been reached, must we not believe that this progress will continue in the future? If death is the end of man, is there not an abrupt termination of the chain of existence? "Grant the soul of man eternal, or in man the series ends." But how can the fact of progress in this material world lead to the conclusion that one of the results of this progress—man—will always exist? The only progress suggested by the history of life on this planet is continued progress in this material world. The improvement of organisms will go on, doubtless, while favorable conditions last. Accumulated advantages, which will result by natural selection in the struggles for existence, always insuring the "survival of the fittest," must give us higher and higher organisms, until their environment becomes unfavorable to the higher classes of animals—or, in other words, until the earth undergoes changes making it impossible for the higher forms to subsist. But now does evolution even intimate the existence of man in a spiritual condition, and that existence immortal?

Man's desires and aspirations, to many, are a strong indication that man will exist forever. It is the old argument:—

"It must be so. Plato, thou reasonest well;
 Else whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire,
 This longing after immortality?"

But how our hopes and desires and longings for continued existence prove its reality I do not understand. We desire and hope for many things we never get; we aspire to many positions we never attain. It is said Nature never creates a demand for which she does not provide a supply. Of course it is those things which exist in Nature that we desire, for it is those with which we become acquainted, and which contribute to our happiness. We have an appetite for food, and there is food to gratify it. We should not have the appetite if there were no food. Our appetite and our desire are the results of our environments. That is clear enough. Well, it is equally clear that we love life, and in life we have daily the gratification of this love. The desire for endless life is simply a desire for uninterrupted existence; for of an endless existence we can have no conception. The desire for a life that will not cease is no more evidence that we shall have it, than the desire for boundless wealth is evidence that we shall possess that. The wish for a continuance of this life beyond the grave is no more evidence of its ultimate realization than the Indian's desire for his bow and arrow, his dog, his pony, and his scalping-knife, after death, is evidence that he will have them there.

The inequalities of this life are pointed to by many Spiritualists, as they are by religionists generally, as an argument for future existence. It is assumed that there must be a state in which the wrongs of this earthly life will be righted. But persons who use this argument suppose a Being possessing the benevolence and love of man without limitation; and then, to make the existence of this supposed Being possible (for infinite power is also ascribed to him), they imagine those who suffer unjustly here will be compensated hereafter. A batch of assumptions. If a God of infinite power and boundless goodness permits injustice and suffering here, why not there? If it be said that that shocks our sense of justice and our feelings of humanity, and that we must not suppose God will do anything wrong or cruel, I reply that we, with our dispositions, would not, if we had the power to prevent it, allow suffering and wrong here. Perfect justice in some other state cannot be logically inferred from inequality, injustice, and wrong in this state. There is, then, no assurance from the condition of earth that there is what corresponds with our ideas of justice in any other state of being. We have, then, no arguments for a spiritual state in the wrongs of this material world.

Many of the writers and lecturers on Spiritualism still speak of heat, electricity, and magnetism as "refined matter"; and they claim that matter still more refined must exist, and that is spirit. But this is a crude thought in the light of modern science. Heat, electricity, magnetism, etc., are no longer regarded by scientific men as substances in a refined state, but as modes of motion; and of course they presuppose material bodies in motion. Far from being links, that connect gross matter with spirit, they are words which represent the conditions of gross bodies like steel and wood, as well as matter in a more rarefied state.

Another metaphysical argument for immortality is founded on memory, which, it is said, shows there is something in man that resists those changes by which, in an ordinary lifetime, the body changes its material several times. Impressions must be made on something that is not subject to mutations like matter. The argument is plausible, and involves the discussion of fine points. We can only reply here, that a scar which remains on the body for years, retaining the same form and appearance, seems to show that the particles of the body which leave are replaced by others which serve the same purpose. And this suggests that the new molecules which replace the old ones in the brain may take the same shape, and perform the same functions, so far as is necessary to preserve identity, as those which originally received the impressions. How this is done, of course, we do not profess to explain; but it seems more rational to hold to this view, than to imagine inside of the physical brain a something capable of receiving impressions, and yet not admitting of disintegration. And what becomes of the notion that the spiritual part of man is refined matter? How does that tally with the assumption that the mind or soul is something that is exempt from change—from disorganization? How fine must matter become before it ceases to be subject to the laws of matter-integration and disintegration, distribution and re-distribution? If spirit is refined, sublimated matter, there is no possibility of immortality, unless at a certain stage of refinement matter ceases to act in accordance with those laws which we now observe in all material operations; which is an absurdity.

To the materialist, life and intelligence seem to depend upon, in fact to be the combined activities of, organisms. Destroy the organism, and the activities, whether they be those called physical or mental, evidently cease. The substance is changed to other conditions—enters other combinations; the organic forces are converted into other activities corresponding with the material modifications.

What we call mind is evolved with the brain and nervous system. Feeble in infancy, strong in mature life, it declines in old age, and the last symptoms which the mind exhibits are disorder and insensibility, the precursors of annihilation. When we consider that the condition of the brain and nervous system and that of the mind exactly correspond; that any alteration in the one is attended with an alteration in the other; that to all appearances they grow and decay together; that any injury of the brain produces disturbance of the mind,—the conclusion seems unavoidable that the dissolution of the body, the destruction of the brain and nervous system, must be followed by extinction of intelligence and thought. Every object with which we are acquainted has a beginning and an end. Aggregation implies segregation; formation implies dissolution. How contrary to analogy, as Hume remarks, to imagine that one single form, seemingly the frailest of any, and subject to the greatest disorders, is immortal and indissoluble! Some of the modern Spiritualists, like those of old, seeing this absurdity, have recourse to the doctrine of preexistence. But common sense tells us that our mental existence began with our bodies—our existence as conscious, intelligent beings. Can immortality be reconciled with this fact?

Modern Spiritualism, however, claims to have evidence of a direct, experiential character, in unquestionable communications with, and the reappearance of, former inhabitants of the earth. These evidences are by no means new. All the so-called proofs of modern Spiritualism were known to the ancients. This is admitted by intelligent Spiritualists, and the fact by no means makes the evidence either more or less valuable.

The communications from spirits have not made much impression on scientific investigators. They can generally be traced to the minds of the mediums. Have any of them been demonstrated to come from supra-mundane beings? The character of the communications usually makes them very suspicious. We have messages and volumes from Theodore Parker that would reflect no credit on any ordinary mind, while they exhibit none of the distinguishing characteristics of that great man. I have many times received communications from Thomas Paine; but he has been exceedingly unfortunate in his efforts to recall even his place and date of birth and death, the title of his works, or important incidents in his mundane career! It is strange that intelligent men can believe that the communications which we get, and which are ascribed to our departed sages, proceed from those minds which, it is claimed, freed from earthly care and toil, and enriched by their varied and accumulated life-experiences in the body, have in addition enjoyed facilities for intellectual progress unknown to earth! Strange that a world where there is no death, where to the wisdom of earth is added the greater wisdom resulting from centuries of thought, study, and experience in the "Summer Land," is able to impart to the groping and struggling denizens of this world so little,—I will not say that in advance of our discoveries and speculations, but that is worthy the attention of men and women of ordinary intelligence and culture! We have communications from the philosophers of Greece and Rome, the priests of Egypt, the sages of China, the great minds of modern times, the light of whose genius yet lingers on the earth; but when we read their productions, and consider what they were when they trod our globe, and what they must be now if the communications purporting to come from them are genuine, we find relief in the thought that the great ones whose names are used have not thus degenerated, but are in the quiet, everlasting sleep of death; while these childish thoughts and words ascribed to them are but the productions of undeveloped, ignorant, and abnormal minds among us. I believe that all intelligent and candid Spiritualists will concede that the intellectual emanations from the spirit world are far inferior in point of excellence to the productions of those advocates of Spiritualism among us, who have written in a normal state, and given us their own thoughts.

Observe, further, the contradictory character of these communications. One spirit will tell you one thing, and another something diametrically opposite; and this in regard to matters of fact, and not simply concerning speculative points. For instance, it is still debated among Spiritualists and mediums whether there are brutes in the spirit world; because some spirits say yes, while others as positively say no. And yet we are on the very "boundaries of another world," and in daily conversation with its inhabitants! If two persons claim to have been to Europe, and one reports that there are no horses there, and the other that they are there just as they are here; and if we extend our inquiries, and ask hundreds and thousands the same question, and we find that they answer yes or no, as they are fond of or dislike the animal,—what should we think, if such a thing were possible? And yet thousands of pretended spirits, claiming to be in many cases relatives and friends, say that all the animals of earth continue to exist as individuals after death, with dispositions and proclivities such as they possessed on earth,—that they see them every day, just as they see the spirits of their own race. Other thousands, just as intelligent, and apparently with equal sincerity, say that there are no brutes in the spirit world. Some of our pretended invisible friends and teachers tell us that, animals losing their identity at death, their spirits are resolved into "elementary primates," and afford food for the spirits of human beings. Other spirits solemnly declare "through the mediums" that no food is used or needed in that invisible world. I once heard a distinguished trance-speaker say that the relation of the sexes is continued after death; that human beings are there begotten, and ushered into existence, and pass through the stages of infancy, childhood, adolescence, and manhood and womanhood, as they do here. Other communications—one from Socrates, and another from Lord Bacon, among the many—assure me that the notion of births in the world of spirits is false, and must have come from some lying, mischievous spirits. Appealing to men and women of common sense, I ask, Is it not evident that these utterances and messages about the land of spirits are simply the vagaries of the mediums' own brains?

The common explanation that, the instruments which the spirits employ being defective, the control is imperfect, and that these contradictions and inanities are due largely to that cause, was never satisfactory to me. If a medium has defective or diseased organs of speech, I can understand that a spirit might have difficulty in speaking through the medium, for it has to use these organs to speak; but since a spirit does not depend (so we are told) on the brain of a medium for its thought, its knowledge, its wisdom, why should the imperfection of the medium's brain, or the ignorance of the medium's mind, be urged in behalf of Cicero and Webster, when they have spoken fluently, without let or hindrance, for a full hour, and talked only transcendental fustian of the cheapest quality? Why should this be offered in excuse and apology for Thomas Paine and Theodore Parker, when they have controlled a medium to write rapidly whole pages without giving one strong, vigorous sentence, without attempting to demonstrate any proposition, or to put together a series of sensible statements having a perceptible connection with one another?

Clairvoyance is often appealed to by Spiritualists in support of their theory. My investigations have never brought to my view one genuine case of clairvoyance. I do not deny the reality of the condition; but of the scores of clairvoyants I have tested, I have never yet found one person who has given me any evidence of his or her ability to see objects at a distance. I do not believe there is one in Boston who can stand on one end of this platform, and tell me four words, written on a paper, that I may hold in my hand at the opposite end. But it is possible that there are rare instances of vision without the direct use of the eyes, and medical journals contain accounts of such cases, in diseased persons. But, if true, does clairvoyance prove the existence of spirits? Some electricians have suggested the possibility of communication between two batteries, placed at elevated positions, without the use of wires. It may yet be realized. And possibly two living galvanic batteries, human brains, may, in certain states, and under exceptional and peculiar conditions, have communications when at a distance. I do not affirm this; I say its possibility, supposing clairvoyance real, should make us cautious in drawing the conclusion that spirits are concerned in the phenomenon.

It is said persons see spirits. Some see them in daylight, and with eyes wide open. I have talked with many such persons. I believe they are generally honest, and my conviction is quite as strong that they are in a state of chronic mental aberration, or on the verge of violent insanity. Quite a large class of persons see spirits in the dark, generally in circles; or when they are in an abnormal state of mind; whether self-induced, as in the case of trance speakers, or mesmerized, as we have seen persons under the influence of Grimes and other experienced manipulators. Are the visions of persons generally diseased in body and mind, in these abnormal states, to be taken for sober realities? If so, we may as well prepare to believe anything and everything that is fanciful, strange, and wild.

The strangest and most talked-of manifestations just now are the so-called materializations, accounts of which from different places come to us thick and fast. Concerning those which I have seen, it may be justly said that "distance lends enchantment to the view." They never come up to the expectations which are justified by the published accounts. I have never been at one of these materializations when the conditions were such as to preclude the possibility of fraud. On the contrary, they are such as to prevent rigid scrutiny and thorough investigation, and to create strong doubts as to the fair and honorable character of the performances. Without the time or the money to visit all the places advertised, I have to form my opinion of these "manifestations" generally from those which I have seen. Of these I am obliged to say that the conditions were to some extent such conditions as would be imposed, if fraud were to be practised; and in the absence of evidence of the appearance of spirits, I must decline to believe that the faces I saw were the faces of persons who had passed from earth, or were faces manufactured by spirits to make themselves visible to the dull eyes of mundane beings. If these materializations are, as I believe, fraudulent performances, they will be so conducted that visitors will not be afforded an opportunity to expose them. The conditions will be such as to favor concealment and fraud. Ninety-nine out of a hundred must go away astounded by the exhibitions, as they do from those of Anderson or the Japanese performers. Must one, therefore, be charged with obstinacy, if he can neither believe that these performances are by spirits, nor understand how they are produced? We are frequently told of the performances in the presence of Prof. Crookes. No doubt they were ingenious. Those attested to solemnly by the truthful and noble, but unfortunate, Robert Dale Owen would be regarded as quite as satisfactory, but for the discovery which led to the exposure of the medium who practised the deception. Crookes' name carries weight as a scientist; but we may be permitted to believe he is fallible, and that, if the facts were known, it would appear that he was as much deceived as Mr. Owen. "In theology," some one has said, "we balance authorities; in science, we weigh facts."

Making an allowance for deception and fraud, I do not question that there are unexplained phenomena under the name of Spiritualism. There are some which I have witnessed that I have never seen satisfactorily explained. Some of the explanations are as difficult to accept as the theory of spiritual agency. But although I have attended circles, and witnessed the usual doings which are ascribed to spirits, in many States of this Union, I have never seen any satisfactory proofs that invisible intelligent beings, once inhabitants of this earth, now exist, and have the power of manifesting themselves to us.

One of the bad features of Spiritualism is that it encourages and develops marvellousness. People come to delight in ghost stories; and the more strange and extraordinary, the more important and interesting they are. The tendency of ghostly literature is to destroy the desire for substantial intellectual food. The doings of spirits become, to the mind, more important than the concerns of earth. That the tendency of some of the teachings and performances of Spiritualism is to develop insanity, when there is a predisposition thereto, does not, I think, admit of doubt. A spiritual circle, with real or imaginary invisible beings prowling about in the dark, communicating in whispers, or producing strange sounds, is not just the place for an individual whose mind is in an unhealthy condition. I do not urge this against the truth of Spiritualism, but I mention it as one of its tendencies, which ought not to be ignored by Spiritualists themselves. Many cases of insanity have been attributed to Spiritualism, when the persons had a tendency to insanity from their birth. It would be truer to say that there are some things in Spiritualism for which persons with predispositions to insanity have an affinity, and to which they are attracted.

Spiritualism is frequently charged with having produced a vast amount of domestic discord, and encouraged licentious views and practices. I have no doubt that thousands have been led to separate from their partners for the reason that pretended spirits have advised them to look elsewhere for their "affinities." Thousands who have been brought up to believe in the authority of a book, on becoming Spiritualists, have but transferred their reverence and their allegiance to spirit guides, whose word and advice with them is the highest authority. Taking advantage of this weakness, mediums, some of them honestly, and others dishonestly, have been able to exert an influence that cannot be fully appreciated. While I do not see anything in the philosophy of Spiritualism that interferes with the domestic relation, it must be admitted that the teachings of a large class of pretended spirits, and the importance and authority attached to their views and counsels by multitudes of people, have had no good effect on our social condition.

I only say, I am sure, what candid Spiritualists know and deplore, when I say that Spiritualism is accompanied by fraud and humbuggery of the worst kind, and to a lamentable extent. Thousands live on the sick and the credulous under various names, with no claims to confidence whatever. By flaming advertisements many are induced to send their dollars to heartless persons who are too lazy to work, and too shrewd to rob in the usual way. Fortune-telling is carried on by persons who in some places are prominently identified with Spiritualism. Their cards crowd the columns of the spiritual journals, whose editorial silence would seem to indicate either that they acknowledge their claims, or they do not think it policy to question them. And so thousands are systematically swindled. Dark circles are held nightly in our cities by persons recognized as cheats and humbugs by the better class of Spiritualists; and these same persons make themselves prominent at the Spiritualist meetings, where they distribute their cards, and advertise their nefarious business. Nobody utters a public protest, although the honest Spiritualists in private confess and lament the fact. If a fraud is exposed, there are almost everywhere accomplices or unscrupulous friends to come out in defence of the medium, who gets advertised thereby, and in the end comes to be regarded as a victim of malice and bigotry. For these, and other reasons which could be stated, and which are not less creditable to Spiritualists, there are large numbers who accept the philosophy, standing aloof from it, who will not attend Spiritualist meetings, nor have anything to do with the public demonstration. Some of my statements may be thought severe, but their severity is in their truth. I am not prejudiced against Spiritualism, nor have I any disposition to speak harshly of its adherents. In as far as Spiritualists oppose the superstitions and follies of the Church, they have my cordial sympathy; and their peculiar views in regard to the existence and communicative powers of supra-mundane beings have ever received from me respectful consideration, although I am unable to accept them. But when dishonesty and fraud appear under the name of Spiritualism, I should be untrue to myself, if I failed to denounce such impositions as freely as if practised by those connected with the Church. Spiritualism has suffered less from its open enemies than by the knavery of some and the credulity of others within its ranks, and by the machinery which it furnishes unscrupulous men and women for swindling the ignorant and the superstitious.

Much can be said in favor of modern Spiritualism. No doubt, like other systems, it is a source of comfort to multitudes that no longer rely on the teachings of the churches in which they were brought up. I know many who are happy in the belief that their loved ones are around them, and ready to welcome them beyond the portals of death. Without doubt, Spiritualism has assisted very largely to destroy faith in the authoritative character of the Bible. Many have been emancipated from the thralldom of the Orthodox superstition who could have escaped in no other way. They found in Spiritualism a field for the exercise of that marvellousness which before was fed by the fables of the Bible; and while the pleasant belief in immortal life was increased, it was divested of the horrors of the old faith. Spiritualism has gone among a class that materialism could not reach, and done a work that materialism could not do, except by a long period of education and experience. It could be shown that modern Spiritualism, by destroying old standards, and familiarizing the people with the discussion of sacred subjects, has encouraged freedom of thought and liberality of sentiment.

I can only add in conclusion that, while I am no Spiritualist, I think that Spiritualism in the present transitional stage of thought is doing a work that is much needed,—the value of which, however, would be increased, if through its press and its influential advocates it could be brought to oppose with "righteous indignation" the frauds and corruptions which now have protection under its wing. There is so much in the theory and history of modern Spiritualism that is in marked contrast to the popular theology; its teachings in many respects are so far in advance of those of the churches; its literature so much more liberal and in keeping with the spirit of the century; its press and its platform so comparatively free, and the intelligent and informed among its adherents so much more courteous and generous in the treatment of opponents,—that it has required from me something of a sacrifice of personal feeling to offer the criticisms which I have uttered, and which I believe justice and impartiality demand.

"THE CATHOLIC CONSPIRACY."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—Mr. S. P. Putnam's letter and your own comments upon it, both under the above rubric, in THE INDEX for the 26th August, are among the numerous proofs that a subject which, as an American citizen, it is my duty to have much at heart is beginning to obtain the attention which it deserves. All this will lead to the thorough examination of the question; and a free people cannot be expected to move, even in the right direction, with regard to any question, before there is a public understanding of it. Hitherto, however, I see nothing more, with regard to this important and threatening question, than splashing the water around it in an aimless way; and neither your article nor that of Mr. Putnam seems to me an exception, though both are able and earnest.

Of course no American, not even such a novice American as I, who am of last year's make, can for a moment imagine that the American people will ever violently interfere with Romanism on the ground that, as Mr. Putnam suggests, "its very organization contravenes the law." Mr. Putnam himself is too good an American to do any such thing, were this an opportunity for deeds instead of words. How can a religious organization contravene the law when, by our Constitution, it is on the law itself that the burden is cast of abstaining from contravening religious conscience? On this point I agree with you. But you and Mr. Putnam appear to me to be engaged in a rather ludicrous controversy as to whether the canon law of the Romish Church shall or shall not be made a part of the public law of the United States. The first thing that strikes a foreigner who knows anything about the canon law, when he comes to England or to this country, is that, through the patchwork legislation which has made Romanism, and all forms of Protestant dissent, pass from a state of oppression to their present condition, the canon law, not only of the Church of Rome, but of every Protestant sect, is part and parcel of the law of the British Empire and of the United States. Whenever a case between a minister and his congregation or his synod is brought before a civil court, the court calmly ascertains what the canon law of that Church prescribes on that particular point, and orders the sheriff to execute it. A short time ago such a case occurred, in which the court, in due obedience to the canon law, enforced the authority of the bishop; and I even think I remember that this did not escape the notice of THE INDEX.

This is a canon-law country, sir; and in presence of this sad truth it is a melancholy satisfaction for me to think that the editor of THE INDEX does not, at any rate, want more canon law than we already have, but is perfectly satisfied with the present amount. For God's sake, let us not have more canon law in our legal system than we already have: let us rather have less if possible; for could my colleague, Saint Paul, witness an ecclesiastical trial in one of our civil courts, I hear him ejaculate, "Ye men of America, I perceive that in all things ye are too canonical." I would even have in our civil courts no canon law at all. When a priest and his bishop, or a predicant and his synod, come before a civil tribunal to have some canonical quibble decided, I should like them to get the answer which the common sense of eighteen hundred years ago inspired to a Roman judge; an answer of which my colleague's disciple, Saint Luke, evidently took pleasure in preserving for us the keen edge:—

"If it were a matter of wrong or wicked lewdness, oh ye Jews, reason would that I should bear with you; but if it be a question of words and names and of your law, look ye to it; for I will be no judge of such matters."

If it is to the canon law of their Church, whether through civil courts or not, that four millions of American Catholics and four thousand and five hundred priests are looking for protection against the tyranny of sixty bishops, they had better take my advice, and look in another quarter. On the other hand, the tyranny imposed upon them by the canon law and the sixty bishops would be, take my word for it, a very mild one, and one very little dangerous to our institutions, were not that tyranny identical with the arbitrary disposal of all the property of the American Catholic Church by the said sixty bishops. As Mr. Putnam has very clearly shown, this property is immense, comprising, as it does, the places of worship, the cemeteries, the convents, the colleges, the hospitals, and the investments in real estate or notes of credit on which the salaries of thousands of clergymen depend. How has that property been accumulated? By being coaxed out and leached out of the people in the various ways which, to those familiar with clerical methods, whether in Romanism or in Protestantism, are no matter of mystery. It is the whole of their equitable claim to that property, or of their equitable share in it, that the Roman Catholic American people at large, and every priest and layman in particular, have to lose, unless they submit in all things, reasonable or unreasonable, to the wishes of sixty or seventy men who have themselves no will of their own, but are governed by a foreign journalist, of whose common sense we may judge by the astonishing editorial articles in his periodical, The Bull.

But why, I ask, is all that property in the hands of those seventy men? Is it because Roman Catholics are fools, or because we are? I say it is because we are. Each Roman bishop, in the eye of the civil law, owns the whole ecclesiastical property of his diocese in his own name; not in any official capacity, but as a simple citizen. Should a bishop die without leaving a will, all this immense property would pass to his natural heirs, and the Church would be frustrated. But he invariably makes a will through which the property is made to pass to his successor. Let us not pass further without paying a tribute of respect to what must be the high moral character of an episcopate in whose hands, under such an arrangement, the church property can be perfectly safe. Nor let us refuse to admit that, by thus standing before the civil law as individuals, not as corporations, Roman Catholics in England and America give a fine example to Anglican and other dissenting churches, all of which would at once collapse into atoms, did the State for a single day refuse to recognize and enforce their respective corporate existence under mediæval laws. The Roman Catholic Church in England and America is the only Church which is not a State Church by law established; the only Church that stands before the State as every church ought to stand before it in the nineteenth century. It asks of the State no favors, no recognition. It even refuses that recognition. Its existence as a corporation is a private affair among its members, an affair which it demands that the State should entirely ignore. When it sends its members before the courts, it sends them there as individuals to demand their rights as British subjects or as American citizens. In all this there is very much for liberals to admire, rather than blindly join in the chorus of Protestant clamor. And when we see that that ecclesiastical organization is the strongest, which alone, to all appearances, receives no special addition of power from the favors of the secular arm, our admiration would be complete did we not accidentally discover that most of that apparent spiritual strength is, in reality, the power of money through a flaw in our laws.

Our laws on testamentary wills are, in fact, only suitable to countries where such a Church as the Roman Catholic either does not exist, or is established, and as such duly kept in bridle by the State, or is persecuted; one of the three having always been the case while the Anglo-Saxon laws were growing to their present shape. They are totally unsuitable to a state of things in which the Roman Catholic Church exists, and is neither established nor persecuted, but simply free, as it ought to be. In these new conditions, the law which allows a man to devise at his death the whole of his property to whom he pleases, suddenly assumes a working most dangerous to the State. Property rapidly accumulates in the hands of a religious oligarchy, until that oligarchy becomes, through that property, a political power capable of holding the State itself in minority. Against that working, which legislators of times past foresaw too well, they guarded by the illegitimate expedients of establishment or persecution; whereas the proper step would have then been, and would now be, the limitation of the testamentary power. Instead of the law which allows every man to leave his property to whom he pleases, defrauding his natural heirs, let us, by a contrivance similar to that of the French code, secure to the natural heirs the largest part of the property, allowing the testator to dispose of only a fair and limited share. This will at once put a stop to the accumulation of property in the hands of the few bishops. Zealous Catholics will not be so foolish as to make to those bishops large gifts of lands and capital, well knowing that, at the death of the bishop, the greater part of that property will pass, not to the bishop's successor, but to his natural heirs. Instead, therefore, of making, once for all, gifts of real estate and other capital to raise a perpetual income to be used irrespective of the will of the people, Roman Catholics will make their yearly contributions toward the support of their worship and clergy more liberal than hitherto. Financially that will amount to the same. Morally that will be the same also; for whoever holds the strings of the purse, whether it be the bishops or the people, the priests will have to earn the pennies by subservience to those by whom they are paid; and of subservience to the bishops or subservience to the multitude the degradation is equal. But politically there will be an immense difference. Let the clergy, whether among Roman Catholics or other sects, have to live year by year on the free good-will of the people, and free institutions at least are well secured against clerical encroachments.

Under the law which I propose, the bishops will have no alternative but to accept the situation which I have described, or to take refuge against it in a position parallel to that of every Protestant Church of this country, the position of an Incorporate, that is Established, Church. But the three last articles of my platform, which you published, provide the means of dislodging them from this new position.

The law which I now propose is entirely in accordance with the spirit of our institutions, as it interferes with the religious liberty of no one, but treats the testamentary will of a bishop as that of any other citizen. The right for a citizen to disinherit, completely at least, his natural heirs is an exorbitant right. It is no natural right; for the natural rights of jurisdiction of any man on any things here below are limited to the term of his natural life; and no man has a natural right to govern this world, or part of it, after his death. It is, therefore, only a positive right. But rights created by the positive law are conferred upon individuals with a view to the public good. The right for a man to leave his property to his natural heirs is precious not only to him, but to the nation, as it leads to the perpetuity and harmony of one of the families of which the nation consists. The right conferred upon a man to leave his property to others than his natural heirs is the right to foment hatred and discord after his death, when he will be no more present to bear the blame and shame of his misdeed. His act is like the act of a man who sets fire to a house where he has been hospitably entertained, and runs away before the inmates awake. If the case of the Romish bishops constitutes a special variety to which what I have just said does not apply, it is only to be fraught with consequences very much more terrible; terrible to the nation, terrible to every Roman Catholic. While quietly enjoying an evening, surrounded by his wife and his children, after his daily toil, he must always see this sword of Damocles suspended over his head: the fear that when his mind will be less clear than now, when the nightly ghosts of superstition will haunt his dying bed, the priest will prevail upon him to make him disinherit all those beloved ones, and leave his property to the Church. There it will go; not to be devoured in a few years by a board of vultures, as if it had been bequeathed to some Protestant institution; no! but to be honestly and profitably administered, and thereby remain forever the subsidy of a standing conspiracy against all that our country holds precious.

Against such evils Napoleon the Great, and the juriconsults of every Roman Catholic nation, have deemed it their first patriotic duty to guard by the firmest legislation. But as for us, we slumber, or we have no patriotism. We sacrifice the highest interests to the most paltry considerations, sometimes to mere amour-propre. Speak to the best father among us of surrendering the right to disinherit his children—a right which he will never use and which others will abuse,—and the vivacity of his answer shows that you have attacked a privilege which he holds most dear. There is not a one-horse Protestant sect among us that would not, rather than surrender the principle on which it holds a few die-of-hunger endowments—endowments which it cannot even keep, for they will be stolen,—see those United States, through the application of that same principle on a very different scale, become a prey to Jesuitism, until every star in our flag is in turn extinguished in darkness. "THE CATHOLIC CONSPIRACY" is not an appropriate title under which to treat this subject. It is the Protestant conspiracy as well, or rather it is everybody's conspiracy,—the conspiracy of a whole nation for its own destruction.

I am, dear sir, truly yours,
JULIUS FERRETTE.

CAMBRIDGE, 28th August, 1875.

GLADSTONE AND THE POPE.

A LECTURE BY REV. REUEN THOMAS.

Rev. Reuen Thomas, the pastor of the Harvard Church, Brookline, delivered a lecture last evening in the chapel of the church on "Gladstone and the Pope." There was a large audience present to hear the views which Mr. Thomas, as an Englishman, has had better opportunities of forming on that subject than fall to the lot of many Americans. The delivery of the lecture was listened to with great interest, and received with much favor. . . .

The reason why all should be interested in the question was not because it was a religious one. It is not that chiefly—only indirectly. Those who have considered it an attack upon the Roman religion have quite misunderstood and altogether misrepresented it. The question raised by Mr. Gladstone is purely a political one; namely, "Can a Romanist, accepting the Vatican decrees of 1870, be a good citizen, trusty and faithful to the State?" Mr. Gladstone comes to the conclusion that no religious ends alone were or could have been contemplated in the enactment of those decrees; because all religious ends, that is, all ends in connection with the free profession of their religion—all dominion of the Pope over the faith and creed of Romanists—were secured already. Then we must look beyond the religious realm into the political. There we found ample reasons for the claim of universal and entire obedience from all Romanists everywhere. Individual servitude, however abject, will not satisfy the party now dominant in the Roman Church; the State must also be a slave. And it was for the purpose of using the votes, the influence, the money, of Romanists for the enslavement of the States in which they dwell, that these decrees were passed. "A Romanist first, an Englishman afterward," are the notorious words of a leading Romanist in that country; words which mean, as Mr. Gladstone says, that in case of any conflict of authority between the government and the Pope the "convert" is to follow the Pope.

According to the power with which the Pope of Rome is invested by the Vatican decrees, he is really and truly the Sovereign Ruler, politically, of every Romanist in the wide world. According to them, it is at the peril of his salvation that any Romanist acts on his individual responsibility; and he is in a position of the very gravest difficulty as to rendering allegiance to any other sovereign ruler than the Pope. Anything more sweeping in its compass, more dangerous in its action, more complete in the thoroughness of its subjection of the mind and life of men, has never been attempted in the world's history. As Mr. Gladstone says: "The claim made upon the Romanist by the authority which he solemnly acknowledges requires him to surrender his mental and moral freedom, and to place his loyalty and civil duty at the mercy of another. The Romanist can be a citizen of no country over which the Pope is not absolute and undisputed sovereign." The question then is a purely political one, and Mr. Gladstone, as one of the most prominent of Englishmen, speaks on it with a weight attaching to his words which would belong to those of no one else.

The Vatican decrees threaten personal liberty, and the laws of this country secure personal liberty to every one of its citizens. What statesmen now have to look to is that any religion, whatever name it may bear, which deprives a man of his personal freedom, must be confronted by the State laws, and taught better manners. Every despot of every kind, and, above all, foreign despots, must be made to recognize the doctrine that every citizen of this country is a free man.

But many Protestants ask, What can the Pope do to us,—having no army, and no power to do as Popes once did, excommunicate a nation by one solemn bar? There are two ways of breaking into a house. One is to burst the doors in as burglars do, and the other is to do it as the fogs do—get through the key-hole, and under the door, and down the chimney. That is how Romanism works now-a-days. Nothing is more noiseless or sliken-footed than the way in which that portion of the Roman Church now in power works. There is a great difference between a warrior and an assassin,—as much difference as there is between a religion which fights its battles openly and one which stabs in the dark. The former may be true; the latter must be false.

Those who believe the priests at Rome can do no harm because they have no soldiers might well be asked two questions: Who was it defeated Mr. Gladstone's Education Bill in England? Who was it made the Franco-German war possible? What power is it now which seeks to prevent the unification of Germany, and sow discord among that great people? Mr. Gladstone himself said that the Romanist Bishops in Ireland (instructed, of course, from their counselors at Rome) thought fit to procure the rejection of the Education Bill by the direct influence which they exercised over a certain number of Irish members of Parliament.

The war between France and Germany was a priests' war. The Jesuits poured all sorts of reasons for it into the ear of the French Empress, who was under their thumbs, and she persuaded her fool of a husband to run his head full tilt against that brazen wall, united Germany. To the third question there is but one answer: Popery, in Germany and out of Germany, is trying with all its might to prevent Germany becoming a nation. Bismarck aims at German unity as the one work of his life, and he will fight for it to the last. The Jesuits in Germany receive pay from the State, and are the servants of the State. Bismarck has a right to demand obedience from them as much as from any other salaried officers in Germany.

The Vatican decrees make Romanists the subjects of two earthly sovereigns. Dr. Döllinger, the greatest living theologian the Roman Church has produced, says: "That by the decrees it is the duty of every Roman layman to obey the intimation that any question has been decreed for him by the Pope. When the Pope orders a man to vote in a specified manner, though he were a member of Congress, he must obey." The decrees of the Pope are meant to sow division among Protestant nations, and Mr. Gladstone did the duty of a strong-voiced sentinel in announcing, in tones which were never spoken weakly or falsely, the imminence of the danger.—Boston Journal, Sept. 8.

THE PANTHEON AT ROME.

Having seen the most magnificent of modern Christian temples, I next bent my way to the most splendid of the pagan temples of old Rome, the Pantheon; that model of ancient architectural beauty, which even now, with its perfect interior, its simple grandeur and proportions, notwithstanding the vandal additions of various Popes who seemed to vie with each other in plundering pagan temples, or rendering the beautiful structures, which they could not rival or approach, hideous by their additions or alterations,—even with the mangling that the Pantheon has received, it rises in my recollection as a thing of beauty that is a joy forever.

The impression of its faultless beauty came over me as I stood in the centre of the perfect circle of this great temple to all the gods, a rotunda one hundred and forty-two feet in diameter, and one hundred and forty-three feet high. There are no windows, but a perfectly circular aperture in the top, of twenty-eight feet in diameter, admits a light that lights the whole, and through which the blue Italian sky and fleecy clouds are seen. Around on all sides are now Christian altars, and the great niches are vacant that once held marble figures of heathen deities; the magnificent bronze plates that sheathed the most perfect dome in the world are stripped away; nay, even some of the stone and marble work is whitewashed or otherwise disfigured,—and yet you cannot stand upon the floor of this magnificent old temple to the gods, built twenty-seven years before Christ, without involuntary expressions of admiration at its perfect beauty of proportion.

What must it have been in its prime, with its magnificent front, not as now sunken, as modern Rome or as successive modern Romes have heaped their soil up over the old city, till now you step down into the Pantheon! Eighteen centuries ago, its magnificent portico, with its grand front of over one hundred feet, supported by sixteen Corinthian pillars thirty-six feet high (which still remain), was above the level of the street, and was approached by a flight of six marble steps and the vestibule, a beautiful vista of white marble pilasters; the pediment above was ornamented with glorious bass-reliefs (you may see the holes in which the bolts holding them were placed, to this day), and the roof was sheathed with bronze which Pope Urban VIII. not only was vandal enough to strip off and melt down for bronze columns and cannon, but perpetuated the act, that there should be no mistake as to who the despoiler was, by recording it in a Latin inscription over one of the doorways. Then he increased the outrage by adding two ugly bell-towers to the dome ("asses' ears" they are very justly called); and another Pope, Benedict XIV., who was Pope from 1740 to 1758, tore away beautiful marbles from the upper part of it to adorn buildings he was erecting.

But despite all this, the grand and perfect beauty of the temple could not be destroyed; and we can imagine, standing here upon what was once the elegant pavement of porphyry and marble, that the pagan altar reared its height beneath the then perfect vault of bronze, the smoke of ascending sacrifice rose through the great opening direct to the nostrils of mythical Jove himself; and in these now empty niches, fifty feet above the pavement, stood, looking down upon priest and people, the colossal sculptured figures of Jupiter, warlike Mars, and majestic Minerva, Apollo with bent bow or with lyre in hand, and Vulcan pausing o'er his thunderbolts. The sides of the vast circle glittered with polished marbles and elegant carving; the attic or roof gleamed with sculptured silver and bronze, and was upheld by caryatides of Syracusan bronze; statues of Rome's emperors and senators peopled niches at the entrance or in the porticos, and Marcus Agrippa's temple to the gods was one of the glories of old Rome.

The ancient bronze doors remain, and the Corinthian pillars of red granite, with marble capitals, roughened and blackened with the breath of eighteen centuries, will continue to command attention, extract admiration, and remind the student of the architecture of classical times; but all around the interior in the different recesses he will find the modern altars of the Roman Catholic Church, with their florid and often tawdry ornaments, tinsel, and frippery, which ill accord with the ancient surroundings. The building is said to be a species of brick work, and was coated or veneered with marble; but the exterior coating was stripped off by the spoilers of modern times. So also was plundered the sculptured silver on the interior of the roof by successive vandals.

Rome built and raised her most costly and beautiful edifices from the spoil of plundered cities, and by the captives brought by emperors "home to Rome, whose ransoms did the general coffers fill"; and the law of compensation or of retribution was at last wrought upon herself, and by some of the very people from whom she had wrenched fathers, husbands, and brothers, treasures and spoils. Base barbarians, that proud Rome once despised, ran riot through her streets, plundered and despoiled her temples, and only consented to leave Rome's supplicating ambassadors their lives on condition of their surrendering everything else.—Curtis Guild's "Abroad Again," in the Commercial Bulletin.

"BRAIN AND INTELLECT."

In the current number of the Lancet there is an interesting paper by Dr. Lawson, pathologist, to the West Riding lunatic asylum, on the relation subsisting between the weight of the brain and the extent of the intellectual powers of human beings. It appears from the investigations of the writer and his colleagues that not only persons of great mental capacity, but also lunatics, occasionally possess brains which are considerably heavier than the average brains possessed by ordinary but sane people. The average weight of the brain, according to Dr. Lawson, is commonly accepted to be forty-nine ounces in men and forty-four ounces in women. If we remember rightly, it is placed about an ounce higher for either sex in Quain's Anatomy. But the point is unimportant as regards the conclusions at which Dr. Lawson has arrived. Some of the heaviest brains, the weight of which has been accurately ascertained, were those of Cuvier, 64 oz.; Abercrombie, 63 oz.; Goodsir, 57.5 oz.; Sir J. Simpson, 54 oz.; Daniel Webster, 53.5 oz.; and Dr. Chalmers, 53 oz. Against these six names of more or less distinction, Dr. Lawson gives the weight of the brains of six lunatics who died at the West Riding lunatic asylum. They were 58 oz. in two cases, 58.5 oz., 59.5 oz., 60.5 oz., and 61 oz. None of these equal in weight the brains of either Cuvier or Abercrombie. But Dr. Lawson observes that perhaps, if all the elements of the case were to be considered, the heaviest adult brain on record might be found to be that of a senile dement, who died in the West Riding asylum at the age of seventy. His brain was found to weigh 61 oz. Following the generally-accepted principle that the brain loses in weight to the extent of an ounce in each decennial period, this man's brain, after allowance has been made for physiological diminution, may be presumed to have weighed, when he was at the age of forty, no fewer than 64 oz. But in this case pathological supplemented physiological changes, and the more rapid atrophy which accompanies senile dementia justifies the conclusion that at the time of his maturity this man's brain may have outweighed that of Cuvier. Moreover, out of 705 patients who have died in the West Riding lunatic asylum, the weight of brain was found to be in all cases little if anything below the average as stated by Dr. Lawson. Among rather more than 300 insane women at the same establishment, brains were found weighing from 50 to 56 ounces, which, in proportion, were equal to male brains of 55, 53, 60, and 61 ounces. Relatively speaking, says Dr. Lawson, these insane women had more brains than Chalmers, Webster, Simpson, Goodsir, and many others adduced as illustrations of the statement that great size of brain usually accompanies great intellectual capacity. Similarly with regard to criminal lunatics; though the average weight of brain among a single dozen of these, examined by Dr. Orange, of Broadmoor, is an ounce and a half under the general male average, there are in that limited number two brains which exceed that of Chalmers in weight, and one which outweighs those of Chalmers, Daniel Webster, and Sir J. Simpson, and is within half an ounce of being equal to that of Goodsir. Small-headed people may take comfort from these statistics. But assuming equal quality, superior quantity of brain would, as it is natural to assume on grounds of physiological analogy, unmistakably tell in the result.—Pall Mall Gazette.

LINCOLN'S GETTYSBURG ADDRESS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NATION:

Sir,—In the Nation of August 20 is an inquiry for the manuscript of President Lincoln's Address at Gettysburg.

Mr. Lincoln arrived in Gettysburg in the afternoon of the 18th of November, 1863, and was a guest of one of our citizens—Judge Wills. He was called out in the evening to reply to a serenade, and at a late hour went to his room. Sending for his host, he inquired the order of the exercises of the next day, and began to put in writing what he called some "stray thoughts" to utter on the morrow. When delivered, they were read from an official letter-sheet. It is uncertain whether this manuscript has been preserved.

But when Mr. Lincoln was asked, in April, 1864, to send to the Baltimore (Md.) Fair for the relief of soldiers and sailors an autograph manuscript, he sent a copy of his Gettysburg Address; which, lithographed, is to be found on pages 3, 4, and 5 of Autograph Leaves of our Country's Authors (Baltimore: Cushing & Bailey, 1864). Every word is written with distinctness and care; and there is no room for mistaking even a letter or a punctuation point. This is, undoubtedly, the final form he gave the Address, and is that by which he intended it should be judged. I inclose an exact copy.

Very respectfully,

EDWARD MCPHERSON.

GETTYSBURG, Pa., Aug. 31, 1875.

"ADDRESS DELIVERED AT THE DEDICATION OF THE CEMETERY AT GETTYSBURG.

"Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in Liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

"Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle-field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field, as a final resting-place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

"But, in a larger sense, we cannot dedicate—we cannot consecrate—we cannot hallow—this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it, far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom—and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

"ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

"NOVEMBER 19, 1863."

SUPPOSED ATTEMPT TO STEAL THE JEWELS AT WINDSOR CASTLE.

The London Daily News of August 28 has the following: "The south-eastern division of the Bucks police, under Mr. Superintendent Dunham and Inspector Pearman, of Eton College, are at present investigating a very extraordinary matter. About the 9th of this month, in order to permit some building operations upon the premises of Mr. Goodman, the boat-builder, near Windsor bridge, the waters of the Thames were drawn off, lowering the river by several feet. While the stream was thus lower than usual, a man who was walking near a back-cut adjacent to Cuckoo Weir, which is about half a mile from Windsor bridge, and on the Bucks side of the river, observed a piece of string fastened to the lower branch of a bush overhanging the water course. His curiosity was excited, and seeing something attached to the string he pulled it up, and found that it was a gentleman's japanned dressing-case. Turning the small key he opened the case, and found it contained a large number of keys and other things. He at once placed the case in the hands of the police, and Mr. Superintendent Dunham, upon examining its contents, found that in all there were twenty-five keys, the larger ones having been fastened in a bunch at the top of the case. Upon one side of the flat smooth surface of the handle of two of the medium-sized keys are the words 'Equerries' stables, 100 steps,' and on the other side the word 'Porter.' The twenty-five keys vary in size from such as would open gates, posterns, and room doors, to small ones fitting the jewel-cases in the royal apartments of the castle. Besides this extraordinary collection of keys there were in the case pieces of wax bearing impressions of the key wards, two bottles of gold liquid for smearing the keys in order to ascertain the shape of the locks, a box of vestas, and two large canvas money-bags, such as are used by bankers. One apparently from the coin marks had contained gold, and the other silver. It is the belief of the police authorities that the dressing-case and its contents were intended to aid some person or persons in effecting an entrance from the 'Hundred Steps' to the private apartments of the palace occupied by Her Majesty and the royal family, and to sweep off the priceless jewelry. Whoever designed this daring scheme has been frustrated in a most singular way. Those who placed the case and keys in the stream, till some dark night a favorable opportunity might arise for the grand coup, fastened the string to a branch of the bush, which, when the waters of the Thames are at their ordinary summer level, was about a foot below the surface of the little stream, and thus well concealed. They had not calculated upon the sudden drawing off of the water—an unusual circumstance—which revealed the hiding-place of the duplicate keys. Yesterday, Mr. Superintendent Dunham, accompanied by Mr. Inspector Pearman, proceeded to the office of Mr. W. Seabrook, in the lord chamberlain's department at Windsor Castle, and had an interview with the palace authorities."

THERE is a queer old German proverb which says, "When needs must, the devil will eat flies." Belzebub, or Baalzebub signifies "Jupiter-fly."

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

NONQUIT.

BY MRS. LOUISA S. HOPKINS.

Summer has flashed her golden shuttle by
My dreaming eye;
Its shining web of days so soft and fair,
Without a care,
Is folding down into the silent past,
Too bright to last.

Night unto night has told its peace serene,
While Luna, queen,
Paved her white shimmering path above the deep,
That stirred in sleep
To lisp its dreamy bliss around the shore
Forevermore.

Day unto day ushered its beauty in
With happy din;
Thrush and song-sparrow trilling through the hours,
While myriad flowers
Bespangled dewy grass and fragrant wood;
And all was good.

The odorous breeze wafted its music round,
A varied sound;
Called from the wide campaign the whistling quail;
The tern's shrill wail
Answered afar; and boomed from rock to rock
The billow's shock,

Here have I sat without my cottage door,
And watched the shore,
Followed its curving line to where the town
Lies sloping down,
Its clustering gems in simple beauty set,
Fair coronet!

And still along its amber thread of strand
Stretches the land,
Till the grim fortress at the harbor's mouth
Looks threatening south,
But hears no sound save dash of spray that wet
Its parapet.

Then on and on the rippling waters spread;
By cliff and head,
By long, low neck, and sunny, sanded isles,
The blue bay smiles,
Till, like a soul within the conscious seas,
Sits Penckese.

And to and fro the opal sails have sped,
Or glimmered red
The seven coast-lights about the land-locked bay;
While night and day,
The broad blue sky with sun or star has lit
Light-bathed Nonquit.

But now the slopes are shadowing with wings,
And southward swings
The clamoring host of swallows o'er the sea;
'Tis time for me
To seek my closer eaves, and, sighing, fold
This cloth of gold.

September, 1874.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 18.

Julius Kirschbaum, $1.35; D. P. Wilcox, 20 cents; Fanny Lawler, 25 cents; Carl Doerflinger, $1.30; Alfred Warren, $1.30; J. R. Hawley, $2.60; S. M. Greene, 20 cents; W. H. Spencer, 25 cents; D. H. Clark, $1; J. Wilson, $1; Mr. Tomlinson, $3.20; J. H. Buffum, $3.20; J. Fisher, $3.20; F. S. Platt, $3.20; S. Cooper, $6; Lewis G. Jones, $3.20; F. S. Allen, $3.20; G. H. Parkhurst, $1; R. T. Stow, $3.20; Edw. Wallis, $5; D. K. Hall, $3.20; J. F. Ruggles, $3.20; Chas. Hazeltine, $1; Jas. S. Lusby, 25 cents; Gust. Travenstein, $3.20; Thos. B. Blair, $1.50; Ensign Clifford, 50 cents; C. V. Culver, $8; O. Spaulding, $6.45; E. G. Patterson, 75 cents; George Wilson, $1.60; John Frank, $4.45; A. F. Bailey, $3.20; W. H. White, $1; J. Haskins, $3; G. E. Frothingham, $3; L. T. Wilcox, $3.20; W. V. Warrington, $3; F. Fradley, $3; J. M. Macomber, $2.25; E. M. Davis, $5; Sarah J. Derby, $3; George Chamberlain, $3.20; F. Andriessen, $3; George H. Barton, 20 cents; W. H. Sayward, $3.20; George Lewis, $10; H. S. Glover, 20 cents; M. D. Conway, $19.22; R. H. Ranney, $1.50.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 23, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E.
D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRAN-
CIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
(England), Editorial Contributors.

F. R. A. ANNUAL REPORT.

The Report, in pamphlet form, of the Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association for 1875 is now ready.

It contains an Essay by Wm. C. Gannett, on "Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and an Essay by F. E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. B. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

It can be obtained, in Boston, at A. Williams & Co.'s, and by mail by addressing "Office of Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass."

Price of single copy, 35 cents; package of four copies or more, 25 cents each.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

REFERRING to the Geghan law in Ohio, which "secures to convicts their choice of clergymen," the New York World has delivered itself of sentiments which are about as brutal, despotic, and unjust as can well be imagined: "The religious preferences of a man who has not religion enough to keep out of jail are about the last thing a sensible Legislature would consult. A man who has become a disgrace and burden, instead of an ornament and defence, to the community had best take what religion the community supplies him with, and be thankful. There is no religion by which he could not behave himself better than the one which he has previously preferred and practised, whatever form of religion or irreligion he has professed. His 'preferences' would lead him away from religion and also from penal servitude, and are in both cases to be profoundly disregarded." Now the principle of the Geghan bill is the only just principle, if the State may justly support the chaplaincy system at all. What business has the State to require Roman Catholic convicts to listen to Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, or Episcopalian preaching? Would not there be a sectarian howl from one end of the land to the other, if a Catholic chaplain were appointed to the State Prison? The cases are in principle precisely the same. Our own protest is against the whole chaplaincy system; we deny the right of the State to support any ministers of religion anywhere. But so long as chaplains are appointed at all, there ought to be as many chaplains as there are religious sects represented among the convicts, who have just as good a right to a conscience in religious matters as the prig who wrote the above insolent nonsense in the World. We cannot help seeing that the Catholics are right in demanding the services of a priest for convicts of their own faith, provided the State undertakes to furnish religious services at all in its prisons and reformatories. The whole system is false and pernicious, and ought to be abolished; but even a convict has rights which the State is bound to respect—none of them more sacred than the right to worship as his conscience dictates, or not to worship at all, if that suits his conscience better. While the chaplaincy system continues, we would vote for a Geghan bill in every State of the Union, as the only just measure under that system. To declare that a convict "had best take what religion the community supplies him with, and be thankful," is but to put the combined injustice, tyranny, and absurdity of that system in the truest, because the most odious, light.

THE "CANON LAW."

On another page of this issue Bishop Ferrette, to quote his own phrase, "splashes the water in an aimless way" respecting the canon law in this country, in an article criticising Mr. Putnam's "Catholic Conspiracy" and our reply to it,—a rather ludicrous controversy," as he describes it. But when the origin of his amusement is investigated, it may be discovered in certain mistakes of his own, contained in such astonishingly rash assertions as the following: "The first thing that strikes a foreigner who knows anything about the canon law, when he comes to England or to this country, is that, through the patchwork legislation which has made Romanism and all forms of Protestant dissent pass from a state of oppression to their present condition, the canon law, not only of the Church of Rome, but of every Protestant sect, is part and parcel of the law of the British Empire and of the United States. . . . This is a canon law country, sir."

Now this is singularly confused, being partly true and partly untrue. The "canon law" is something altogether distinct from the by-laws or regulations which ecclesiastical bodies voluntarily impose on themselves and by which they administer their internal affairs; these are not "law" at all in any public sense, nor so recognized. The "canon law" is only such portions of the law of the Roman Papacy as, modified or unmodified, have been as such actually adopted in any country as a part of the law of the land; and, in any such country, there will be the proper spiritual courts to enforce it. There is no "canon law" at all in the technical sense, except as the law of the Church of Rome, and such parts of it as have been authorized by the government in the countries where established churches derived from the Church of Rome, as in England, are supported. Whatever ecclesiastical rules or regulations may be voluntarily adopted by any Protestant sect, they concern only such sect; they are not "law," nor can they be enforced as "law" by the courts. It is perfectly preposterous to call this a "canon law country," when there is no "canon law" as such from Maine to California. But let us determine exactly what canon law is, and how far it exists in Great Britain. Cooley's edition of Blackstone's Commentaries on the Laws of England (volume 1, pages 80-84) will give us some trustworthy information on this subject:—

"The canon law is a body of Roman ecclesiastical law, relative to such matters as that Church either has, or pretends to have, the proper jurisdiction over. This is compiled from the opinions of the ancient Latin Fathers, the decrees of general councils, and the decretal epistles and bulls of the Holy See; all which lay in the same disorder and confusion as the Roman civil law, till about the year 1151 one Gratian, an Italian monk, animated by the discovery of Justinian's Pandects, reduced the ecclesiastical constitutions also into some method, in three books, which he entitled Concordia Discordantium Canonum, but which are generally known by the name of Decretum Gratiani. These reached as low as the time of Pope Alexander III. The subsequent papal decrees, to the pontificate of Gregory IX., were published in much the same method, under the auspices of that Pope, about the year 1230, in five books, entitled Decretalia Gregorii Noni. A sixth book was added by Boniface VIII., about the year 1298, which is called Sextus Decretalium. The Clementine constitutions, or decrees of Clement V., were in like manner authenticated in 1317 by his successor John XXII., who also published twenty constitutions of his own, called the Extravagantes Joannis, all which in some manner answer to the novels of the civil law. To these have been added some decrees of the later Popes, in five books, called Extravagantes Communes; and all these together, Gratian's decrees, Gregory's decretals, the sixth decretal, the Clementine constitutions, and the extravagants of John and his successors, form the corpus juris canonici, or body of the Roman canon law.

"Besides these pontifical collections, which during the times of popery were received as authentic in this island, as well as in other parts of Christendom, there is also a kind of national canon law, composed of legatine and provincial constitutions, and adapted only to the exigencies of this Church and kingdom. The legatine constitutions were ecclesiastical laws, enacted in national synods held under the cardinals Otho and Othobon, legates from Pope Gregory IX. and Pope Clement IV., in the reign of King Henry III., about the years 1220 and 1268. The provincial constitutions are principally the decrees of provincial synods, held under divers Archbishops of Canterbury, from Stephen Langton, in the reign of Henry III., to Henry Chichele, in the reign of Henry V.; and adopted also by the province of York in the reign of Henry VI. At the dawn of the reformation, in the reign of King Henry VIII., it was enacted in Parliament that a review should be had of the canon law; and, till such review should be made, all canons, constitutions, ordinances, and synodals provincial, being then already made, and not repugnant to the law of the land or the king's prerogative, should still be used and executed. And as no such review has yet been perfected, upon this statute now depends the authority of the canon law in England.

"As for the canons enacted by the clergy under James I., in 1603, and never confirmed in Parliament, it has been solemnly adjudged upon the principles of law and the constitution that, where they are not merely declaratory of the ancient canon law, but are introductory of new regulations, they do not bind the laity, whatever regard the clergy may think proper to pay them.

"There are four species of courts in which the civil and canon laws are permitted, under different restrictions, to be used; 1. The courts of the archbishops and bishops, and their derivative officers, usually called in our law courts Christian Curie Christianitatis, or the ecclesiastical courts. 2. The military courts. 3. The courts of admiralty. 4. The courts of the two universities. . . .

"1. And, first, the courts of common law have the superintendency over these courts: to keep them within their jurisdictions, to determine wherein they exceed them, to restrain and prohibit such excess, and, in case of contumacy, to punish the officer who executes, and in some cases the judge who enforces, the sentence so declared to be illegal.

"2. The common law has reserved to itself the exposition of all such acts of Parliament as concern either the extent of these courts, or the matters depending before them. And therefore, if these courts either refuse to allow these acts of Parliament, or will expound them in any other sense than what the common law puts upon them, the king's courts at Westminster will grant prohibitions to restrain and control them.

"3. An appeal lies from all these courts to the king, in the last resort; which proves that the jurisdiction exercised in them is derived from the crown of England, and not from any foreign potentate, or intrinsic authority of their own. And, from these three strong marks and ensigns of superiority, it appears beyond a doubt that the civil and canon laws, though admitted in some cases by custom in some courts, are only subordinate, and leges sub graviori lege; and that, thus admitted, restrained, altered, new-modelled, and amended, they are by no means with us a distinct independent species of laws, but are inferior branches of the customary or unwritten laws of England, properly called the king's ecclesiastical, the king's military, the king's maritime, or the king's academical, laws."

From this it appears that Bishop Ferrette is altogether mistaken, when he says that "the canon law, not only of the Church of Rome, but of every Protestant sect, is part and parcel of the law of Great Britain." In the first place, no one of the dissenting sects has any "canon law" at all, in the only sense concerned; their private ecclesiastical regulations are not "law" at all, nor recognized as such in any court of the kingdom. In the next place, only so much of the "canon law of the Church of Rome" (which is the only "canon law" recognized in England) as has been directly sanctioned by Parliament and the common law courts for the proper administration of their national Established Church, constitutes the canon law of England; and these portions of the Roman canon law have not only been actually amended and revised by England, but are subject to further amendment, revision, or even abolition, whenever Parliament shall so decree. So much for Great Britain.

With reference to the United States, Bishop Ferrette is still more extraordinarily in error, when he declares that "the canon law, not only of the Church of Rome, but of every Protestant sect, is part and parcel of the law of the . . . United States." The Protestant Episcopal Church in this country to some extent adopts the canon law of England, as above defined; but, not being in any degree recognized as "law," either by Congress or the courts, it becomes the merely private ecclesiastical code of a sect, like that of every other sect, and possesses no authoritative or public character whatever. This is sufficiently apparent from the total absence in this country of ecclesiastical or spiritual courts, which would be indispensable to the administration of canon law. To quote explicit authority for these statements, however, we cite the following passages from Tyler's American Ecclesiastical Law, a standard work on the subject:—

"The English Ecclesiastical Law is the public and general code of rules and regulations of the Established Church. It covers the entire ecclesiastical polity of the Church of England, taking cognizance not only of ordinary matters of discipline, but of numerous crimes committed against the decrees and ordinances of ecclesiastical authority." [Page 49.]

"We have no ecclesiastical establishments in the United States, nor ecclesiastical courts, as in England, but all matters and cases cognizable by the English Spiritual Courts are here conveniently and properly disposed of in the Surrogates', Probate, and common law courts." [Page 53.]

In fact, there is no such thing as "American ecclesiastical law," except a mere collection of such general statutes and ordinary court decisions as happen to affect the interests of ecclesiastical bodies, regarded as private voluntary corporations; yet Bishop Ferrette apparently confounds this utterly secular "ecclesiastical law" with the "canon law"—a technical term of special application which means a very different thing.

"Whenever a case between a minister and his congregation or his synod," the Bishop continues, "is brought before a civil court, the court calmly ascertains what the canon law of that church prescribes on that particular point, and orders the sheriff to execute it. A short time ago such a case occurred, in which the court, in due obedience to the canon law, enforced the authority of the Bishop; and I even think I remember that this did not escape the notice of THE INDEX." In reply to this it is only necessary to say that no court in the United States can possibly render "due obedience" to a canon law which does not exist here; that, if a civil court inquires into the private regulations of any sect (which Bishop Ferrette here directly confounds with the canon law, as if that were a general term including all such private regulations), it is only for the purpose of enforcing the fulfilment of a contract, a bequest, or a trust, according to common law or equity; and that it recognizes no canon law whatever in doing so. The particular case alluded to is probably that which was recently decided in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, by which the Roman Catholic Bishop was adjudged to possess exclusive control over the church property because the title-deed was made out in his individual name; but in this decision the canon law was not at all involved. When the court, however, refused to interfere in the matter of entrance fees to the church building, or to meddle with the disciplinary treatment of his flock by the priest, it did so on the express ground that these were matters of internal administration over which it had no control—thereby disowning all obligations which the canon law might have imposed. In truth, the court practically said to the litigant Catholics what Bishop Ferrette himself quotes so approvingly: "If it were a matter of wrong or wicked lewdness, O ye [Catholics], reason would that I should bear with you: but if it be a question of words and names and of your [canon] law, look ye to it; for I will be no judge of such matters."

As to the question, therefore, which of the three parties to this "ludicrous controversy" is best entitled to bear away the entire glory of its ludicrousness, we will now leave it to our readers, or even to Bishop Ferrette himself, to decide.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—Is there any voice that can reach the "deaf adders" of our times, or wake from their childish dreams those who profess to be the Lord's watchmen?

Of all the mournful and disheartening facts of the age, none is more so than the pious trifling of the chief priests. They seem to me to be utterly impervious to questions of really vital importance to mankind—both here and hereafter,—and absolutely blind to the fact that while they are exerting themselves in elaborate idleness over the decoration of their upper stories, the very foundations of their building are being undermined. Every one who is awake, and is exercising a moderate vigilance over the movements of thought around us, sees that the real questions which are being agitated are of such solemn and tremendous import as "whether there be a God at all or not"; whether or not men live after death; whether or not men are responsible for their actions.

In the solution of such problems, all of us, one would think, were deeply interested; especially those who, as professional theologians, are supposed to be the authoritative expounders of all such mysteries.

To the clergy of all churches and sects one naturally turns for such light as they may have discovered through their special pursuit of these inquiries, and the calm attention they are supposed to be able to devote to them. But if we turn for a moment to see how they are engaged, and to listen to their latest utterances, what do we see and hear? Take, e.g., the Bonn Conference. With Dr. Döllinger at their head, a number of gossiping bishops and priests have met together to try to make a new corporation or an amalgamation of churches which have split off from the Papacy.

And in the pursuit of this perhaps harmless endeavor the champions of the various parties expose, with an amazing unconsciousness of their ridiculous position, the occupation of their minds by theological trifles which require a microscope of high power to enable us to see at all. The old question of the filioque has cropped up again, and these venerable and learned men are gravely discussing whether the Holy Ghost proceeded from the Son as well as from the Father, and twisting language to the verge of snapping it in the effort to express that the Holy Ghost does so proceed and does not at the same time.

All this while, however, the world at large is waiting to know—not the exact relation of the "three Persons" to each other, but if there be a God at all about whom any discussion is possible.

Can it matter one brass farthing how the Holy Ghost proceeds, or does not proceed, while the hearts of men are needing the cleansing influence of pure motives and holy affections?

Will one poor man or woman ever be the better for the settlement of this infinitely trifling question? Scarcely less ridiculous is the object of the Conference itself. Why make such a fuss to "unite" Christendom at all? It does not want union. Union would be death to free thought; paralysis to inquiry. It wants more light and knowledge, more zeal for good works, and more discretion.

If Dr. Döllinger feels "out in the cold," and has not been used to being snubbed and isolated, why should he want to get shelter for himself and his filioque followers under the ancient canopy of the Eastern Church, which the Western has been all these centuries cursing from the bottom of the Papal heart? Why, too, should our old-woman-like bishops and clergy go meddling over there to force the Greeks to take in the shivering ex-Romans?

And these are the very men whose profoundest dislike and contempt are kept for the Protestant Dissenters at their own doors. They turn their backs on Baptists and Congregationalists; will not allow a Wesleyan minister to call himself "Reverend"; and yet run over to Rome to hug a patriarch from the Eastern Church, and to play the part of mediator for a Roman apostate! Verily these good folk see the world upside down.

Trifling, however, is not confined to picking the dry bones of dead controversy. Taking up a number of the Church Herald, I find pages of correspondence on—what do you think?—"the cultus of the Blessed Virgin Mary." With the utmost gravity these divines are writing to urge the introduction of hymns and litanies to "our Blessed Lady, Mother of God."

Here, again, obliquity or blindness is manifest. While the people are longing to know whether they have a God at all, the priests are teaching them to worship God's Mother, who is also God's daughter and God's wife!! If the Holy Family be thus on the road to recognition and divine honors, possibly God's grandmother, St. Anna, may be the next favorite, or the poor hen-pecked St. Joseph may be restored to his conjugal rights; then in time we shall have the servants of the family duly installed and canonized—not forgetting the faithful ass which carried the Mother of God and her infant God down into Egypt. The poor beast might be useful in treading the path in the valley of death, and might comfort some soul that was too tired to walk.

We are on the high road back to that polytheism from which Catholic Christianity sprung, and the ritualistic clergy are leading us there as fast as they can.

But no! They are in a dream from which they will be rudely shaken before long. The real mysteries of life, of God, and of the future, are at length recognized; and the real men and women who rule and guide the world have been brought face to face with them, and they will neither shirk the painful duty of solving them, nor drown their quickened anxieties in the opiate of superstition.

"Nero fiddled while Rome was burning" is an attitude not complimentary to his good sense or good-feeling; and if the shepherds play little airs on their pipes while their flocks are falling over precipices, or being devoured by wolves, they will have to render an account some day which cannot be contemplated without shame and without dread.

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, S.E., Aug. 20, 1875.

GENEROUS ADMISSIONS.

A recent paragraph of ours with reference to the Chief-Justice of Arizona, and a lecture he has delivered against the common school system, seems to have pleased some of our Catholic contemporaries; and, as we are very glad to have earned even qualified praise for fairness from those whose political designs we so unsparingly criticise and oppose, we deem it no more than just to say in return that their willingness to recognize such a quality in one who never can cease to oppose their public policy seems to him a fresh, though not needed, proof of their own religious sincerity in pursuing it.

The first of the two articles to which we allude is the following from the Louisville, Kentucky, Catholic Advocate of September 2:—

A WORTHY EXAMPLE.

If our Protestant contemporaries could but copy the spirit of justice occasionally displayed by the Free Religion INDEX, the vexed question of school education would be much more easy of solution. And if such organs as the INDEX could be uniformly consistent in adhering to the spirit that prompts the following extract from its columns, the matter would be still more simplified. What Catholics most desire is a hearing on this subject by the American non-Catholic population. But there is not in all the land a single non-Catholic paper that can resist the temptation of garbling and misrepresenting Catholic arguments. We have long looked for a fair attempt at the refutation of the Catholic claim for denominational education, but must say that we have never seen one that did not wilfully misstate the Catholic side. The nearest approximate we ever saw to a just statement of the Catholic side was by THE INDEX itself, and even that statement was so unanswerable that THE INDEX did not attempt to refute it, but concluded, with the brute force doctrines, that, as the "liberal" conscience was "enlightened," and the Catholic conscience darkened, the Catholic should be pushed to the wall. This was a plain confession that, no matter what justice said, numbers alone, and an unreasoning majority, would do what they had the power to do. The present doctrine of THE INDEX is a perfectly fair one. It is to be hoped it will not retract it again, and that the Evangelical papers will copy some of its truth and manliness. THE INDEX says:—

"The Chief-Justice of Arizona, being an ultra-montane Catholic, delivered recently a lecture against the American common school system in the Legislative Hall at Tucson, the capital. A bill was soon after introduced in the council of the Territory establishing sectarian schools, and abolishing the common schools, and was only defeated by a single vote. Eugene Lawrence, in Harper's Weekly, complains of the Chief-Justice for giving this lecture, to which he attributes great influence. We consider the complaint unreasonable. Let both sides be heard, and let everybody be welcome to plead either. If ignorance and sectarianism can beat knowledge and liberality in fair debate, the country must make the best of it. No one ought to blame the Chief-Justice for arguing against the school system who would have applauded him for arguing in its favor; and the subject is one which is as free to a Chief-Justice as to any other. But those who believe in the common schools should see to it that their cause is not suffered to go by default. We are sorry to know that Arizona has so many dull brains or lazy mouths. Why did not somebody refute the Chief-Justice? Mr. Lawrence should distribute his censure among those who neglected their duty by silence, and not bestow it upon him who discharged his own duty according to the little light that was in him."

The other article is from the Brooklyn, New York, Catholic Review of September 7:—

PROTESTANT ABUSE OF CATHOLICS.

"Strike but hear," was a good old Greek motto which was listened to with manifest advantages. "Abuse us, but consider our arguments," may be taken as the Catholic-American version of the Grecian's request. Abuse we certainly shall receive, but we fear there is not much willingness to argue with us. It is well to shirk argument if one is conscious of weakness or injustice. This is what has been done in the case of the recent lecture of Chief-Justice Dunne of Arizona, whose brave and just sentiments on the school system have not been answered except by appeals for his resignation and personal abuse. To these he has replied with great dignity and force in a pleasant letter to an old friend. We are glad, however, to see that a large number of our fellow citizens, who are not the editors of political papers, looking for a new issue, are a little ashamed of the constant abuse, and the just as constant avoiding of fair discussion with which the political papers assail us. It is comforting, though we acknowledge in a degree proportionally trifling as compared with their influence, to find the organ of the liberals, the Boston INDEX, complaining that the Chief-Justice and the Catholic cause have not been fairly treated in this matter. It says:—

"Eugene Lawrence, in Harper's Weekly, complains of the Chief-Justice for giving this lecture, to which he attributes great influence. We consider the complaint unreasonable. Let both sides be heard, and let everybody be welcome to plead either. If ignorance and sectarianism can beat knowledge and liberality in fair debate, the country must make the best of it. No one ought to blame the Chief-Justice for arguing against the school system who would have applauded him for arguing in its favor, and the subject is one which is as free to a Chief-Justice as to any other. But those who believe in the common schools should see to it that their cause is not suffered to go by default. We are sorry to know that Arizona has so many dull brains or lazy mouths. Why did not somebody refute the Chief-Justice? Mr. Lawrence should distribute his censure among those who neglected their duty by silence, and not bestow it upon him who discharged his own duty according to the little light that was in him."

We are sorry to have to dispel the delusion of our Boston friend, for in doing so we have to intimate that the "little light" and "ignorant sectarianism" which it mentions are on its own side of the fight in favor of the so-called free schools; but we thank him for his otherwise fair words on Judge Dunne's side, which is that of a respectable and consistent minority of this people, who have some rights which are to be settled on other principles than those of numbers. We ask the INDEX to bear in mind and to give circulation to this passage from the Chief-Justice's recent letter on the subject: "There are," he says, "two ways of treating those earnest demands of about 8,000,000 fellow-citizens; one is to let them feel, as Patrick Henry is supposed to have put it, that they have been 'spurned with contempt from the foot of the throne,' and you know how perfectly satisfactory that kind of treatment is to American citizens; the other is, to discuss the alleged grievance in a fair and reasonable way. We have had as much as we care to stand of the first kind of treatment, and we respectfully suggest a change."

Communications.

CULTURE AND LIFE.

Truth, as we perceive it, can be but partial. Whoever writes anything writes it with a thought that transcends the expression. Therefore what is written seems to lack depth and comprehensiveness to the author. What he has written may meet the need of a few, and uplift them. But he, seeing more of the Absolute Thought which is in all things, feels that his work lacks artistic finish, and that he himself is but a poor artist. As a teacher he has helped, just as a painter of daubs helps some taste of a low order to grow to better things, or a writer of poor novels infuses into the intellectual mind an ideal better than any it could itself originate.

But, as an artist, who is not a failure? He is least a failure who sticks to one masterpiece, and puts his whole soul into it. Least of all is he a failure whose masterpiece is his own nature, made rich and strong and tender by simply living earnestly, truly, and intensely. That exquisite story of the "Madonna of the Future," as told by Henry James, Jr., embodies a true idea. It is the history of a man who was too true an artist to do poor work, and wasted his life making ready for his masterpiece which was never begun. Who shall say it was never begun, or wherein lay the man's true work? Was his idealization of his art nothing? Was his grand loyalty to that art, his "passion for perfection," nothing? Such spirits are not made for gross work in the raw material. They work by radiation. There is a subtler power, a more infinite influence. They are a part of the divine power that (to use Matthew Arnold's phrase) "makes for righteousness." They have attained such a spiritual height that they are blended with the Infinite, are at one with its purpose, and feel that their altitude of rectitude and truth to the ideal perfection is their work and their grandest speech. Partial utterance they cannot be content to make, for they see through and beyond it, and have no faith in it. To such spirits, art and culture are more than all else, and they are justified in sacrificing all to them; but such natures are rare.

The question, "Which—self-culture or self-sacrifice?" is the problem of many lives. If one is so true an artist that he would sacrifice his life, his fame, and his ambition to be true to his art's highest principles, he will doubtless do the world more good by adhering to his art than by sacrificing it to commoner interests. But few are thus exceptional. Generally speaking, the problem is quickly solved.

Culture is not an end, but the means to an end. The result is the main thing; and that is character, a perfect spiritual stature. This is not attained by the cultivation of the intellect and æsthetic instincts alone. Self-sacrifice, the merging of self in duties and loving ministrations to others, includes the highest and broadest kind of culture. It brings self-control, which is repressed force. It is a long road to character through many books and much study, and it is the way some must take. But let them not despise those others who take a short cut, and arrive at the goal by their inner aspirations and perceptions, climbing by the simple aids life offers. The characters that everywhere most compel reverence are not those who know books better than those around them, but those who know more of life and the human heart, and who are strong to devote themselves to generous purposes. I wonder, often, should we ever exist on a spiritual plane of existence, what good a mere knowledge of books, even of science, can do us. What can it serve us then to know all there is to be known of this paltry planet, this speck in the universe, earth? And how much of that which we have laboriously stored up in our memory will be found to be erroneous! How much will be found to have been only wrapped about the mind, and never received within it! Experience alone can bring wisdom; and wisdom is more than knowledge. We know, not what we have read or heard, but what we have felt. And the use to us of all learning lies in the mental drill gained in attaining it—the power of mind and spiritual perception developed by it. This insight, feeling, and inner force will pass current on all planets and in all spheres of existence,—wherever we find soul, and we find it everywhere. Subtle intuitions, deep and broad sympathies, a rich inner life, self-forgetfulness, helpfulness, self-control,—these give the nature a gentle dignity, a keen insight, and a silent force which can grasp the secrets of all worlds and all life, and which in expending itself awakens the intellect, driving it on with giant strides. Soon all culture is at the feet of such a soul; for art—all the arts—becomes its needed expression. It is not now an aping of culture, affecting delight in what constitutes the ticket of admission to good social circles, talking literary twaddle or artistic twaddle. It is expression because of something within to be expressed. It is the genuine efflux of a rich nature; and art takes its proper place, subordinate to the soul, and merely the expression, or reflection on the surface of material things, of the soul's realities. Art is no god to be worshipped. We are the gods, and the arts our servants. Through them the divine element in us, which is part of the Absolute Thought, would find expression, struggling to shine forth, to radiate its unconquerable and infinite vitality.

"But," says the bowed and chained spirit, chafing against the bare rocks, and struggling with its galling chain, "am I to possess nothing? Is life to be only uncongenial labor, and its results only those I esteem unworthy? Is this all?" Yes, all, and also best. Art and literature are much. An ideal life is much. But the soul is more. The results you imagine to be most worthy of effort are less than those you are now attaining. Your own nature is a piece of rare sculpture. Self-discipline is the chiseling and moulding process. Be a great artist in spiritual sculpture, and so transcend your wildest dreams of greatness. Does your life seem spoiled? So to ignorant eyes does the fair block of marble, when the first rough strokes increase its irregularity. The artist knows it is the first step to better things. The soul that craves expression in any of the arts already has within it the eternal reality of which that art is but the fleeting shadow. Why mourn for the shadows, when you yourself are the substance? You have the organization, the perceptions, the ideals, the infinite and unutterable emotions. The expression would be less, and could add nothing to your real being. If you are not permitted to express yourself, it is because you are destined to a broader and fuller development than Genius could give you. It is because you need to crystallize, and to grow clear and fine of texture. People are as metals, and steel is the finest for use. But you are full of longings; you could paint that beloved face; catch forever the charming landscape; mould that exquisite form whose beauty thrills you; you could weep with longing to utter the dreamy charm of autumn, or the blithe joy of spring, or to sing of all human joy and sorrow,—if time and circumstance did not thwart you. Well and good. You have all these things. In some past eternity you may have lived in them. But in the existence now yours it is evident you are to learn some lesson unknown to you; develop some power the seeds of which as yet lie dormant within you; round out your nature in a new direction, aiming surely, by the force of unknown laws, at ultimate symmetry. So be of good cheer! In due season you shall reap the fruit of that frail germ now struggling into life with such pain. Theodore Parker once said that in Southern countries, in the vintage time, the grape yields at the first pressure a weak, light, sweet liquor, fit for girls; at a stronger pressure, a liquor for young men; "but 'tis only the strongest pressure that forces from the grape's reluctant heart the wine that keeps good for centuries, and gladdens the heart of strong men!"

What we want and what we need are seldom identical. We desire according to habit and fixed ideas. We need the hitherto unknown. Books, people, things, when the need is at its uttermost, drift to us in obedience to a law of supply and demand. The higher the life-level we are treading, the more apparent becomes the perfect working of this law, which some call Providence, or God; but both terms have become narrowed to finiteness. It is the Absolute Thought, the Infinite; and we do well to throw ourselves, trusting and serene, on the bosom of it.

BOSTON, August.

E. MERRIAM.

THE CATHOLICS IN OHIO.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Having long been a reader of THE INDEX, and sympathizing in the main with its views, I can testify to the spirit of fairness and candor which has always governed the course of its editors. Therefore I doubt not that certain errors in your late article on "The Catholic Peril" were entirely inadvertent, and that you will be glad to correct them.

I agree with you that the school question, as agitated and forced upon us by leading Catholics in various parts of our country, is a grave one. I would by no means underestimate its importance and gravity. But, in order to uphold our own views successfully, it is all important to do no injustice to our opponents; still more, to any political organization composed largely of those whose interests and sense of justice should lead them to fight for us, instead of against us.

THE INDEX is evidently misled, by a partisan paragraph copied from the Christian Union, to take the ground that, in the Ohio political contest, the Democratic party has "taken an attitude friendly to the views of the Catholics."

Is this a fact?

If it be a fact, then is it also a fact that THE INDEX has taken ground favorable to the views of the Catholics; for the views of the Democratic party of Ohio, in their only authoritative expression, the platform of the late State Convention, are precisely the views held and advocated by THE INDEX.

The following is the resolution adopted by the Democratic State Convention of last June:—

"Thirteenth. We favor the complete separation of Church and State, religious independence and absolute freedom of opinion, equal and exact justice to all religious societies, and purely secular education at the expense of the tax-payers, without division among or control by any sect, directly or indirectly, of any portion of the school fund."

I think you will admit that it would be difficult to formulate the "Demands of Liberalism" on this question, in more emphatic language; and, having read something of the discussion of this question in the Ohio papers, we have yet to see the opinion of any leading Democratic paper or orator in opposition to this position. If the Catholics of Ohio generally accept this platform, then we heartily agree with them.

It is at least certain that the school question has not at this time been forced upon the attention of the people of Ohio, either by the Catholic leaders, or by the Democratic party. It is purely a trick to catch votes, sprung upon the people by unscrupulous Republican leaders, and likely to influence no one but those of extreme Orthodox proclivities, who believe in keeping the Bible in the public schools, and to that extent support a union of the Church with the State.

The only weapon to which the Republican leaders appeal in their contest of falsehood is the so-called "Geghan Bill," introduced in the late legislature by a Democratic member, and passed. But this bill contains not one syllable relating to the public schools, nor infringing in any way upon the rights of any person of any religion. On the contrary, it protects the rights of a Radical or Infidel, as much as it protects a Catholic. The following is the complete text of the bill:—

"An act to secure liberty of conscience in matters of religion to persons imprisoned, or detained by authority of law.

"SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, That as liberty of conscience is not forfeited by reason of conviction of crime, or by reason of detention in any penal, reformatory, or eleemosynary institution, or any house of refuge, workhouse, jail, or public asylum in this State, no person in any such institution shall be compelled to attend religious worship or instruction of a form which is against the dictates of his or her conscience; and it shall be the duty of every director, trustee, superintendent, or other person, having in charge any such institution, to furnish ample and equal facilities to all such persons for receiving the ministrations of the authorized clergymen of their own religious denominations or persuasions, under such reasonable rules and regulations as the trustees, directors, managers, or superintendents shall make; but no such rules shall be so construed as to prevent the clergyman of any denomination from fully administering the rites of his denomination to such inmates, provided such ministration entail no expense on the public treasury."

As will be seen, while this law protects the enforced inmates of public institutions in the enjoyment of their own religious observances, as is perfectly proper, it also protects them all against the enforced observance of any religious ceremonies.

We are quite aware that there is a determined movement on the part of certain Catholic leaders, inspired, no doubt, by the authorities of the Church at Rome, to undermine our school system by compelling a division of the school funds, for the support of their Catholic schools. Whenever the question arises in this form, it cannot be met too promptly or condemned too emphatically; but how shall we meet it, except by planting ourselves on the very platform of the Democratic party of Ohio?

Even the Catholics are not united to-day in favor of a division of the school fund. Some of their ablest men are quite willing to accept the complete secularizing of the public schools, as advocated in the "Demands of Liberalism" and the Ohio Democratic platform. Such is understood to be the position of Senator Kernan, of this State, and of many others.

That this division exists among them, the leading article in the Catholic World for September bears significant testimony. This article commences by admitting that "these Protestants and philosophical adversaries of revelation, who deny Catholic doctrines, are consistent with themselves, when they deny to the Church the rights which she claims over education." Their logic is admitted to be "correct"; and the writer discreetly declines to attack their position, or assail their premises. His argument is addressed entirely to "certain Catholics," who "make common cause with the enemies of their faith, in repudiating all control of the Church in questions of instruction and education."

In the conflict before us the division is not to be between Republicans and Democrats, nor, we trust, between Catholics and Protestants. It is to be between sectarian bigots, striving for a practical union of Church and State, on one side, and the fair-minded, liberal men of every sect and party on the other.

Let us not, then, by unfairness or injustice, alienate any of our natural allies, but claim boldly and constantly what is right, and draw to us all who can be led by appeals to reason and common sense.

On the financial question we deem the Democrats of Ohio to be radically wrong. But, so far as their pledges and public acts attest, on the school question they are radically right. Let us give them the credit for it.

LEWIS G. JANES.

[Mr. Janes says above: "THE INDEX is evidently misled, by a partisan paragraph copied from the Christian Union, to take the ground that, in the Ohio political contest, the Democratic party has 'taken an attitude friendly to the views of the Catholics.'" One would suppose that the words we have italicized were those of THE INDEX, since Mr. Janes apparently quotes them as such; whereas they are the words of the Christian Union, and not of THE INDEX at all. The only statement we made on this whole subject, in the article criticised, was that the Catholics in Ohio have made the school question "one of the issues of the present political campaign." That is all we said, and we see nothing in it to correct. As to the Christian Union paragraph, it was quoted with due credit, but not indorsed, and stood on the sole authority of that paper. What Mr. Janes has to say, therefore, should have been said as a criticism of the Christian Union, not of THE INDEX; and, as such, we cheerfully give it space in these columns.

Our information respecting the local issues in the Ohio campaign is quite restricted, and we therefore made no statement whatever respecting the Democratic party, its professions, or its acts; we are glad to say that the extract from its platform above quoted is excellent and unexceptionable. But the Ohio Catholic papers themselves have openly avowed their support, as Catholics, of the Democratic party; and that means, despite all platform proclamations, some common understanding on the school question. Judge Taft's defence in 1870 of the secular school principle made the Republicans this year afraid to nominate him as Governor; why was this, if the Democrats are really working for the same principle? Whether or not the Democrats have publicly formed an alliance with the Catholics, the Catholics have publicly formed an alliance with them: as the Catholic Telegraph says, "The unbroken, solid vote of the Catholic citizens of the State will be given to the Democratic party." And that this means that the Democratic policy on the school question will be pleasing to the Catholics, goes without saying. We want to do no injustice to the Democratic party; but facts are facts, and must be recognized.—ED.]

WM. H. SEWARD ON THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

EDITOR OF INDEX:—

None of our Roman Catholic fellow-citizens will accuse Mr. Seward of prejudice against their faith, or any disposition to abridge their political rights in this republic. Remembering the attitude he maintained towards them in the most active days of his political life, his testimony after its close, in regard to the policy pursued by the antique Christian hierarchy, is very significant. It may be found in his very interesting and instructive Travels Round the World, page 211, under date of Nov. 17, 1870. I hope THE INDEX will make room for it; and the sincere Catholic papers cannot do better than to copy and comment. ELIZUR WRIGHT.

EXTRACT.

By the laws of China, the Roman Catholic religion is tolerated here. That Church has on paper divided the empire into bishoprics and vicarates. It counts eight bishoprics or more, sixty foreign priests, one hundred and twenty native priests, and four hundred thousand native converts.

We visited, to-day, the Cathedral at Peking. It is a fine, large, stone edifice, with an adjoining nunnery. The sisters are French and Irish. There is a large number of native servants. It seems quite apparent that converts are obtained as fast as the missionaries are able to furnish them employment and support, which is an indispensable condition. Native jealousy feeds on a tradition that the spacious grounds occupied by those institutions were obtained without equivalent. Nor does the same jealousy fail to take notice that the Church arrogates a right denied even to foreign embassies, of using the imperial yellow color in the ornamentation of its portals and walls. Sister Louise, lamented as the noblest and best beloved of the martyrs at Tientsin, had arrived there just before the massacre. The sisters gave us relics of her. What shall we say concerning that terrible transaction?

It is right, just, and wise, that all the Christian nations shall mourn together over the victims, sympathize with the survivors, and unite in demanding such satisfaction from the Chinese government as would afford security against a recurrence of persecution. But this has been already done, it seems to us, as fully as possible. The Chinese government has beheaded eighteen of the murderers, has provided for repairing and restoring the demolished buildings, and paid an indemnity of six hundred thousand taels for distribution to the families of the victims. It has, moreover, sent one of the most eminent statesmen of China, who is fully conversant with the details of the tragedy, to make such further explanations and give such further guarantees as the French government may reasonably demand. The French minister here, under high excitement and with threats of war, demanded, besides those concessions, the heads of the two chief mandarins who were in authority at the time the massacre occurred. The Chinese government brought those mandarins to trial. The charge of complicity was not sustained. Nevertheless, the government banished them for life, as a punishment for their imbecility. We know that here, as well as throughout Europe and the United States, it is alleged that these proceedings of the Chinese government are fraudulent and evasive; but we fail to find evidence of fraud, nor can we divine a motive for it. It is not to be forgotten that persecution of Christian missionaries, and especially persecution of Roman Catholic, is not exclusively confined to the Chinese. The Roman Catholic Church, with its high ecclesiastical pretensions, its monastical institutions, and its denial of the right of judgment by individual conscience, has come into conflict not only with the pagan systems of Asia, but with the enlightened civilization of the age. Here, as in Europe and the United States, it has fallen, however undeservedly, under popular suspicion in two forms: first, a suspicion of political usurpation, that is to say, an attempt to establish imperium in imperio; second, the suspicion of impurity of morals in celibate life.

In which of the Western nations has the conflict between that Church and those who dissent from it been carried on without occasional riot, massacre, and martyrdom—not to speak of the religious wars which attended the Protestant Reformation? In what Western nation did a government ever offer more effective or liberal reparation than that which the Chinese government has given in this case? It is not to be expected that the Protestant countries in the West, which have suppressed monastic institutions, and sequestered ecclesiastical estates, will sympathize with the demands of France that shall go beyond a guarantee of rights and privileges for all Christians in China. Missionaries of all sects ought to remember that, where the Gospel comes, there "it must needs be that offences come"; nor should they forget that the command, "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations," was accompanied by the warning injunction, not less sublime than the command itself: "Behold I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves; be ye, therefore, wise as serpents and harmless as doves."

INDIA.

Liberalism has its claims, doubtless, and claims more important than those of Orthodoxy; for have we not the mission to disabuse the world of error, to cast down the many false gods—erecting on their pedestals the fair forms of Truth and Purity? Yet these are works to be carried out in our own way, and, to a great extent, in our own time. No great organizations are required, such as the Orthodox can boast of, who find some post for each member to fill, thus giving him an interest and stake in the cause. We do, indeed, require support for liberal papers, and even tract-distributing may fall to our lot. Yet these are not regarded with such seriousness as our Orthodox friends' duties are, or as their own importance requires. It might be as well, perhaps, did we take up with such really necessary requirements, and do what we could to hasten the dawn of the day of freedom! The Orthodox sects deserve commendation for the manner in which they find employment for their followers; and, as it seems to be a natural requirement of the human mind to work with others, it becomes a question of how far it is wise of us to be contented with so much unnecessary individualism (excepting, of course, in thought), and so little necessary union.

That there are objects and aims to the attainment of which all liberal thinkers can work, and that together, no one will deny. It may be as well to speak of one such now.

One of the greatest works the churches in the past have set themselves has been "missions to the heathen." Whether it has not often been a sending from heathen (judging from a few of the customs of "Christendom") to heathen, I will not now discuss; but the "mission" work has been largely impressed upon the churches, and many of the missionary societies enjoy princely incomes. It is notorious that these societies have, as a rule, been failures; "conversions" have been few and far between, and most "costly"; and missions might justly be condemned as wasteful expenditure (remembering the sad needs of many at home), were it not that mere contact of one race of men with another cannot but fail to result in permanent benefit to both.

In India, for instance, the natives are themselves the first to avow their great indebtedness to British rule, while years to come will show how vast have been the benefits accruing to the Western nations from contact with the East and its rich stores of ancient literature.

The "National Indian Association of Great Britain" was founded by Miss Carpenter a few years ago, for the purpose of diffusing a knowledge of India among the "people at home"; of awakening a sympathy with its inhabitants, and for creating a general interest in so great a country, and one so nearly connected with Britain. Of the Aryan race ourselves, the least we can do is to have some little sympathy with, and interest in, a people of the same stock who have preserved amongst themselves the ancient literature of our common ancestors.

In the Journal of the association, I gave two years ago a short series of papers on the Hindu religious books,* and it needs but a little acquaintance with the extensive stores of religious, philosophical, and romantic compositions of India to arouse a lively interest in her, and a strong desire to help her out of the deep mire of ignorance and superstition into which she has been cast by the influence of the priests. Alas, how much the priests have to answer for, at home and abroad! In my now publishing book on Hindu Thought; or a Short Account of the Religious Books of India, with some Remarks concerning their Origin, Character, and Influence, I conclusively show what (to borrow a phrase from a Hindu convert to Christianity) "a splendid religion the Hindu religion must have been"; and how effectually the priestly class gradually assumed authority over them, and thus kept them in darkness and all superstition.

The Journal of the association supplies information concerning prison and reformatory arrangements, and other interesting matter. Mrs. Bush, of 9 Park Square, Boston, has kindly consented, at Miss Carpenter's request, to act as Secretary to the

*These are now republishing, in book form, with additions and enlarged; copies may be ordered of C. F. Somerby, Eighth Street, New York.

Boston Branch, and will be pleased to supply copies of the Monthly Journal, and receive subscriptions.

W. A. LEONARD.

BRISTOL, England.

A MONSTROUS STORY.

"SUDDEN DEATH OF A KENTUCKY BLASPHEMER.—A man named Louis Burke, who lived at Burkesville, in this county, a few days ago indulged in very blasphemous language because his crops had been destroyed by high water. He cursed God for having his crops destroyed last year by heat and drought, and for destroying them this year by the flood; and concluded his blasphemy of the Creator with the expression, 'God damn him!' His tongue clove to the roof of his mouth, and he died the next night, never uttering another word."

OTTAWA, 1 Sept., 1875.

F. E. ABBOT, Esq.:

My Dear Sir,—A friend of mine, who wants very much to be Orthodox if he can, takes some comfort out of the above paragraph, and asks me to "explain it on scientific grounds."

Is there any INDEX subscriber or correspondent, living in the neighborhood of the place where the miracle is said to have occurred, who would take the trouble to investigate the facts for truth's sake? If the man died as reported, probably a coroner's inquest was held on his body, and it would be satisfactory to know the verdict.

There is quite a disposition amongst believers at present to spread abroad reports of miracles, prodigies, etc. Something is wanted very badly to prop up the tottering system. With kind regards,

Yours very truly, WM. D. LESUEUR.

[If any one of our readers has accurate information on this subject, we should be glad to publish it. The Editor of the Investigator states in reply to a correspondent that "the Owensboro' (Kentucky) Examiner denies the statement, and says it does great injustice to the farmer, Mr. Lewis Burke, who is still living." In that case, a better refutation of the absurd story could not be desired.—ED.]

EVIL AS REAL AS GOOD.

I think I see intelligence and design in Nature. But Nature is self-antagonistic, and produces misery as really and as naturally as it produces happiness. Hatred and cruelty are as natural to animals and men as are love and sympathy. Designing hate is as plain and unmistakable in Nature as designing love. If "loving design" proves a "creating God," or good, malicious design must prove a creating devil, or evil. If not, will Mr. Moran or somebody tell us why not?

Good and evil are alike real—alike actual. If good is an entity, in a like sense evil is an entity. I challenge—I respectfully defy—all men to confute the foregoing propositions.

If I was obliged to give the cause of the condition of things a name, it should be—Intelligent Necessity.

I have no doubt that good and evil are alike a necessity, and alike eternal; and that the universe as a whole can never be more or less, better or worse. Eternal improvement would be an eternal creating of something from nothing. And if it were possible, nothing would be gained by it; since as much as the future was to be better than the present, so much the past must have been worse than the present.

A. KENT.

STOCKHOLM, N. Y., Sept. 8, 1875.

THE SUNDAY BELL.

As I sit listening to the Sabbath bell, as it peals sadly over hill and dale, it creates a feeling of sadness within my heart.

The thought comes to my mind (and I must even trace it at its birth), Why should this sad monotone still be in existence? Why not let the bells peal out joyfully, to welcome the Sabbath-goers? Within these costly edifices, they will tell you of the good tidings which Christ's birth brought to all people; there they will tell you to sing praises to the "Lamb." If this is the home of "good tidings which shall be unto all people," give us not these sad forebodings, brought to our hearts by the melancholy tones of the ringing bell. Ring them out joyfully, for is not all Nature joyous this beautiful Sabbath day? We feel it in the song of the birds and the crickets' chirp at this delightful midsummer noon. Give us the joyous peals of the bell, which will bid us come hopefully, happily, beneath the belfry dome, and there listen to cheering words which shall give joy unto every living heart. Do not give us any more the old dogmatic tones which were pealed forth for the old dogmatic theorizing times; but give us good, hearty, full-toned, liberal peals, that shall bring us to the house of "Liberal Christianity," and "Church of Humanity." W.

HYDE PARK, Mass., Aug. 29, 1875.

"BUB, did you ever stop to think," said a Michigan avenue grocer recently, as he measured out a half peck of potatoes, "that these potatoes contain sugar, water, and starch?" "Noa, I didn't," replied the boy; "but I heard mother say that you put peas and beans in your coffee, and about a pint of water in about every quart of milk you sold." The subject of natural philosophy was dropped right there.—Detroit Free Press.

"WE FREQUENTLY see it stated," said Mr. Oddfish, "that such and such men started from extreme poverty, coming into town in the first place without a farthing of money, and rising by their own exertions. When I first came I had to borrow money to get here, and I've been borrowing money ever since. It is a great thing at sixty to have established such a wonderful credit."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.,
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAHAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age," an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India," also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity, as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights, Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	2.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition, 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (Dr. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	5.00
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; A Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly Conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising— Adam Bede.....	1.00
Romola.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Corrected Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portraits.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of the Rev. Ephraim Loring. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in Reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	1.25
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Town Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	1.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	3.00
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, A Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	.75
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	2.00
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	2.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	3.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from an Old Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASSBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union. Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	4.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours; the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and the Sun, etc., etc., With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, and Maps.....	5.00
The Expansion of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLEIER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Social Statics. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
SINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New Life of Jesus.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus.....	2.00
Translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fliske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.00
The Newcomes.....	1.00
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.00
The Virginians.....	1.00
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.00
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....	1.25
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise on the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I, IV, and V, each.....	3.00
Vols III, IV, and V, each.....	3.75
The Voyage Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldwater's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

1 Tremont Place Boston.

LANDS FOR SALE, near WAL-
HALLA, S.G. Small tracts and easy terms.
Address W. J. DUFFIE, Owner, COLUMBIA, S.C.

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL
SCHOOL, for both sexes, MERIDEN, CONN.
EMILY J. LEONARD, Principal.

MORSE'S SUMNER.
Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address
S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

MORSE'S PAINE.
PHOTOGRAPHS
For sale at the office of THE INDEX.
Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cts.

A CHEAP OFFER
A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.
Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.
Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2-50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

R E P O R T S ,
SERMONS,
ESSAYS,
and PAMPHLETS,
Of all kinds, neatly and promptly printed by
GEORGE H. ELLIS,
7 Tremont Place,
BOSTON.

THE AMERICAN EDITION
OF
MONCURE D. CONWAY'S
SACRED ANTHOLOGY,
A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,
has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.
Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

THE FALLACIES
OF THE
FREE LOVE THEORY:
OR,
Love Considered as a Religion.
By J. W. PIKE.
This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address
THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

JUST PUBLISHED.
!!THE SHINING RIVER!!
A New Sabbath-school Song Book.
By H. S. & W. O. PERKINS.
Price 35 cents. $30.00 per hundred.
"Rest in Thee," "What Jesus may Say,"
"Wandering Child," "What are These?"
"Watchman, Awake!" are specimens of the titles of the beautiful new hymns, to sweet new melodies.

THE HIGH SCHOOL CHOIR. By
L. O. EMERSON and W. S. TILDEN. Price
$1.00. $9.00 per dozen.
The "High School Choir" is similar in general design to the very popular "Hour of Singing," which has been almost universally used in High Schools. The present work is in no way inferior to its predecessor, and is entirely fresh and new.

THE SONG MONARCH. Price 75 cts.
$7.50 per dozen. By H. R. PALMER, assisted by L. O. EMERSON.
Do not think of teaching a Singing-school without using this attractive, popular, and useful book.

Specimen copies sent, post-paid, for retail
price.
OLIVER DITSON & CO.,
BOSTON.
CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN
HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247.
Send for Circular.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN
Religion and Science,
By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

T H E I N D E X
IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings.
Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS
—OF—
THOMAS PAINE.
Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc.
Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON
English and Classical School.
The Summer Term will begin Monday,
April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.
For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

REASONS FOR USING THE
EUREKA SPOOL SILK.
It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN
CO.
G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,
BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,
—AND—
GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY
335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.
Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son
& Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York.
No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.
The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.
On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods.
20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!
THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address
THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP
IN RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform."

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just discussions of religious problems as this book contains.
It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities;
and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith.
These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion,—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUT-
LOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David
A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF
THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John
Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS.
By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis El-lingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O.
B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMER-ICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPHY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Ed-
nah D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM.
By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O.
B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom,
Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S.
Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E.
Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe,
C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C.
Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss,
Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H.
Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874
(Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomer for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co.,
Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES,
IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E.
Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPU-LAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN
THIS LIST will be furnished to order.
Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c.,
of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER
LECTURES.
By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,
OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt,"
"Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Her-etics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's
TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow."
Price fifty cents. Address
S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHI-LOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticism on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-
Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.
An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.
Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.
For sale by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

B O O K ,
Card,
—AND—
Job
PRINTING,
Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by
GEORGE H. ELLIS,
7 TREMONT PLACE,
BOSTON.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol.
8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published;
he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The New York TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying:
"It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price.
Address THE INDEX,
Tremont Place, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1875.

WHOLE No. 301.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, undimly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———.

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSSES.

THE GEGHAN BILL in Ohio is said by some to forbid the payment of salaries to chaplains in penitentiaries or other public institutions. We think this is a forced construction of the bill, but should be glad to be found in error on the point.

THE SECOND RADICAL CLUB of Boston held their first meeting of the season last Monday evening. It was fully attended and delightfully social in character, and the cake and ice cream were so good as to be quite indistinguishable from refreshments of the most conservative bias.

IT IS declared that only twenty-three men in the Montreal police can be relied on to put down any religious riot which may grow out of the Guibord troubles. People make a great mistake who content themselves, in estimating the strength of the Catholic Church, with merely consulting the census returns.

KARL BLIND, 3 Winchester Road, South Hampstead, London, N.W., England, has favored us with a copy of his Fire-Burial Among our Germanic Forefathers: A Record of the Poetry and History of Teutonic Cremation, which is an instructive and erudite article on the subject first published in Fraser's Magazine. All interested can obtain it by addressing the author as above and enclosing an English shilling.

A CORRESPONDENT writes us from Montreal, under date of September 17, with regard to the Guibord disturbances: "People are very much excited about it here, and it would not take much to cause riot and bloodshed." Let such sad facts as this bitter religious excitement over so small a matter as where a dead citizen shall be buried be well pondered by those who "pooh pooh" the idea of a religious war in the nineteenth century.

A SUBSCRIBER to THE INDEX, writing from Leipzig under date of September 10, says very kindly: "I have now been reading THE INDEX for some time. It is one of the boldest, freest, and most thoughtful papers I have ever read. If I may serve the noble cause it advocates by any means from this country, I shall very gladly do so." In response we would say that a paper which pleads a cause so unpopular as that of THE INDEX is obliged to depend upon its earnest friends for support and growth, and that an increase of new subscriptions is what it needs the most.

ONE OF the new amendments to the New Jersey State Constitution is said to prohibit the exemption of church property from taxation. On this the Christian Statesman remarks: "If this prove to be true, it is another example of the danger in which a State with so definite and well understood religious convictions constantly stands of flying into the arms of one enemy in avoiding another." But between Catholicism and Liberalism there is no logical or in the end practical middle ground; and the Statesman is all the time helping either one or the other, without being aware of the fact.

BISHOP McQUAID, of Rochester, N. Y., made this threat publicly in an address at Cincinnati: "It is said by Protestant ministers that the public schools are adverse to the Catholics. Did they ever think of the possibility of the tables being turned? They make the mistake which is too often made by the stronger party. A Protestant minister said to me: 'When you get the power, will you put the screws to us?' I replied, 'How could we dare not follow your illustrious example? We would collect all the taxes and control the schools, so that you would have to support your own and ours also.'" This bold language shows exactly how the use of the Bible in public schools exasperates and strengthens the Catholic attack on the public school system. The Catholics have now a just grievance which would vanish if the Bible were absolutely excluded from the schools.

A MARBLE BUST of Rev. Samuel J. May, executed by Miss Isabella G. Gifford, was presented on September 18 to the city of Syracuse, N. Y., by the Unitarian Society of that place, on condition that it remain in the Central Library and under the care of the Board of Education forever. In the presence of an immense assembly Mr. C. D. B. Mills, one of the few fitted by character to be the eulogist of such a man as Samuel J. May, made an address which was full of the spirit of him who was now so tenderly commemorated; Rev. S. R. Calthrop presented the bust to the city, reciting an original poem; President Duncan, of the Board of Education, and President White, of Cornell University, formally accepted the gift. For a quarter of a century Mr. May was conspicuous in Syracuse for all that was good in public and private life; and it is eminently fitting that one of the purest of the once proscribed "abolitionists" should now be thus publicly honored.

REV. JOHN M. L. BABCOCK, a Radical Unitarian clergyman, proposes to issue in Boston the first number of the New Age, an eight-page weekly journal, on October 25, 1875. His paper will be "devoted to the discussion of Free Religion, Labor Reform, Political Economy, Temperance, Secular Education, Woman Suffrage, Spiritualism, Politics, and the Mutual Relation of Church and State"; it "will be absolutely free in its utterances, bound to the interests of no denomination, party, corporation, institution, or any organized or private system or theory"; and "its purpose to look around the whole horizon of humanity's aspirations and efforts, and to utter the freest and most advanced thought upon all subjects pertaining to human welfare, will constitute its strongest right to exist." It is plain that criticism of a journal which is to be shaped by no "organized or private system or theory" must await its actual appearance, and cannot be made in advance; but we can fittingly express here our deep respect for Mr. Babcock as a man, and our hope that, if he has any true and important word to say, his paper may thrive and prosper. The terms are $3.00 a year: address "The New Age, No. 235 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

ONE OF the ablest and most remarkable thinkers of America, Chauncey Wright, of Cambridge, Massachusetts, died recently in that city. His life was a very quiet and retired one, but his intellectual influence was wonderfully strong over all who came within its reach. A few articles in the North American Review and several critical notices in the New York Nation (easily recognizable by all who knew Mr. Wright's style and speculative opinions), together with some papers in the Transactions of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, comprise all his literary legacy to his fellow-men; and it is greatly to be hoped that they will be gathered up in some permanent form. It was our privilege to be acquainted with this man of real genius and kindly heart, whose loss to the world is great, and greater still to his personal friends. His name is mentioned with marked respect in the works of Charles Darwin, who reprinted one of his chief articles in England in pamphlet form. But his powers were most extraordinary in conversation, which was keen, subtle, and instructive in the highest degree. Some correspondence on philosophical subjects with which he favored us ten years ago is replete with powerful and original thought, and attests the vast mental power which only a certain constitutional indolence prevented from exercising a world wide influence. America has few such men to lose, and we sorrowfully record here our grateful appreciation of his genius and our deep regret at its premature eclipse.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. H. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBOA, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carrie S. Burnham, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

Why is Jesus now called "Christ"?

BY CHARLES K. WHIPPLE.

Among the theological questions now coming up for examination and solution, the above seems needful to be entertained; especially by those who respect the apostolic injunction, "Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you."

WHAT WAS HIS NAME?

A great many people seem to think "Jesus Christ" the name properly belonging to a particular person; just as they call another individual Pontius Pilate, and another Mark Antony. They also use the names "Jesus" and "Christ" indifferently to designate the great Hebrew teacher, the son of Joseph and Mary, as if both these names rightfully belonged to him.

HIS NAME WAS "JESUS."

The name Jesus does rightfully belong to him; since the records agree in the statement that his parents gave him that name at his birth, and since there is not the slightest reason to doubt this point.

THE EVANGELISTS, HOWEVER, USED THE TITLE INTERCHANGEABLY WITH THE NAME.

It is equally true, however, that the writers of those records used both the double name and either of the single ones indifferently, seeming to think "the carpenter's son" as correctly described by one as by the other. And if a reason for using those names interchangeably were now asked of the people who so use them, ninety-nine in a hundred would mention the use of them in that manner by the evangelists as the sufficient reason.

WHAT WAS THEIR REASON?

We shall be helped to determine whether or not this be a sufficient reason, by inquiring how the evangelists and the other New Testament writers came to apply to Jesus the titles "Messiah" and "Christ."

THEIR JEWISH EDUCATION SHOWS US WHY.

These men, or a great majority of them, were born and bred Jews; taught from their childhood to regard their nation as the chosen people of God, their Hebrew Scripture as the voice of God, and the several writers of the books composing that Scripture as infallibly inspired by God in their speech and writing. They also, like the rest of the Jewish people, expected with perfect confidence the coming of a great Deliverer, in fulfilment of predictions by sundry of their prophets.

MEANING OF THE TERMS.

This Deliverer was to be called "Christ," or "Messiah," both of which names signify "anointed." The reason why these titles were assigned to the expected Deliverer was that he was to be (according to the predictions) a lineal descendant of King David, an occupant and perpetuator of his throne, and a ruler of Israel as the "Lord's Anointed" in the same sense that David was.

WE HAVE THE ORIGINAL PREDICTIONS, AND CAN UNDERSTAND AND JUDGE OF THEM.

We have on record, in the Hebrew Scriptures, the predictions on which these expectations were founded. We are as able to judge correctly of their scope and meaning as the Hebrews to whom they were originally spoken, or as any subsequent generation of the people who have been quoting them as infallibly inspired, and declaring them fulfilled in the life and death of Jesus. Let us look at some of these predictions, and see precisely what the Messiah was to be, and what he was to do, according to them.

A PERMANENT TEMPLE-WORSHIP PREDICTED, NOT LESS THAN A MESSIAH.

It will throw valuable incidental light on the subject, if we notice that predictions of the permanence of the temple-worship, and of the burnt-offerings and meat-offerings, and of the perpetuation of priests and Levites to offer them, are associated with predictions of the expected Deliverer or Messiah. Here are some of the Messianic prophecies:—

"Is. ix., 6, 7.—For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and justice from henceforth, even forever. The zeal of the Lord of Hosts will perform this."

According to the above, the Messiah was to sit on the throne of David, ruling the Hebrews as David did, and moreover securing to them peace and a just government forever. What wonder that the Jews of the time of Jesus did not accept him as fulfilling this prediction? What wonder that the Jews of the present time see that no such Deliverer has arisen?

"Jerem. xxiii., 5, 6.—Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely."

And again:—

"Jerem. xxxiii., 14-18.—Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel and to the house of Judah. In those days, and at that time, will I cause the branch of righteousness to grow up unto David; and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land. In those days shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely. And this is the name wherewith she shall be called, The Lord our righteousness. For thus saith the Lord, David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel; neither shall the priests, the Levites, want a man before me to offer burnt-offerings, and to kindle meat-offerings, and to do sacrifice continually."

And again, verses 20, 21.—"Thus saith the Lord, if ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season, then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant, that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne, and with the Levites the priests my ministers."

WHAT WAS REALLY PREDICTED IN REGARD TO THE MESSIAH.

According to these predictions, the Messiah, a lineal son of David, was to reign forever on the throne of David; and was so to execute justice and judgment in the land of Palestine that, under his rule, "Judah should be saved, and Israel and Jerusalem should dwell safely." Moreover, under his reign the priests and Levites were to continue their functions, and the burnt-offerings were to go on continuously and permanently. It is manifest that these prophecies were not fulfilled in Jesus. It is also manifest to us, in the nineteenth century after Jesus, that they have never been fulfilled at all. And another thing is equally manifest; namely, that Isaiah and Jeremiah had not the least idea of such a Messiah as "Orthodox" Christians now claim, one whose death by crucifixion was to supersede and abolish the sacrificial observances conducted by priests and Levites in the temple.

Please observe, reader, that just as surely as Isaiah and Jeremiah predicted a Deliverer, just so surely they predicted that he should be a lineal descendant of David, and should sit on David's throne, executing judgment and justice in such manner that the people of Israel and Judah should dwell safely and permanently in their own land, the land of Palestine. Just so surely, also, they predicted that the burnt-offerings and other sacrifices of the temple should permanently continue to be offered by the Jewish priests and Levites.

THE JEWS, BELIEVING THEIR PROPHETS INFALLIBLY INSPIRED, REALLY EXPECTED SUCH A DELIVERER AS THEY PREDICTED.

Although centuries had passed by since these prophecies were uttered and recorded, leaving the Jews still governed by a foreign power, with no indication of the predicted Deliverer, the Jews still assumed so confidently that he would come that, whenever any one among them showed signs of eminent greatness or goodness, the question immediately arose, Was not he the Messiah? The powerful preaching of John the Baptist caused this question to be raised about him. But when it was asked of him, he promptly disclaimed that character. Andrew, one of John's disciples, seems to have been the first who conjectured that Jesus might be the expected Deliverer. Philip shortly came to the same conclusion, and said to his friend Nathanael, "We have found him of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph." Nathanael doubted of this at first, on account of his prejudice against Nazareth. But, going to see Jesus, the interview impressed him so much that he exclaimed, "Rabbi, thou art the son of God; thou art the King of Israel!"

A KING WHO SHOULD BE ALSO A DELIVERER, BEING THE THING PREDICTED, WAS THE THING EXPECTED.

In the minds of these Jews, the right to be acknowledged and received as King was a necessary consequence, and the very first consequence, of acknowledged Messiahship. That the apostles themselves were all the time expecting a manifestation of temporal power, and wondering why Jesus did not assume the throne and drive out the Roman Governor, is shown by the questions which they from time to time addressed to him during his life, and by the disappointment which they manifested at and after his crucifixion.

NEW TESTAMENT EVIDENCE IN REGARD TO THIS EXPECTATION.

It is so important to be assured of precisely what this Jewish expectation was, in relation to the question whether Jesus was the true fulfilment of it, that I will here present some of the New Testament evidence upon that matter. I begin with the account (written thirty years or more after the death of Jesus) of what expectations were said to have been entertained in regard to him before his birth.

MESSIAH, SITTING ON THE THRONE OF DAVID, WAS TO REIGN FOREVER OVER THE HOUSE OF JACOB.

Luke (i., 31-33) gives the following as the current report of an announcement to Mary by the angel Gabriel before the birth of Jesus: "Thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David. And he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

Luke also reports (i., 68-72) a thanksgiving said to have been offered by Zecharias, the father of John the Baptist, in view of an expected birth of the Messiah from Mary, as follows: "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel; for he hath visited and redeemed his people, and hath raised up a horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David, as he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been since the world began; that we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us, to perform the mercy promised to our fathers."

MESSIAH MUST BE (1) IN THE LINE OF DAVID, AND (2) MUST RULE ISRAEL, (3) SITTING ON THE THRONE OF DAVID.

Let it be noted here that the carpenter Joseph (whose son Philip assumed Jesus to be, John i., 45) is expressly declared by Luke (i., 27), and also in the genealogies reported in the Gospels of Matthew and Luke, to have been "of the house of David." So that, if Jesus was really the son of Joseph, he fulfilled the first of the conditions of Messiahship; and those who supposed him to be truly the Messiah predicted would naturally look next for his assumption of the kingdom, preparatory to expulsion of the Roman oppressors. That they did look for this as the test of Messiahship, there is abundant evidence, as follows:—

PROOF OF THE EXPECTATION THAT MESSIAH WOULD RULE AS KING.

John says (i., 49) that the salutation of Nathanael to Jesus, as soon as he was convinced of his Messiahship, was, "Rabbi, thou art the son of God; thou art the king of Israel."

John also tells us (vi., 15) that certain of the people, very early in the ministry of Jesus, were disposed "to take him by force, to make him a king."

The mother of James and John, in their presence, assuming it as certain that Jesus was to be King of the Jews, made this request of him (Matt. xx., 21): "Grant that these my two sons may sit, the one on thy right hand and the other on the left, in thy kingdom."

Still more decisive is the testimony of two of the evangelists, that Jesus expressly promised political distinction and advancement to the apostles. Matthew tells us (xix., 27, 28) that Peter, speaking for the twelve, said to Jesus, "Behold, we have forsaken all and followed thee; what shall we have therefore?" And Jesus said unto them, "Verily, I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." And Luke (xxii., 28-30) reports Jesus as declaring, without any question on their part, "Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations; and I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel."

The Hebrew confidence in the predictions of their prophets concerning the permanence of Messiah's earthly kingdom is shown in the reply made to the intimation of Jesus that he was to be "lifted up" (John xii., 34). The people answered him, "We have heard out of the law that Christ abideth forever; and how sayest thou, The Son of Man must be lifted up?"

This expectation of the earthly kingdom showed itself in Judas also (not Iscariot), when, in reply to the promise of Jesus that he "would manifest himself" to those of them who "kept his commandments," Judas asked (John xiv., 22), "Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world?" No private manifestation could be received as realizing the Messianic idea.

THE CLAIM OF KINGSHIP NECESSARILY INCLUDED IN THE CLAIM OF MESSIAHSHIP.

In the accounts given by every one of the evangelists respecting the seizure, trial, and execution of Jesus, it plainly appears that the claim of Kingship necessarily included in the claim of Messiahship was the crime alleged against him, and the effective cause of his condemnation. The elders, chief priests, and scribes accused him saying, "We found this fellow perverting the nation and forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar, saying that he himself is Christ, a king. And Pilate asked him, saying, Art thou the King of the Jews?" Afterwards, while he was hanging on the cross, the soldiers mocked him, saying, "If thou be the King of the Jews, save thyself." Moreover, Pilate having placed on the cross the inscription, "Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews," the chief priests said to Pilate, "Write not, the King of the Jews; but that he said, I am King of the Jews."

THE JEWS HATED JESUS PRECISELY BECAUSE HE WAS NOT A KING.

The animus of the two parties to this transaction is perfectly clear from the foregoing. Pilate wished to release Jesus because he had neither raised, nor was inclined to raise, any rebellion against Cæsar. However he might use the words "king" and "kingdom," he was evidently only a teacher, not an insurgent chief; and so not dangerous, from the Roman point of view. The Jews, whose ideas of the Messiah had been formed by the predictions of their prophets, had a right to expect that whoever called himself the Christ would be an insurgent chief, and would lead them to successful battle, first with the Romans, and then with any other power which should contest their supremacy. Their rage against Jesus was because he called himself Christ without being either a king or a temporal deliverer. He certainly was not what the prophets had led them to expect in the Messiah; and the reception of him as Christ by the nation would have been the abandonment of all expectation of a real Deliverer, a victorious King, in the line of David.

THE DISCIPLES HELD THIS VIEW OF THE MESSIAHSHIP, EVEN AFTER THE DEATH OF JESUS.

That these ideas—an understanding that temporal kingship and rescue of the Jews from the Roman power were essential parts of the Messiah's function—remained with the disciples also, even after the death of Jesus as well as through his whole life, there are two sufficient testimonies.

Walking from Jerusalem to Emmaus, on the third day after the crucifixion, two of the disciples said, speaking of Jesus to a stranger whom they met, "We trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel." (Luke xxiv., 21.) Luke, also, thirty years at least after the death of Jesus, writing in Greece about the first doings of the apostles, and relating a report of an appearance of Jesus to them after his burial, tells us that the first thing they asked of him was, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?"

JESUS, THEN, DID NOT ACCOMPLISH, NOR EVEN UNDERTAKE, THE WORK ASSIGNED BY PROPHECY TO MESSIAH.

We have, then, the fact indisputably settled by New Testament evidence, that Jesus did not accomplish, nor even undertake, the chief works specified by the prophets as to be wrought by the Messiah, and the very things for which the Jews, including the apostles and early disciples, desired the coming of a Messiah. Not only was Jesus not the deliverer of the Jews from Gentile oppression, not the King sitting on the throne of David, and so ruling as to secure to the Jews a permanent, peaceful residence in Palestine, not the perpetuator of the temple worship, the sacrificial offerings, and the perpetual ministration of Jewish priests and Levites, as Jeremiah and other prophets distinctly declared that the Messiah should be,—but he was not even in the line of David (a point on which prophecy was decided and unanimous), unless he was the son of Joseph.

JESUS NOT IN THE LINE OF DAVID, UNLESS HE WAS THE SON OF JOSEPH.

Joseph was a son of David, plainly so declared by two genealogical tables, and by several express assertions of the evangelists. A son of Joseph, therefore, would of course possess this first of the qualifications for Messiahship. But the very people who are now so strenuous to have Jesus called "Christ" (or the Lord's Anointed) are equally strenuous in denying that Joseph was his father. They quote Scripture in evidence of a different paternity; but Scripture here, as in many other cases, is divided against itself.

SCRIPTURE TESTIMONY THAT JESUS WAS THE SON OF JOSEPH.

Luke says (ii., 41), after speaking of the growth and promise of the child Jesus, "his parents went to Jerusalem every year at the feast of the Passover."

Luke further tells us (ii., 48), when, after vainly searching elsewhere, they returned to Jerusalem and found Jesus in the temple, that Mary said to him in the presence of Joseph, "Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us? Behold, thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing."

Mary certainly knew who the father of Jesus was; and she here tells us that it was Joseph.

Note also the following piece of highly significant negative evidence: When to the question and reproof of his mother above mentioned, Jesus answered, "How is it that ye sought me? Wist ye not that I must be about my father's business?" Luke tells us, "They understood not the saying which he spake unto them." This saying would necessarily have been perfectly clear to both Mary and Joseph had they known that this precocious child was begotten without a human father. It could be obscure only on the supposition (no doubt the correct supposition) that Joseph was the father of Jesus.

JESUS, THOUGH IN THE LINE OF DAVID, DID NOT FULFIL THE OTHER CONDITIONS OF MESSIAHSHIP.

If Jesus, being descended from David through

Joseph, had fulfilled the remaining conditions of Messiahship, if he had assumed the throne and driven out Pilate and Herod and the Roman force, and protected the Israelites in a peaceful and prosperous residence in Palestine to the present day, continuing also the sacrificial services of priests and Levites in the temple to the present day, he would have done just what the Hebrew prophets predicted that Messiah would do. As Jesus has not done these things, nor any one of them, why is he now called "Christ"?

We have seen why the apostles began to apply the title "Christ" to Jesus, and why they continued it during his career as a public teacher. It was because as long as he lived they had never been able to relinquish the expectation that he would be such a Messiah as their prophets had foretold. But why did they continue to apply that title to him after he had left the earth without taking any such position?

DID JESUS HIMSELF ASSUME THAT TITLE?

If we may trust the accuracy of narratives written so long after the facts as those given us by the four Evangelists, Jesus did, sooner or later in his ministry, accept the designation of "Messiah" or "Christ" which was thrust upon him by so many of his hearers; did acquiesce in its correctness; did allow them to suppose that he really held that office. Portions of these same narratives seem inconsistent with this theory; for instance, the many places where Matthew, Mark, and Luke represent Jesus as saying, in reference to the ascription of Messiahship to him, "Tell no man;" "See that no man know it;" and the obscure language which he used on this subject, causing his hearers to exclaim, "How long dost thou make us to doubt? If thou be the Christ, tell us plainly;" and the frank declaration of Jesus himself, when asked by Pilate if he was a king, "My kingdom is not of this world." This last was a direct disclaimer of the office in question, for the Messiah's kingdom, according to the prophets, was to be of this world. Nevertheless, the testimony in other places is, that Jesus did allow this title to be given him; and, if he did so, of course his disciples would continue to claim it for him.

But, even were the testimony of the Gospels consistent with itself throughout upon this point, the very long interval between the preaching of Jesus and the record of it must throw much doubt upon the accuracy of the words and things recorded. Nobody pretends that these things were written down sooner than thirty years after their occurrence; and later critical researches make it probable that the interval in question was nearer a hundred years than thirty. But in either case, whether or not the recollection of eye-witnesses be combined in these narratives with current rumor and tradition, we can hardly feel assured on such evidence, that Jesus claimed the title "Messiah" without fulfilling the function belonging to it. Is it probable that he even accepted it, while intending to pursue, as he actually did pursue, a career utterly at variance with the chief requisitions of Messianic prophecy, utterly at variance both with what the prophets wrote, and what the Hebrew people understood them to mean? As Jesus has never been, in any sense, King of the Jews, so he has never been in any sense the Messiah of Hebrew prophecy. Since he did not sit on the throne of David, nor deliver the Jews from their oppressors, nor rule them in the land of Palestine either temporally or spiritually; since his life, in the Messianic aspect, ended in defeat; and since the promises and hopes in regard to a second coming have not been fulfilled,—the name "Messiah," or "Christ," applied to Jesus is both inaccurate and delusive. We have yet to inquire, however, why the apostles and disciples continued, after his crucifixion, to give him this name.

WHY DID THEY CONTINUE TO CALL HIM "CHRIST"?

We find in sundry of the epistles, and in the Acts of the Apostles and the Book of Revelation, abundant evidence respecting the eleven and the other disciples, to the following effect: that, in spite of the failure of their long-cherished expectations, they accepted the reports of the resurrection and ascension of Jesus as sufficient warrant for continuing to recognize him as God's special messenger, and for continuing to follow and to propagate his doctrine. Moreover, they themselves, as well as the Jewish people to whom they were primarily to preach the new doctrine, had always thought and spoken of him who was to be the last and greatest of God's messengers to their nation as "the Messiah" or "the Christ." It was perfectly natural, therefore, as well as indispensable for the gaining of proselytes from Judaism, that they should continue to call Jesus "the Christ," even while they were preaching a kingdom of heaven as free to Gentiles as to Jews, instead of that special exaltation of Judaism which the Messiah of prophecy was to have accomplished by the sword. In reality, the doctrine of Jesus (a substitution of two great commandments for the many injunctions and prohibitions of "the law," and a substitution of "worship in spirit and in truth" for the whole system of holy places and ritual observances) was very far better than a fulfilment of the Messianic prophecies would have been. The apostles, then, were right in accepting and preaching that doctrine, though they were wrong in calling its author the Messiah.

RESULTS OF OUR INQUIRY.

I have given above, I think, full proof from Scripture that the three chief items of prophetic announcement concerning a Messiah were not fulfilled in Jesus.

He did not occupy the throne of David, as King of the Jews.

He did not deliver the children of Israel from oppression by other nations.

He did not enable them to dwell peacefully and permanently in their own land.

Of course, as long as the Jews continued to believe their prophets inspired by the God of Israel to utter the promises hereinbefore quoted, they would expect a Messiah yet to come, and they would not accept in his stead one who, like Jesus, failed to occupy Messiah's true position.

Since it is plain that Jesus did not fulfil the chief elements of the Messianic function as described in Hebrew prophecy, why should we continue to apply to him an erroneous epithet, propagating thereby an erroneous idea? Should even our veneration for the apostles lead us to follow them in what are now proved to have been mistakes and delusions? We see that they expected a visible second coming of Jesus in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory, while they were yet in bodily life. We admit that in that point they were in error. Why should we follow them in this other error?

Why should we apply to Jesus the epithet "Christ"? FRAMINGHAM, Mass.

THE TWO ROMAN CATHOLICISMS IN FRANCE.

[BY THE ABBE MICHAUD.]

Although the Old Catholics of France, in the year 1872, announced that they no longer formed part of the Roman Catholic, but only of the Christian Catholic Church, nevertheless there are in France now, as elsewhere, two Roman Catholicisms: one which spurns Liberalism in every shape, and another which wishes for a reconciliation with Liberalism. The latter, Liberal Romanism, if we may so name it (though the terms seem to be in conflict), has ever been condemned by the Roman Curia and by the Popes. It was against this faction that Gregory XVI., in 1832, fulminated his Encyclical Mirari vos, and Pius IX. his Syllabus, in 1864. And ever since Pius IX. has never ceased, whether in his public speeches or in his briefs, from condemning not only that Liberalism which calls itself anti-Catholic, but even that which styles itself Roman Catholic.

This antagonism of pure Romanism and Liberal Romanism has in France attained the last degree of violence. We have judged it advisable to relate briefly the doings of these two factions which call each other brethren, and rend one another like the most rancorous enemies. In no other way can one get so clear an idea of the decay of Roman Catholicism of France.

This recent outbreak of hostilities is connected with the names of de Montalembert and Augustin Cochin. On October 13, 1862, in the chapel of M. de Montalembert's chateau, at Roche-en-Brenil, M. de Falloux preached a sermon whose keynote was the celebrated formula, "A free Church in a free State." On this occasion, Montalembert, de Falloux, Foisset, and Cochin renewed the covenant they had made to fight for God and for liberty. M. de Broglie, though absent, was in spirit present with his friends. As a memorial of this covenant, a commemorative inscription was graven on the interior wall of the chapel.

M. Veuillot, the lay head of pure Romanism in France, having been informed of this inscription, assailed it as smacking of heresy, and in particular attacked Bishop Dupanloup. One of the Bishop's vicars-general, the Abbé Lagrange, defended his master in an article which he published in Le Correspondant, entitled "A Page from the Life of Montalembert." A fanatical ultramontane, the Abbé Morel, made a reply, and showed that, according to the accepted principles of Roman Catholicism, the doctrines of Dupanloup and his so-called liberal school were heretical. Dupanloup, wounded to the quick, pronounced Veuillot and the Univers infamous liars.

De Falloux also entered the lists, and published a Life of Augustin Cochin, in which he set forth Liberal Romanism as being worthy of all honor, and even as being the genuine Roman Catholicism. He displayed a considerable degree of ingenuity in his endeavor to harmonize his doctrines with the condemnations of the Syllabus and the new dogmas of the Council of the year 1870. The Abbé Morel refuted him, as he had refuted the Abbé Lagrange and Bishop Dupanloup. His work, entitled Sequel of the Inscription of Roche-en-Brenil; or, Proofs of the Existence and Organization of the Liberal Catholic Faction in France, resulted in an interchange of very passionate letters between him and M. de Falloux. Then for some time there was a calm.

But now there has lately appeared in the Osservatore Romano a very flattering notice of M. de Falloux's book on Augustin Cochin. Inasmuch as that journal is in a certain way connected with the Roman Curia, the Liberal Romanists of France recognize herein a sort of triumph for their side. The Français, which is the organ of Bishop Dupanloup and the Prince de Broglie, is loud in its praise of the article in the Osservatore, which conveniently overlooks the Pope's briefs condemnatory of Liberal Catholicism. The Univers and the other organs of pure Romanism hold that Domenico Venturini, who wrote the article in the Osservatore Romano, is a nobody. The Abbé Morel, whom the Pope has recently made a Consultor of the Congregation of the Index, has called the attention of that tribunal to M. de Falloux's book. Mgr. Treppel, Bishop of Angers (to which diocese both de Falloux and Morel belong), has used his best endeavors to bring the book under the notice of the Congregation of the Index. Veuillot calls Liberal Romanism a culex (flea); and it is plain that he is master of the situation. The condemnation of de Falloux's book is highly probable.

Another condemnation that is to be expected is that of the Abbé Lenoir, author of sundry dictionaries in the Theological Encyclopedia, published by the Abbé Migne. This venerable and learned ecclesiastic is at present engaged in republishing Bergier's Theological Dictionary; adding, however, new articles, which extend the work to twelve volumes, while the original edition consisted only of six. The new articles lean rather to Liberal than to Romanist views. The Abbé Lenoir has practised a sort of jugglery on the new dogmas, interpreting them as Dupanloup did the Syllabus. This jugglery has been noticed by a Camerlingo of the Pope, and he has denounced the work to the Congregation of the Index. Before that court Lenoir has no chances of success.

It is worthy of mention that on the 15th of February last, Pius IX. addressed to the faithful of the Diocese of Angers (to which de Falloux belongs) a brief, in which the Liberal Romanists are represented as deceivers, "whose crafty and honeyed speeches are to be shunned." In our opinion, when Venturini praised de Falloux's book, he did but pour oil upon the fire, to increase the blaze, and to necessitate the intervention of the Congregation of the Index. The condemnation of M. de Falloux by Rome would not force that gentleman into rebellion. By his outward submission to the dogmas of 1870, he showed that he is just the man to acquiesce in a condemnation by the Index. And M. de Falloux once put down by a condemnation pronounced by the Index, the feeble faction of Liberal Catholics would be utterly routed, and could never again reassemble. Dupanloup would accept his own condemnation without a word of complaint; the Correspondent and the Français would vegetate in well-deserved humiliation; and the Romanists proper would be masters of the situation everywhere.

But perhaps Rome would not care to strike down five or six men who are no longer of much account in public life, and who must soon die, together with their doctrines. When de Falloux, de Broglie, and Dupanloup are gone, who is left then to lead the remnant of their party? Men like Armand de l'Ariège, Frédéric Passy, and Garcin de Tassy have long been voiceless, and have allowed Rome to do as she pleased. Where, then, would be the use of giving notoriety to a couple of newspapers and a dozen writers, who are harmless by their silence, or ridiculous for their lack of logic or of character? In fact, no one can read the works of Dupanloup and de Falloux without noticing the straits they are in to reconcile their Liberalism with their Romanism. They themselves, no less than the public, see that they reason falsely, and that they violate the first principles of Romanist logic and theology. If they defend their theses, they do so only because they lack courage, and because they fear the thunders of the Vatican. Such weakness and want of logical consistency earn for them only contempt on all sides. They are despised by strict Romanists, who treat them as heretics on account of their liberalism; and they are despised by the Liberals on account of their Romanism. Montalembert in 1870 broke away from them, protesting against "the inconceivable weakness of the moderate and rational Catholics of our day, in presence of the shameless excesses of the dominant party." What would Montalembert say now, were he to see how these men betray both the Church and the cause of liberalism?

Whatever may be the attitude of the Index toward M. de Falloux, and consequently toward the little faction of Liberal Romanists, it is certain that the latter are steadily losing ground. There exists in France an association of "Catholic Committees," so called. Every year these Romanist Committees hold a convention. In the convention which met in April, 1875, the ultra-Romanist faction had everything in their own way. A Jesuit, Father Marguigny, presented and read to the meeting an essay on "The Syllabus and the Press," which was much applauded. In 1873 these Catholic committees had lauded "the great and outspoken Syllabus," as being "the rule of all social duty and of all individual duty." Now they are more explicit. Not only do they complain that the Syllabus has been misunderstood, mistranslated, and falsely expounded—thus condemning the liberal interpretation of the document by Dupanloup,—they go so far as to insist upon the necessity of inculcating such doctrines of pure Romanism as that "liberty of conscience and of worship is not a right pertaining to every man, to be recognized by the law, and guaranteed in every well-constituted society." According to them, "it is absolutely false that the liberty of speech and of the press is a natural and indefeasible right." Such declarations as these are a formal condemnation of the most essential principles of all modern society. It is easy to see what these Romanists are aiming at. They wish to impose the Syllabus upon France, as the charter of Christian liberty; to do away with freedom of worship; to have a new press-law enacted, which shall favor only the interests of Romanism. Whatever is not Romanism is, in their eyes, "civilized barbarism." Accordingly, says Father Marguigny, "sympathy and pecuniary aid are to be extended only to those publications which keep ever in view the teachings of the Holy See, and which always defend the Syllabus." The Archbishop of Paris attended this convention, and entertains exactly the same views. It is interesting to compare these declarations, which Rome secretly inspires, with recent declarations of Archbishop Manning. That new Cardinal has said that were the Catholics in power in England they would not pass any laws against the enemies of Romanism. This declaration was prompted by the man's kindly disposition; but it is flatly contradicted by the actions of all the highest Romanist authorities. Both in England and in the United States, Liberal Romanism will before long be nothing but a meaningless expression.—N. Y. Independent.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES.

When it was announced, some months ago, that Pius IX., breaking at length the sullen silence of "the captivity," had determined to create five new princes of the Church, the names of the future cardinals were scanned with much interest; for they showed to what quarters the papacy in its hour of trial was stretching out its hands for help. The Italian "Eminences," indeed, were chosen to sustain a tradition of papal policy; but Cardinal Manning, Cardinal Ledochowski, and Cardinal McCloskey represented in different forms the determination of Rome to recruit and to rally her forces in the very camp of her deadliest foes. Dr. Manning had earned his promotion by his conflict with the Protestantism of his native land; Archbishop Ledochowski by his opposition to the assertion of the supreme authority of the State in Prussia. But the devotion which was rewarded in these prelates was a virtue barren, save to the eye of faith, of appreciable results. Archbishop McCloskey, of New York, was chosen for honor because he stood at the head of a vast organization of the Roman Catholic Church, the resources of which, undervalued and hardly understood hitherto by the powers that rule at Rome, have come to be known, and prized, and made the foundation of towering hopes. Half the Old World has been lost to the Church; and of the remaining part that still holds formally to its allegiance many sections are mined by scepticism, or shaken by discontent. But if the Old World be lost, may not the New be gained? It is at least possible that this is the inner thought of Rome in these dark days. The destinies of the human race seem to move westward; and in a relative sense, if not absolutely, the star of America waxes as that of Europe wanes. But if a century hence the Western Continent will outweigh in wealth and power the divided societies of Europe, will not the dominion of the younger civilization compensate for the loss of authority over the original empire of the Church? The beginnings of the conquest have been made, and the campaign is carried on with energy, subtlety, and perseverance. If Rome is to profit by these enterprises, she must encourage her champions with approving notice, and dignify them, alike in the sight of followers and foes, with appropriate rewards.

Thus it comes to pass that at length the spiritual adolescence of Catholic America is recognized by the papacy. The bestowal of a cardinal's hat on the Archbishop of New York is not simply a token of the papal gratitude for individual services; it rewards a powerful reinforcement, now, for the first time, formally arrayed among the champions of the Holy See. In this sense it is understood in America, and, though Rome is reticent by habit, her actions make confession of her objects. The growth of the Roman Catholic faith on the American Continent, not only in the countries where it was planted by Spanish colonists and by others of the Latin races, but in the very heart of the society which boasts of its Anglo-Saxon individualism, is a remarkable fact, but it is not a novel one. The novelty is that Rome has recognized it with every sign of delight and hope. Twenty years ago, when the Roman Catholic Church was fighting its way vigorously against formidable enemies in the United States; when the continuous influx of Irish immigrants alarmed the States of the Atlantic seaboard as much as the Chinese immigration has surprised and embarrassed the Pacific States; when "Know-nothingism," a mere outburst of sullen and jealous bigotry, was raised to the rank of a political creed,—the Court of Rome would have scouted the notion of looking for aid, save in that humble pecuniary form in which aid is always acceptable to it, from its spiritual subjects in America. The followers of the Church in that distant world were to hear and obey when Rome spoke; but that they should influence Roman policy, should be represented in the Sacred College, should be directly governed by a prince of the Church,—these were pretensions utterly inadmissible. The Holy Father, if he no longer set his foot on the neck of secular sovereigns, still leaned on emperors, and was courted by kings. The Great Powers of the European Continent competed for the honor of protecting him, and though the yoke of their protection sometimes pressed heavy in the form of influence, the pressure was not manifest. Implicated in these monarchical relations, enthroned on a vast and compact system of Ecclesiastical Establishments, the Holy See was disdainful of mere republicans, who could promise no intervention of diplomatists or armies, and whose religious endowments consisted solely in voluntary gifts. But the whole scheme of policy constructed by the sacerdotal statesmen of the Vatican after the events of 1849 has in our days crumbled to atoms. The Pope has ceased to be a temporal ruler; the empires upon which he leaned have withdrawn their supporting hands,—the one fatally weakened, the other no longer loyal. But the strength of the Church in the West has gone on increasing, and its possibilities of growth now fill the minds of the devoted Romanists with splendid imaginations of victory. To bring the official chief of a hierarchy from whom so much is expected within the innermost circle of the papal polity is, as the Roman Curia now perceives, not only advisable, but inevitable. So Archbishop McCloskey, an American of Irish descent, has been, to the delight of all the Roman Catholics of North America, raised to the Cardinalate. He is now on his way to Rome to be admitted to his new dignity by the Pope himself, and he brings with him an "offering of gratitude and sympathy" from the faithful in New York; which, besides a solid contribution of some twenty thousand pounds sterling, includes an address describing the enormous progress of Catholic doctrine among the people of the United States.

We do not doubt that a greater part of these boasts is true, or that the hopes based upon them may be, to some extent, well founded. The papacy is resolved, as it appears, to establish closer relations than those of mere homage and condescension with its multitudinous and wealthy subjects beyond the Atlantic. This fact is demonstrated not only by the elevation of Archbishop McCloskey to the highest rank in the Church below the Chair of St. Peter itself, but by the report current at Rome that Monsignore Roncetti, who was lately sent to New York to present the Archbishop with the berretta, "will be appointed to a high ecclesiastical dignity in America." In truth, the course of events on the other side of the Atlantic is well worth observing; and if Rome had been accustomed to study popular movements as she has been used to watch the policies of the courts, she would long ago have done what she is doing now. In all the countries of the American Continent there is already a numerous and powerful Roman Catholic population; and nowhere, except, perhaps, in Brazil, has the supremacy of Popedom been threatened as it has been in every part of Europe. The Spanish-American Republics will never be of much account in the world; but, such as they are, they are true to Rome. The descendants of the French settlers in Canada and in Louisiana are equally loyal and equally useless as allies. But the great English speaking communities of the Continent, and especially the United States, inherit the destinies of America. Is it, then, certain that, as Rome now believes, the Catholic Church will extend its dominion, and flourish under new conditions among the people of the United States? The problem is a difficult one, for there are opposing forces at work; and the triumph of Catholicism, were it as complete as the papacy anticipates, would involve the defeat and destruction of that spirit of individualism which is characteristic of the English race in every land, and which has nowhere asserted itself more vigorously than in the Federal Union. On the other hand, the forces working for the Roman Church are both strong and ingeniously directed. The Irish immigration has poured some four millions of Catholic Celts into the Union, and the descendants of the earlier exiles who have preserved their faith possibly number as many more. This vast mass, it is melancholy to confess, is for the most part at the lowest level of intelligence. The Irish, unlike the English, the Scotch, and the German immigrants, herd together in the large cities, and are there subject to sacerdotal discipline. They move at command, and in a body, and their influence in politics is out of proportion even to their large numbers. In many of the towns they are dominant in local affairs, and wherever this happens there are attempts, sometimes in part successful, to secure an indirect endowment for the Church of Rome. But it is not alone on the ponderous body of superstitious zeal which the Irish immigration has placed at the command of the Church that Cardinal McCloskey and his fellow-workers rely. At all the centres of American society they carry on an untiring and not fruitless propaganda. In a democratic community the baldness of life becomes very apparent to the rich and idle; and as social distinctions are few and uncertain, the attractions of a creed which carefully cultivates the æsthetic side of religion, and which claims the inheritance of a grand historical tradition, are almost irresistible to a large class of minds. In every society there are those "faint hearts and feeble wings that every sophister can lime"; and in America, where, in spite of the diffusion of elementary education, a high and thoughtful culture is rare, the same influences which here tempt many to the distractions of ritualistic vanities, or even across the border-land, are very potent with a certain superfine class who would gladly ape the externals of an aristocracy. Rome, then, may hope to command the masses in the United States by her power over Irish superstition, and to win the allegiance of a section of the wealthier class by the splendor of her ritual, and the immensity of her pretensions. Will this be enough to make her in the course of years the dominant influence in America? We believe it will not; for, strong as the forces on her side may be, the strength of manly and intelligent individuality, nowhere wanting among men of English blood, is, we are convinced, greater, healthier, and more enduring.—London Times, Sept. 7.

THE CATHOLIC DANGER.

ENON VALLEY, Pa., Aug. 19, 1875.

ED. ARGUS AND RADICAL:—

I have read with much interest your article in the last Argus and Radical, entitled "Danger from Catholicism." But are you right in the position you have taken? The remarkable movement organized by the Catholic Church in the United States is not so much against Protestantism as against the free principles of the National Constitution. Taking advantage of the peculiarity of our republican government, that law is only the expression of the will of the majority of the people, the priesthood hope, by encouraging Catholic immigration, and by stimulating the fecundity of Catholic mothers already in this country, ultimately and before long to obtain a majority of votes; and thus modify the Constitution and laws, and make both subservient to the Pope of Rome as a temporal prince. This scheme is so high-handed that many persons do not believe it is sincerely advocated. But the Vatican Decrees demand of every Catholic allegiance to the Church first, and his country afterwards. Some few English Catholics have expressed dissent to this claim, much to the disgust of Cardinal Manning, who is said to be heir-apparent to the Popedom when the next vacancy shall occur. We might as well, however, take the Catholics at their word. They claim that the Pope as the Vicegerent of Almighty God on the earth has a right to subject all human governments to his authority, and to put down all other religions. Hence the trouble in the German Empire where Bismarck resists this claim. And hence also the alarm among our own people.

But it is a peculiarity which few of our countrymen know, and which all ought to know, that America still lying "in partibus infidelium"—in the regions of the infidels,—the bishops of the Church have vastly more power over the priests and private members than they have in Italy or any other country where the Catholic religion is established and supported by law. European governments whose breasts suckle the Church claim and exercise the right, in consideration of the milk they give, to have a say in the Church's affairs. But in this country the Catholic bishops are amenable to no laws, and, being missionary bishops, exercise a right over Catholic persons and consciences that would not be tolerated in Europe. Their policy seems to be to combine and isolate their people politically and socially, as if they had in view an enterprise that would require their force to act as an unit. Hence Catholic temperance societies, musical associations, and schools are designed to prevent their people from mingling with their fellow-citizens, lest they suffer from the contact, and become Americanized instead of Romanized.

I think you greatly err in arraying the Protestant feeling against the Catholic. This would make the coming war a religious one; and the bloodiest and most revengeful of all wars, as history shows, are those prompted by religion,—not the Christian religion as taught and illustrated in its beautiful simplicity by Christ himself, and as consisting solely in love to God and love to man, but the religion of some church or other, which, in order to hold exclusively the keys of the kingdom of heaven, would extirpate all the rest. For God's sake, Mr. Editor, do not wake up the spirit of religious persecution! Other wars end, and the wounds they make heal over; but religious wars never end and never heal. The Orangeman of to-day flaunts his yellow flag as ferociously as he did at first; and the Catholic of to-day hates the tune of "Boone Water" as bitterly as ever. We are on the eve of a mighty struggle with the Church of Rome. Let it be a bloodless one—a war of opinions and votes, in which types will figure instead of colonels and major-generals. In drawing up our line of battle against this foreign enemy who has lorded it over all Europe for ages, and who now comes here to put Americans under like subjection, let us choose our ground circumspectly. If we fight as Protestants, we fight to lose, and the Catholics fight to win; for the Catholics are an unit in every sense of the word, while the Protestants, numbering some hundreds of sects, are as separate and apart from each other as so many grains of wheat in a bushel. Do not imagine that a sense of common danger would unite the Protestant churches. If a recollection of the dying prayer of Jesus, "That they all may be one," would not unite the score and more of the members of the Presbyterian family which all bottom on the Westminster Confession of Faith, how vain to look for a union of sects that have been and are still theologically at daggers' points, in a war against the Catholics! They would quarrel for pre-eminence on the very battle field, and the enemy would chase their broken columns like sheep.

Mr. Editor, we shall be invincible in the coming struggle with the Church of Rome only when we fight in our citizen capacity for the Constitution, laws, and educational policy of the United States against the foreign and domestic enemy. On this ground all Protestant sects can unite, as we did against the slave-holder's rebellion, not as Protestants but as citizens—Americans who love their country, and are bound to redeem the pledge their fathers made in 1776, that it should be to the end of time the home of human freedom. And this ground can be taken by that large number of people who are outside of all churches, but who have no interest in the struggle if you make it only a war for pre-eminence among the religious sects. This class composes the majority of American voters, whose only interest is to make the decree of the Constitution irrevocable that the government of the United States is a secular institution, and has nothing to do with the Church except to let it alone. These people feel, and you feel with them, that, so far as the belief in religious dogmas goes, the Catholics have equal rights under the government with the Methodist, the Mohammedan, the Presbyterian, and the Chinese Buddhist. While they reject all these religions for themselves, they would defend to the death the right of each human being to believe or not to believe as he pleases. Our Constitution, while it ignores all religions whatsoever, protects all religionists in the enjoyment of their rights, and completely secularizes the government. And it is because the Church of Rome wishes to seize the government, and make it a mere tool to accomplish her purposes, that you can calculate on the cooperation of these men to prevent so great a calamity to the rights of human nature.

While it must be admitted that the Democratic party has been and still is the ally of the Catholic Church, when the time comes for every man to show his colors, there are thousands in that party whose patriotism will lead them to leave it instantly, and range themselves in line with the defenders of their country. They did this in 1861, when the people in their majesty rose to put down the slave-holder's rebellion. In this new Popish attack upon the government and Constitution there will be another august rising of the people to beat down the Jesuitical hordes of a foreign power, and send them howling back to Rome.

I rejoice, Mr. Editor, that the Catholic controversy is coming on, and that it is inevitable. I wish to know before I die whether our children are to enjoy the inheritance of civil and religious liberty bequeathed to them by their fathers at such untold expense, or are to become ignoble hewers of wood and drawers of water to that political organization called the Church of Rome. I would rather see all in whose veins my blood flows stark and cold in their coffins than live in a country cursed, as all others except our own have been, by a priestly government of bloodhounds, whose chief office would be to preserve uniformity of faith by chasing "heretics" to prison and to death. But there is no danger if we do two things: first, to wage the war against the Vatican claims upon citizen ground, instead of appealing to religious sectarian hatred in which the majority of American people cannot join because they have no sectarian opinions or beliefs to promote; secondly, to send out the schoolmaster, by which I mean, to enlighten the people on the merits of the question by discussing it pro and con. Popular intelligence is death to the Church of Rome; and so is popular freedom. In Austria, France, the Swiss Cantons, Mexico, Central America, and wherever the Catholic Church has had supreme power, the people are ignorant, poor, degraded, and in bondage. She is afraid of science because science cuts up her pretensions by the roots, and makes of them a laughing-stock. Diffuse, then, knowledge among the people as God diffuses his atmosphere and blessed sunlight; for knowledge is the sure and safe remedy for superstition, and all the other diseases of the human soul.

In finishing this letter the thought just occurs to me that, in clearing the decks for action with the really dangerous power of Rome, we must not put a weapon in her hand, as some of our people have done, by undertaking to amend the Constitution by inserting a Protestant confession of faith in the preamble, "to be carried out by appropriate legislation." The Scotch Covenanters in this country and their dupes, who are engaged in this work, hold the same damnable heresy in regard to the powers of the civil magistrate circa sacra that the Church of Rome does. They got the doctrine from the Catholics, and, when they had the power in Scotland, enforced it as ruthlessly as ever the Catholics did. After a careful reading of Scotch history, I would just as soon live under the Spanish inquisition as under the regime that was established in Scotland during the reign of the Solemn League, and would be established in this country by the Religious Amendment men, if they were in power.

If, then, sauce for the goose should be also sauce for the gander, we cannot consistently declare defensive war against the politico-ecclesiastical power of Rome, unless we wash our hands of all participation in the insane scheme of the Solemn League and Covenant men who would convert the Constitution into a Protestant creed. A. B. BRADFORD.

THE GOLDEN RULE, AND THE RULE OF GOLD.

A few days ago a gentleman of this city received by mail a check for five hundred dollars. He deposited it in his bank, and went down into the street, there to be met by a rumor that sent him back in haste. Just twenty-five minutes had elapsed. The teller's little door was shut. The money was gone. Had it been stolen? Was the banker a swindler? No; he had failed.

About the same time, a merchant received a large quantity of goods one day near the close of business hours. He made some common-place excuse for not making immediate payment, and promised to send a check the next morning. The first announcement of the morning was, that he had failed. He had the goods, but the real owner was without his check. Was the merchant a thief? Ought he to have gone to jail? Not at all; he had merely suspended. He was unable to meet his obligations.

Two young men were recently brought into one of our police courts on a charge of stealing shoes from a Third Avenue store. They were decent in appearance, and it was believed by some that they had been driven to crime by want. Had they failed, or had they suspended? Or was it because they were unable to meet their obligations? Not at all. They were thieves, common thieves, very common thieves. They were sent to the penitentiary for two months. —N. Y. Tribune, Sept. 16.

THE OTHER day a Detroit mother poured some ink on the pantry shelf near the sugar box, and went up stairs, leaving her small son playing with the cat. When she came down the boy sat by the window, wearing a placid, innocent look, but there were ink-stains on his fingers. "There! you've been at the sugar!" she exclaimed as she seized him by the collar. "Mother, do you think I'd steal sugar?" "What made 'em?" "Those stains, mother?" "Yes, those stains." "Well, I cannot tell a bold lie, mother. I think I've commenced to mortify." She wasn't quite sure, and he was allowed to go out and play circus.

A WONDERFUL invention has been patented by the Victoria Printing Machine Company, in a machine which can turn out, ready for the reader, 4,000 copies of a work, containing twenty-four pages bound together, without any manipulative aid. The machine has cost about £4,000, and requires no "feeding," as it regulates its own supply, taking in a sheet at one end, and, in less than a second, ejecting it at the other, printed, and with the pages stitched together, and ready for the book-sellers.

A KING of Dahomey once attended a grand feast, wearing a quantity of druggist's labels as his only clothing.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

MONA MOORE.

Mona Moore is gone—is dead,
And our village weeps to-day;
See the sad procession come,
Child, and youth, and matron gray,
Slowly, silent, weeping still,
From the graveyard on the hill.

Lily-like, her life was sweet;
Like a bird's, her work was done;
Without creed, or plan, or rule,
What she did was good alone.
This is how it did ensue:
Mona to herself was true.

Every home feels something lost;
And the children on the green
Their habitual play forsake,
And in groups, with mournful mien,
Tell the many good deeds o'er
Of the lost one, Mona Moore.

Deeds of love bear fruit for aye;
In the future harvests grand
Earth shall whitened from the seed
Planted by her gentle hand.
Mona, Mona, gone before,
Lost, yet living evermore.

F. H. G.

AVOCA, N. Y.

TEMPORA MUTANTUR.

BY JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

The world turns mild; democracy, they say,
Rounds the sharp knobs of character away;
And no great harm, unless at grave expense
Of what needs edge of proof, the moral sense;
For man or race is on the downward path
Whose fibre grows too soft for honest wrath,
And there's a subtle influence that springs
From words to modify our sense of things.
A plain distinction is observed of late:
Men, if they will, may pardon; but the State
Forgets its function if not fixed as Fate.
So thought our sires: a hundred years ago,
If men were knaves, why, people called them so,
And crime could see the prison-portal bend
Its brow severe at no long vista's end.
In those days for plain things plain words would serve;
Men had not learned to admire the graceful swerve
Wherewith the æsthetic Nature's genial mood
Makes public duty slope to private good;
No muddled conscience raised the saving doubt;
A soldier proved unworthy was drummed out;
An officer cashiered; a civil servant
(No matter though his piety were fervent)
Disgracefully dismissed; and through the land
Each bore for life a stigma from the brand,
Whose far-heard hiss made others more averse
To take the facile step from bad to worse.
The Ten Commandments had a meaning then
Felt in their bones by least considerate men,
Because behind them Public Conscience stood,
And without winning made their mandates good.
But now that "Statesmanship" is just a way
To dodge the primal curse and make it pay;
Since Office means a kind of patent drill
To force an entrance to the Nation's till,
And peculation something rather less
Risky than if you spelt it with an s;
Now that to steal by law is grown an art,
Whom rogues the sires, their milder sons call smart,
And "slightly irregular" dilutes the shame
Of what had once a somewhat blunter name,—
With generous curve we draw the moral line;
Our swindlers are permitted to resign;
Their guilt is wrapped in deferential names,
And twenty sympathize for one that blames.
Add national disgrace to private crime,
Confront mankind with brazen front sublime,
Steal but enough, the world is unsevered—
Tweed is a statesman, Fisk a financier;
Invent a mine and be—the Lord knows what,
Secure, at any rate, with what you've got.
The public servant who has stolen or lied,
If called on, may resign with honest pride:
As unjust favor put him in, why doubt
Disfavor as unjust has turned him out?
Even if indicted, what is that but fudge?
To him who counted in the elective judge?
Whitewashed, he quits the politician's strife
At ease in mind, with pockets filled for life:
His lady glares with gems whose vulgar blaze
The poor man through his heightened taxes pays,
Himself content if one huge Kohinoor
Bulge from a shirt-front ampler than before,—
But not too candid, lest it haply tend
To rouse suspicion of the People's Friend:
A public meeting, treated at his cost,
Resolves him back more virtue than he lost;
With character reguilt, he counts his gains;
What's gone was air, the solid good remains;
For what is good except what friend and foe
Seem both unanimous in thinking so,
The stocks and bonds which in our age of loans
Replace the stupid pagan's stocks and stones?
With choker white, wherein no cynic eye
Dares see idealized a hempen tie,
At parish-meetings he conducts in prayer,
And pays for missions—to be sent elsewhere;
On 'Change respected, to his friends endeared,
Add but a Sunday-school class, he's revered,
And his too early tomb will not be dumb
To point a moral for our youth to come.

—Nation.

CASH RECEIPTS.]

FOR THE WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 25.

J. A. J. Wilcox, $3.20; Frank J. Mead, $3; W. A. Croffat, $3; J. B. Barrett, $3; F. E. Bird, $2.20; B. Cobb, Jr., $3.20; E. M. Moore, $3.20; B. P. Beeson, $3.50; J. C. Allen, $1.20; H. C. Heberling, $5; A. W. Kelsey, $4.50; C. A. Greenleaf, $3; J. F. Ford, $10; W. J. Blinkhorn, $3.25; E. C. Alphonse, $3.20; R. Hassell, $3.20; J. Consalus, $3.20; G. E. Letcher, $3; Judson Culver, $1.50; E. S. Elders, $3.20; W. Ferguson, 20 cents; G. M. Lee, 25 cents; J. M. Day, $2; George Allen, $1.30; Mrs. Woodward, 50 cents; J. W. Griffin, $11.65; New England News Co., $23.64; R. S. McCormick, $5.25;

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

The Index.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 30, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANÇOIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), Editorial Contributors.

WITH PROFOUND regret we call attention to Mr. Stevens' valedictory article as associate editor of THE INDEX. For three years he has been our true-hearted companion and co-worker in editorial and office duties; for nearly fifteen years he has been a most highly respected and greatly valued personal friend; and it is with sadness and sorrow that we now look forward to toilsome days uncheered by his kindly presence, his cordial coöperation, and his ever-ready sympathy. It is utterly needless, yet it is his due, to say explicitly that his retirement is the result of necessity alone, and of nothing whatever that would, if stated, reflect in the least degree upon him as a man of unsullied probity, of rare purity of purpose, or of singularly conscientious performance. It is for no fault of his that we now lose his companionship in the service of the Index Association. The many able and admirable papers of greater or less length which he has contributed to these columns sufficiently testify to his qualifications for the editorial position he has filled, and have made him many a friend who will share our own regret in his retirement. On various religious, political, and social questions he and we have more or less differed in opinion; but he will bear us witness that on all such questions his freedom of utterance in THE INDEX has been as absolute and perfect as our own, and that no expression of this difference on either side has ever clouded the pleasantness or cordiality of our mutual relation. By his retirement, our responsibilities and labors will be painfully increased, while the social enjoyments that lightened them will be as painfully diminished. On behalf of the Index Association, of the wide circle of his admirers and friends among the readers of THE INDEX, and of him who now sadly bids a brave and true fellow-soldier good-by, let it be said with deep sincerity and honest grief to Abram Walter Stevens: "Farewell, and may our loss prove to be your own great gain!"

THE LIBERAL LEAGUE CONVENTION.

The Convention of Liberal Leagues met according to announcement at Philadelphia, on Friday afternoon, September 17, in Lincoln Hall. Four sessions were held, two being private and two public. There was no local advertisement whatever of the two business sessions on Friday and Saturday afternoons, and the attendance was naturally small, not exceeding fifty on either occasion; the presence of a miscellaneous public audience, attracted merely by curiosity or similar motives, would have obstructed the transaction of the important business for which the Convention was called together, and no provision could have been made for public addresses of a general character without serious interference with its practical objects. Two public advertised sessions, however, were held on Sunday forenoon and evening, at which the audiences numbered about two hundred and three hundred respectively, and manifested their interest and approval by hearty and repeated applause. It would have been a cause for satisfaction, if a larger number of Liberal Leagues had taken the trouble to be directly represented in the Convention; but most of those whose organization has been reported are located at a great distance from Philadelphia, and the dry and comparatively humble work of merely making preparations for a public convention next year could not be expected to induce many persons to incur the expense and fatigue of so long a journey. As it was, the Leagues at Philadelphia, Pa., Sauk City, Wis., Vineland, N. J.,

Minneapolis, Minn., Clearfield, Pa., Olathe, Kan., Boston, Mass., as well as the Freie Gemeinde of Philadelphia, were represented either by personal representatives or by letter. Soliciting special attention to the resolutions adopted, we submit the following as the official report of the Proceedings of the Liberal League Convention at Philadelphia.

Agreeably to the Call published in THE INDEX, the Convention of Delegates from Liberal Leagues, and of Liberals who sympathize with the movement they represent, met in Lincoln Hall, Philadelphia, on Friday, September 17, 1875, at 2 o'clock, P.M.

The Convention was called to order by John S. Dye, who called Carrie S. Burnham, President of the Philadelphia League, temporarily to the chair.

On motion of Damon Y. Kilgore, Mr. Dye was chosen temporary Secretary.

The credentials of delegates having been presented, Damon Y. Kilgore, Alexander Loos, and Parker Pillsbury were appointed a Committee on Permanent Organization, who reported Francis E. Abbot, of Boston, for permanent President, and Damon Y. Kilgore, of Philadelphia, for permanent Secretary; and these officers were unanimously elected.

On taking the chair, Mr. Abbot briefly stated the objects for which the Convention was called. He said that these objects were, first, to secure the extension and more thorough popular comprehension of the already verbally recognized national principle of purely secular government, or absolute separation of Church and State; secondly, to give definite and organized expression to the growing public sentiment in favor of the reform of the existing violations of this principle in the practical administration of the government, and to seek thereby to carry into a grander and higher fulfilment the national ideal of a republic founded exclusively on the rights of man; and, lastly, as a means to these great ends, to make the best possible arrangements for convening, at the National Centennial Exhibition of 1876, a general congress of all the Liberals of the country. He said that this movement was not a negative or destructive one, but positive and constructive in the truest sense of the words; that it was not aggressive against any class or classes of the people, but aimed to subserve the highest welfare of the people as a whole; that, although personally he was a non-Christian and anti-Christian, it was not a crusade against Christianity or any other form of religious faith, but rather an attempt to establish the equal rights of all religions by securing the absolute emancipation of them all from governmental control, persecution, or favoritism; that it was a movement of such vast inclusiveness as to deserve the support of all patriotic citizens who soberly and intelligently favor the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory; that this little gathering might yet prove the humble beginning of a great historic movement which should gain in strength and volume till it swept away all opposition to its just cause; and that this could scarcely fail to be the result, if the Liberals should now for a while resolutely ignore all side-issues and work persistently for the ABSOLUTE SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE.

On motion, Prof. Alexander Loos, Carrie S. Burnham, and John S. Dye were appointed a Committee on Resolutions.

Damon Y. Kilgore, Robert Wallin, and Christian F. Langefeld were chosen a Committee of Arrangements.

Extracts from sympathetic letters written by Samuel Widemire, President of the Clearfield (Pa.) Liberal League, Frank J. Mead, Secretary of the Minneapolis (Minn.) Liberal League, S. B. S. Wilson and Harriet C. Griffin, President and Secretary of the Olathe (Kan.) Liberal League, and others, were read to the Convention by the Secretary. A. Bronson Alcott, of Concord, Mass., one of the delegates of the Boston League, wrote as follows in explanation of his non-attendance: "Accept my thanks for the ticket to the Convention, which I very much regret I cannot attend. Family duties must detain me at home. I sympathize deeply in the labors of yourself and friends to enlighten the minds of your contemporaries and prepare them for confronting the enemies of free thought and free institutions—meeting the great issues that are fast pressing to their consummation. The Convention must do timely service for the more efficient prosecution of these issues by concerted measures. I shall look with hope and deep interest for your deliberations, and trust you will have secured full and faithful reports." Dr. S. M. Whistler, of New Kingston, Pa., wrote: "Unable to attend as an individual, I take this mode of making known my hearty approval of and deep interest in this movement. While not organized in the Cumberland Valley at this time, we are persistently working with this end in view, and hope to be in league with you through our authorized representatives at the Congress of 1876." Frank J. Mead wrote: "You will readily comprehend that Philadelphia is a long way from Minneapolis towards the rising sun. The distance, and hence the time and expense required to make the trip, will prevent our organization from being represented by delegates. But we are with you in spirit and sentiment. . . . In the Centennial Year we hope to have representatives with you. I am almost tempted to say that I will go myself rather than fail." Dr. S. B. S. Wilson wrote: "We have duly received your invitation to attend the National Convention of Liberal Leagues, and regret very much our inability to send delegates. . . . We believe that a sleepless vigilance and untiring watchfulness are peculiarly the needs of the hour, and that the lovers of truth and freedom should maintain an uncompromising and unyielding attitude in the contest which the plotters against our liberties are now invoking." Samuel Widemire wrote: "I hope the call will not be in vain. I hope your deliberations will result in much good. You wish our League to be represented. I should have been most happy to have had it so, but we labor under much difficulty, being few in number and widely scattered over the country. Our regular meetings are held on Monday evenings of the Courts of Quarter Sessions. The time is too limited to call a special meeting to appoint delegates to attend at that time."

The Committee on Resolutions made a report as follows, which was laid over for the next meeting:—

"Resolved, That the principle of the absolute separation of Church and State is the corner-stone of all civil and religious liberty, and the universally recognized foundation of the Constitution and Government of the United States.

"Resolved, That the exemption of church property from taxation; the support of chaplains by public funds; the direct or indirect appropriation of public money for sectarian purposes of any sort; the maintenance of religious services in public institutions, and especially the use of the Bible in the public schools; the appointment of fasts or thanksgivings by public authority; the use of the judicial oath instead of simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury; the existence and enforcement of laws for the public observance of Sunday as the Sabbath; the requirement of religious tests for office, suffrage, or naturalization,—all these and similar practices are in self-evident violation of the great national principle of the absolute separation of Church and State, and ought, therefore, to be totally discontinued.

"Resolved, That the evils here enumerated tend practically to the promotion of sectarian ambitions, jealousies, and plots; that they sow the seeds of disorder and disturbance of the public peace; that they cause great public injustice towards individuals; that they are a perpetual infringement of the rights of private conscience; and that they constitute collectively a great public grievance to all who believe in the separation of Church and State, and threaten serious danger to the future harmony and welfare of the whole republic.

"Resolved, That in particular the non-taxation of church property promotes the rapid accumulation of wealth and power in the hands of the Roman Catholic Church, and therefore directly fosters the development of an alien and formidable political power which openly claims to be supreme over all civil authorities throughout the world, and which only waits time and opportunity to press this claim vigorously in the United States; and that the enforced or permitted use of the Bible in the public schools gives to the organized power of this Church a fatal weapon in its already avowed and dangerous assaults on the whole public school system.

"Resolved, That these great and growing evils render it a paramount patriotic duty, on the part of all American citizens who comprehend the priceless value of purely secular government, to take active measures for the IMMEDIATE AND ABSOLUTE SECULARIZATION OF THE STATE; and we earnestly urge them to organize without delay for this purpose.

"Resolved, That we hereby issue a call for a General Congress of all those who sympathize with this object, to be convened at Philadelphia on or before the Fourth of July, 1876: for the purpose of organizing a NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, and of promoting the organization of local auxiliary Liberal Leagues throughout the country.

"Resolved, That we heartily coöperate with the Freie Gemeinden of North America, who propose to meet there in general convention at the same time and for a similar purpose."

The Committee of Arrangements reported that Francis E. Abbot, Damon Y. Kilgore, Alexander Loos, Isaac Rhen, B. F. Underwood, and H. S. Williams be a General Centennial Committee, with power to increase their number to fifteen; that the duty of said Committee be to make all necessary arrangements for the General Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia in 1876, and also to draft a Constitution and By-Laws for a NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE; and that said Constitution and By-Laws provide for the formation of local auxiliary Liberal Leagues throughout the country, and be submitted for approval to said General Congress of Liberals.

On motion, this report was unanimously adopted.

The Committee of Arrangements also reported that Edward M. Davis, William B. Thomas, Elias H. Corson, John Wetherbee, and John S. Dye be a Centennial Committee on Finance, with power to increase their number to nine; and that it be the duty of said Committee to provide for defraying the expenses of the General Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia in 1876, according to the plan adopted by the General Centennial Committee.

On motion, this report was also unanimously adopted.

An address was then delivered by Parker Pillsbury, of New Hampshire, on the danger to free institutions from ecclesiasticism in this country, and on the necessity of taking immediate measures to arouse the masses to a comprehension of the situation. He was followed in short speeches by J. F. Byrnes, J. M. Speare, R. Wallin, and D. Y. Kilgore; after which the Convention was adjourned till tomorrow, at 2 o'clock, P. M.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, SEPT. 18.

The Convention met agreeably to adjournment, the President in the chair.

The minutes of yesterday's session were read and approved.

The resolutions reported yesterday by the Committee on Resolutions were taken up seriatim, and after discussion by Charles C. Burleigh, Carrie S. Burnham, John S. Dye, Damon Y. Kilgore, Robert Wallin, Daniel Riddell, Ella E. Gibson, and others, were adopted.

Rev. T. P. Stevenson, editor of the Christian Statesman, the organ of the movement to amend the Constitution of the United States so as to acknowledge "Almighty God as the Author of National Existence and the source of all power and authority in civil government, Jesus Christ as the Ruler of Nations, and the Bible as the fountain of law and the supreme rule for the conduct of nations," being observed to be present, was invited by the President to participate in the discussion on the resolutions and to express his own views on the subject with absolute freedom. Mr. Stevenson was then introduced to the Convention, and made some earnest but temperate and courteous remarks explanatory of the movement he represented, which were listened to with close and respectful attention.

Messrs. Burleigh, Dye, and Kilgore replied to Mr. Stevenson.

The attention of the President being publicly called to the presence of the venerable Lucretia Mott, and a desire being expressed on behalf of the audience to hear from her, the President replied that deference for the known wishes of Mrs. Mott herself, who was physically too feeble to speak, obliged him, though with profound reluctance, to disregard the suggestion.

The Convention was then adjourned until Sunday morning, at ten and a half o'clock.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 19.

In the forenoon, the President delivered a written address on "The Coming Religion." Mrs. Isabella Leet furnished admirable music on the piano, and was enthusiastically applauded.

In the evening, the President gave an extempore address on the objects and aims of the Liberal League movement. Charles C. Burleigh followed with a powerful and unanswerable speech against the proposed amendment of the United States Constitution by the formal recognition of Almighty God, Jesus Christ, and the Bible in the Preamble. Mrs. Leet again executed some difficult and striking pieces on the piano, and was again greeted with spontaneous, long-continued, and enthusiastic applause.

After which the Convention was adjourned sine die.

DAMON Y. KILGORE, Secretary.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, President.

This report of the Convention's doings and results tells its own story so plainly that little comment is needed. The plans here blocked out must depend for their successful execution on the free, generous, and patriotic devotion of American liberals. A better start could scarcely have been desired for a movement like this, though a larger representation of Liberal Leagues might have given it a greater immediate effect with the unthinking. But the movement is one which must grow in strength every day: it is foreordained to be great. Those who are easily daunted by difficulties, or who wait till a movement becomes popular before joining it, or who lack the iron purpose which will neither bend nor break nor rust nor wear away in a just cause, will let this movement alone; but we believe there are many who will hail this sober, practical, sensible initiation of it with real satisfaction, and in due course of time lend it their aid and support. If a sufficient number of the earnest and high-minded liberals will now coöperate with each other, a magnificent convention can be held next year in Philadelphia, which shall bring to the focus of one definite, comprehensive, and noble purpose all the now scattered energies and aspirations of American Liberalism. This is our summons and our opportunity, O ye who are not ashamed to be in earnest for the enlargement of religious liberty among men! Surely, the summons will be heard, and the opportunity bravely seized.

GOOD-BY.

With this issue of THE INDEX, my connection with it in every capacity ceases.

It is a little more than three years—something more than one half of the present life of THE INDEX—that I have been associated with it in editorial and business relations. During that time (excepting only three months covering the principal history of "THE INDEX Troubles," when I was the sole editor of the paper), my nominal editorial connection with THE INDEX has been as "Associate Editor." In order, however, that justice may be done and injustice prevented in the making and pronouncing of any opinion, by any person, at this or at any other time, upon the merits or demerits of THE INDEX, I will here state that, aside from the paragraphs and articles which have appeared under or over my own signature, I ordinarily have been no more responsible for what THE INDEX has printed or omitted to print, or for the general character, tone, and aims of the paper, than has any one of the eminent writers who have occupied places on its staff of Editorial Contributors. Undivided credit should be accorded to him who is and has been the real and sole editor of this paper, for whatever success has waited upon its general editorial management and career from the beginning. It would be insincere and immodest in me to appear now to be willing to divide this credit with him, or to accept the least meed of praise more than what may belong to such contributions as my own initials from time to time have specifically characterized.

This statement respecting the nature of my editorial connection with THE INDEX may serve, also, to alleviate the regret which any one might otherwise feel at my retirement. In consequence, nothing whatever will be lost to the columns of this paper but such articles as I have hitherto contributed to them. It is true that, for the most part, the peculiarity of my temperament has led me to be interested in, and to write upon, somewhat other themes than those which the pen of the editor has ordinarily chosen. I have freely used my unquestioned right to differ from him as to some of his cherished opinions and methods, although, owing to my natural indisposition to discussion, never caring to give special prominence to such difference. My retirement, therefore, at this time, will only withdraw from the paper whatever peculiarity of thought and expression may belong to me individually, and enhance the opportunity of THE INDEX to concentrate its utterance of those special aims and purposes with which I may have had least sympathy. Of course, I recognize the eminent desirableness of having unity of aim and purpose when action is proposed in the direction of organization and institution; and, being myself naturally disinclined to organized aggression, and in favor of more quiet and individual methods of promulgating truth, I cheerfully acknowledge the beauty of that dispensation which withdraws me from THE INDEX, and dispatches me to other fields of labor.

In this connection, however, I hasten to say that my present retirement from THE INDEX is not occasioned by any disagreement of views between myself and the editor. Our common devotion to the principle of equality in freedom alone would be sufficient to maintain our former relations, did every other circumstance conspire to the same end. In addition to that, an intimate personal friendship which has existed unbroken between us for nearly fifteen years might well enough suggest a continuance of these relations, even in the face of a difference of opinions and convictions. The adequate explanation of my retirement is that it is rendered necessary by circumstances the nature of which it is inexpedient here to explain; and I willingly submit to the inevitable. That the Association, however, is able still to continue Mr. Abbot as editor and business manager of THE INDEX will be more than sufficient, doubtless, to reconcile all its patrons to my departure.

It is not necessary, I trust, for me to say that I leave behind me my good will and wishes to all concerned. With feelings of most cordial friendliness, I say good-by to every one with whom I have here been related. To subscribers and readers, to fellow directors and contributors, and above all to my long-tried friend and comrade the editor, I say an honest and hearty good by. May every measure of deserved success and prosperity attend you all!

A. W. STEVENS.

The phrase "organized aggression," used in the above article as if it were a just description of the Liberal League movement, should be compared with that passage of my opening speech at the Philadelphia Convention in which I stated distinctly that the movement in question is not "aggressive."

F. E. A.

CHAUNCEY WRIGHT.

The death which we briefly noticed last week reminds us most sadly of the law, that to be an effective great man one needs to have many qualities great. If power of analytic intellect pure and simple could suffice, the name of Chauncey Wright would assuredly be as famous as it is now obscure; for he was not merely the great mind of a village—if Cambridge will pardon the expression,—but either in London or Berlin he would, with equal ease, have taken the place of master which he held with us. The reason why he is now gone without leaving any work which his friends can consider as a fair expression of his genius is that his shyness, his want of ambition, and to a certain degree his indolence, were almost as exceptional as his power of thought. Had he, in early life, resolved to concentrate these, and make himself a physicist, for example, there is no question but that his would have ranked to-day among the few first living names. As it was, he preferred general criticism and contemplation, and became something resembling more a philosopher of the antique or Socratic type than a modern Gelehrter. His best work has been done in conversation; and in the acts and writings of the many friends he influenced his spirit will, in one way or another, as the years roll on, be more operative than it ever was in direct production.

Born at Northampton in 1830, graduating at Harvard in 1852, he left us in the plenitude of his powers. His outward work is limited to various articles in the North American Review (one of which Mr. Darwin thought important enough to reprint as a pamphlet in England), a paper or two in the Transactions of the Academy of Arts and Sciences, and a number of critical notices in our own pages—the latest of these being the article entitled "German Darwinism," which we published only two weeks ago. As a writer, he was defective in the shaping faculty. He failed to emphasize the articulations of his argument, to throw a high light, so to speak, on the important points; so that many a casual peruser has probably read on, and never noticed the world of searching consequences which lurked involved in some inconspicuously-placed word. He spent many years in computing for the Nautical Almanac, and from time to time accepted some pedagogic work. He gave a course of university lectures on psychology in Harvard College, in 1871, and last year he conducted there a course in mathematical physics. As little of a reader as an educated man well can be, he yet astonished every one by his omniscience; for no specialist could talk with Chauncey Wright without receiving some sort of instruction in his specialty. This was due to his irrepressible spontaneous habit of subtle thinking. Every new fact he learned set his whole mental organism in motion, and reflection did not cease till the novel thought was firmly woven with the entire system of his knowledge. Of course in this process new conclusions were constantly evolved, and many a man of science who hoped to surprise him with news of a discovery has been himself surprised by finding it already constructed by Wright from data separately acquired in this or that conversation with one or other of the many scholars of Cambridge or Boston, most of whom he personally knew so well.

In philosophy, he was a worker on the path opened by Hume; and a treatise on psychology written by him (could he have been spared and induced to undertake the drudgery) would probably have been the last and most accomplished utterance of what he liked to call the British school. He would have brought the work of Mill and Bain for the present to a conclusion. Of the two motives to which philosophic systems owe their being, the craving for consistency or unity in thought, and the desire for a solid outward warrant for our emotional ends, his mind was dominated only by the former. Never in a human head was contemplation more separated from desire. Schopenhauer, who defined genius as a cognitive faculty manumitted from the service of the will, would have found in him an even stronger example of his definition than he cared to meet. For to Wright's mode of looking at the universe such ideas as pessimism or optimism were alike simply irrelevant. Whereas most men's interest in a thought is proportioned to its possible relation to human destiny, with him it was almost the reverse. When the mere actuality of phenomena will suffice to describe them, he held it pure excess and superstition to speak of a metaphysical whence or whither, of a substance, a meaning, or an end. Just as in cosmogony he preferred Mayer's theory to the nebular hypothesis, and in one of his earliest North American Review articles used the happy phrase, "cosmical weather," to describe the irregular dissipation and aggregation of worlds,—so, in contemplating the totality of being, he preferred to think of phenomena as the result of a sort of ontologic weather, without inward rationality, an aimless drifting to and fro, from the midst of which relatively stable and so (for us) rational combinations may emerge. The order we observe in things needs explanation only on the supposition of a preliminary or potential disorder; and this he pointed out is, as things actually are orderly, a gratuitous notion. He particularly condemned the idea of substance as a metaphysical idol. When it was objected to him that there must be some principle of oneness in the diversity of phenomena—some glue to hold them together, and make a universe out of their mutual independence,—he would reply that there is no need of a glue to join things unless we apprehend some reason why they should fall asunder. Phenomena are grouped,—more we cannot say of them. This notion that the actuality of a thing is the absolute totality of its being was perhaps never grasped by any one with such thoroughness as by him.

However different a philosophy one may hold from his, however one may deem that the lack of emotional bias which left him contented with the mere principle of parsimony as a criterion of universal truth was really due to a defect in the active or impulsive part of his mental nature, one must value none the less his formulæ. For as yet philosophy has celebrated hardly any stable achievements. The labors of philosophers have, however, been confined to deepening enormously the philosophic consciousness, and revealing more and more minutely and fully the import of metaphysical problems. In this preliminary task, ontologists and phenomenologists, mechanists and teleologists, must join friendly hands; for each has been indispensable to the work of the other, and the only foe of either is the common foe of both; namely, the practical, conventionally thinking man, to whom, as has been said, nothing has true seriousness but personal interests, and whose dry earnestness in those is only excelled by that of the brute, which takes every thing for granted, and never laughs. Mr. Wright belonged to the precious band of genuine philosophers, and among them few can have been as completely disinterested as he. Add to his eminence his tireless amiability, his beautiful modesty, his affectionate nature and freedom from egotism, his childlike simplicity in worldly affairs, and we have the picture of a character of which his friends feel, more than ever now, the elevation and the rarity.—Nation, Sept. 23.

[Translated for THE INDEX.]

NO RETURN POSSIBLE.

FROM "ETUDES SUR L'HISTOIRE DE L'HUMANITE," BY PROFESSOR LAURENT, OF THE UNIVERSITY OF GENEVE.

The vain efforts of paganism and philosophy to bring the old beliefs back to life teach an important lesson to the nineteenth century. There is also in our day a religion which is passing away, or which must be modified if it is to regain its empire over the soul. Yet there are men of faith and intelligence, who say that the salvation of mankind depends on a return to historical Christianity. We would ask them why the altars of the Christ have been and are constantly deserted? Is it not because the Christian beliefs, as they have been regulated and settled by the Church, no longer satisfy the soul? And if such is the case, is it not an evidently futile attempt to offer people, as nutriment for their faith, the very beliefs which they have just rejected? After all, what has brought society into the state of scepticism which is deplored? During eighteen centuries Christianity has had the guidance of the people; and, after this empire has lasted for ages, society has become incredulous, as it was under the Roman Empire. Can the way of restoring the lost faith be to revert to the same teaching which has led men into scepticism? It is as impossible now to restore traditional Christianity as it once was to restore paganism. When ideas and feelings change, religion must also be modified. If it remains immovable while society progresses, the divorce of faith and reason becomes inevitable. To bring men back to the faith of the past it would be necessary to revive all the feelings, all the ideas, that gave rise to that faith, and brought it into favor. Who does not see that to be the most impossible of impossibilities?

AN OLD SCOTCH PARSON, who was not only a preacher but a parson, and who on week-days returned the visits which his people made to him at the kirk on Sundays, once came to the house of a parishioner where his gentle knocking could not be heard for the noise within. Upon this he lifted the latch and walked in, saying, in a majestic way, "I should like to know who is the head of this house?" "Weell, sir," said Sandy, "if ye bide a wee we'll maybe be able to tell ye; for Janet and I are just trying to settle that point."

"AS TO OPENING OYSTERS," said old Hurricane, "why, nothing's easier, if you only know how." "And how's how?" inquired Straight. "Scotch snuff!" answered old Hurricane, very sententiously; "Scotch snuff; bring a little of it ever so near their noses, they'll sneeze their lids off."

Communications.

THE CONFLICT BETWEEN RELIGION AND SCIENCE.

Under the title of "The Struggles of Science," Rev. Dr. Hill, in the Unitarian Review for April, 1875, has written a criticism of Dr. Draper's History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. I propose to say something of the subject generally, and of Dr. Hill's article.

Whether the conflict between Christianity and science be necessary or unnecessary, let us at least acknowledge that there is such a conflict, and that it rages incessantly. Whether there need be a conflict between some ideal Christianity and science, there certainly has been all along, and is now, a conflict between the actual Christianity of Christendom and science. This conflict is not sought for by science. The vast majority of its votaries serenely pursue their course, seeking to follow the truth wherever it may lead them. Suddenly Christianity, through its professors, awakens to the fact that some new hypothesis, theory, or fact of science is at variance with its teachings. Straightway there is a conflict; and, whatever may result from such conflicts now going on, it is certainly worthy of notice, that, in every great conflict of the kind that has been settled, science has been the victor. Indeed, how could it be otherwise? The man of science is ready to shift his ground when he finds that truth requires it; the man of religion has dogmas which he must support, right or wrong. Or, rather, he will not ascertain whether they are right or wrong; he will simply follow his feelings. Whatever conflicts with them, he is sure, must be wrong.

Why do we never hear of a conflict between science and mathematics, or science and chemistry, or science and any other branch of science? For the very reason that these are themselves departments of science, and there can be no conflict between them. Similarly, if religion were a department of science, we should not hear of a conflict between religion and science. And it is, or should be, a department of science; for science includes all that is knowable, and there is no department of knowledge outside of it.

But I apprehend we should not speak of the conflict between religion and science, but of the conflict between theology (meaning always now Christian theology) and science. For religion is an indefinite word which includes theology and morality. Now there is no conflict between morality and science, but there is between theology and science; as there is between astrology and science, or Spiritualism and science.

There is no conflict between morality and science, because morality, like mathematics, chemistry, or political economy, is a branch of science. For morality can be treated from a scientific point of view, and as a science; and the inculcation of the truth and observance of the highest morals will result therefrom. But turn we now to theology, and what a difference. Separated thus from morals, whether the theology under examination be Buddhist, Brahminical, Confucian, Mohammedan, Christian, or what not, what collections of myths, legends, and ignorant superstitions fancies do we find! What wonder that these conflict with the clear, calm results of science! Such theologies bear about the same relation to a true scientific theology that alchemy does to chemistry, or that astrology does to astronomy. Do you ask me, Where shall I find such a science of theology? I answer, It does not exist yet; the rudiments have not even been brought together, although they exist; but we may hope that some future Copernicus, Kepler, and Newton of theology may transmute our petty theologies into a live science of theology, as these men helped to transform astrology into astronomy, and as Lavoisier, Dalton, and others, have helped to transform alchemy into chemistry. Then we shall hear no more of the conflict of science with religion.

But now there is such a conflict, and the title of Dr. Draper's book is not a misnomer. To be sure, he does not enlarge upon the contest still going on between Protestant Christianity and science; but we all know there was no sudden cessation of conflict when Luther left the Roman Catholic Church.

Both branches of Christianity have carried on the conflict ever since, and are carrying it on now. The conflict may be fiercer between Roman Catholicism and science, but every Protestant denomination that has lived long enough has also helped to carry on the same conflict. They have all been beaten, and probably always will be.

For example, take the conflict between geology and theology as to the age of the world. Protestant Christianity, as well as Roman Catholicism, fought against the results of geology; and both were beaten. Still, Bourbon-like, they learned nothing from this and similar lessons, and are just as ready as ever to fight against any new result of science that happens to conflict with their superstitions and fancies.

Dr. Draper does not maintain that religion alone hinders scientific progress, as Dr. Hill would have us think he does. He wrote on the conflict between religion and science—not on the conflict of religion or science with everything else. Being restricted by his subject, it does not follow that he thought there was no other conflict. This being the case, many of Dr. Hill's elaborate arguments, some of them not at all to the point, fall to the ground, and need no further answer.

I would by no means be understood to sanction everything in Dr. Draper's book. Dr. Hill's criticism of the book itself, of the author's style, merits, and defects, is in the main just. It may be, as he says, "full of learning, full also of acute observations and judgments; it is likewise full of unjust aspersions, exaggerated compliments, anachronisms, and things irrelevant to his purpose." Harsh as the criticism may be, Dr. Draper may have, "with a lively imagination, a ready use of words, a facility of skipping over centuries in a sentence, omitting what he does not want, and selecting the most trifling circumstance if it will suit his purpose." But that "every hindrance to the growth of science, every obstacle to the advancement of society, seems to him to come from religion; every advance in theological thought, every improvement in manners and morals, to come from science," as Dr. Hill says of him, is said by the Christian theologian and Christian apologist rather than by the philosophical critic.

The same defect is shown again by Dr. Hill, when he says, speaking of the opening chapters of Genesis: "In our belief they are unjustly treated when they are looked upon either as history or as legends, that is, as professing to narrate events; one might as well treat Luke xv. as a history; they express religious and ethical doctrines with a power and clearness such as, in our opinion, could be attained in no other form of words intelligible to early and uncultivated eyes."

Such criticism is crude and mystical. Would he criticise books of other religions in the same spirit?

When Dr. Hill says that Dr. Draper attempts to cow and to bully his opponents; that he caricatures and misrepresents the doctrine of creation; that these lords savants undertake to excommunicate from the scientific body every man who is unable to close his eyes against the clear manifestations of the presence of an intellectual plan in the organic worlds; that the President of the British Association must refrain from insulting Protestant Christians by proposing an arithmetical test of the reality of the communion of the soul with God; that it is an offensive and imperious domineering for him to tell us in this volume that modern science forbids the humble believer to take any comfort in the Christian faith on these points (where does Dr. Draper say so?),—he uses language which may be acceptable to his hearers and the community at large, but which certainly is not the language of philosophical criticism. Were a Confucian to reply in this vein to a book thought to detract from the merits of Confucianism, would not even Dr. Hill see, in such a critic, the Confucian theologian and Confucian apologist rather than the philosophical critic?

What a confession there is in the very term of Christian apologist! We never hear of a science-apologist. We hear, too, of the defence of Christianity; but who ever hears of the defence of science? Who hears of a defence or apology for the law of gravitation? It would fall of itself, were it shown to be false, and no defence or apology would save it. There is another difference of the same kind between religion and science. Any one who chooses may attack any part of science. Let him but show he has some new truth to teach; that is enough, no matter what in science it conflicts with and overthrows. But as to religion, it is thought proper to write in defence of it only. A man may leave a fund for publishing defences of Christianity; but what would be his reputation were he to leave a fund for publishing attacks on Christianity, or even for publishing researches as to its truth or falsity?

I plead for perfect liberty of examination, of attack, and of defence in matters of religion as well as of science.

Protestants may think they allow the fullest liberty of thought; but let any one in the exercise of this liberty do his own thinking, and, even though his life is perfectly moral, if the result is that he thinks differently from those about him, he is looked upon as odd and peculiar, if not as an atheist and infidel,—words which are used as terms of reprobation and abuse, without reference to their real meaning.

In the case of one of the most liberal denominations, consider, for instance, how Parker was treated by his fellow-Unitarians, when he thought for himself, and his thoughts did not agree with theirs. This kind of liberty of thought merely means liberty to think as those about you think. Roman Catholics and the most Orthodox of Protestants are alike willing you should use your reason, so long as you agree with them. But if your reason takes you beyond them, then, they tell you, you must have faith, and you must not use your reason.

When will the good time come when the criterion will be, not what a person thinks of abstruse points of theological theology, but what he does in the course of every-day life?

In writing this criticism, I am obliged to use many words in their usual sense rather than in their real sense, as I have tried to explain them. I must do this to make myself understood, or I should need a glossary of new words. I have tried to take a common-sense view of the relations between science and Christianity. By Christianity, I mean the actual, practical form of it we come across every day in Christian books, and among Christian people. Were I to criticise Buddhism, Mohammedanism, or any other religion, I should try to include the same in my idea of it, and not some ideal Buddhism, etc., which its votaries might claim it to mean; as Dr. Hill and other Christian critics try to make Christianity mean. In reality, such ideal Christianity, Buddhism, Confucianism, etc., are nowhere to be found, and they exist in the imagination only.

Dr. Hill dogmatically asserts that no possible extension of physical science can give it jurisdiction over purely spiritual, metaphysical, and religious questions. How does he know this, and what right has he to define the limits of physical science?

In the case of psychology (perhaps Dr. Hill does not consider this a department of physical science), it is only since it has been treated as a part of physiology, or as allied to it, and since it has been studied in the same material, scientific way, that discoveries worthy of the name begin to loom up.

And by what right does Dr. Hill fix the limits of science, when he says, speaking of the two theories of the government of the world, that of special providence or that of general law, "neither of them is capable of scientific verification"?

Comte prophesied that science never could tell us anything of the composition of the sun, and within a few years the spectroscope falsified his prediction.

I read to the tenth page of Dr. Hill's article with an ever-increasing sense of his intellectual power, if not of his scientific knowledge. Here is a scholar, I thought, of discernment; capable of logical analysis; quick to detect flaws, however minute, in an attack on his faith; fair, as critics go; and free at least from gross superstition. But then, to my surprise and sorrow, I find he thinks the Apocalypse prophesied the events of the first century. And, worse still, he admits "that it was a very significant circumstance that, on the day when France declared war against Prussia, and the Pope, in the midst of an awful thunderstorm, officially announced his own infallibility, he wore displayed upon his head his peculiar title, VICARIVS FILII DEI. The significance will be found by adding together the numeral value of the letters in the title thus: 5, 1, 100, 0, 0, 1, 5, 0, 0, 1, 50, 1, 1, 500, 0, and 1, added together, make 666; so that, if this 'number of a man' was not prophesied by St. John, it at least curiously fulfilled his prophecy"!!! And this from the critic who, on the opposite page, has spoken of a difficulty to one whose intellect is not sufficiently trained to enable him to detect the fallacy of Sir William Hamilton's solution of Zeno's paradox of motion,—of the geometrical imagination which has given immortality to his namesake of Dublin, although he of Edinburgh possessed acute analytical power, etc. In the name of common sense, when are such interpretations to cease? Are these the sad results of the highest culture of the land? Why not attach importance to the fortuitous fulfilment of the wild, meaningless prophecies, so called, of the mystics of other religions? And what of the greater number of superstitious prophecies that were not fulfilled?

It would be as rational to attach importance to "Napoleon Empereur," which, written in a certain style of handwriting, and read backward through the paper when held up to the light, shows, to the astonished looker-on, the number of ayes and noes cast for that arch-rascal!

AMASA M. EATON.
PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 9, 1875.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

GRASSHOPPERDOM, NORTH-WEST, }
Sept. 14, 1875. }

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I have been watching your struggles for "Liberty and Light" for the last five years; and have been frequently struck by the unreasonableness of your ratiocination on religious, political, and social matters, which you so often mix up together like philters in a witch's cauldron. If you will kindly give me "Liberty," I will give you a little "Light" on some false issues in your leader in THE INDEX of the 9th instant.

For thirty years I have interestedly watched the progress of Catholicism, Protestantism, Unitarianism, Materialism, and every other "ism," with a clear, rational vision; and I confess I don't see the terrible prognostications of Mr. Lum and yourself in reference to Catholicism ever likely to be realized.

I believe the Catholic Church is making no effort to "mask its designs in this country," or anywhere else,—its design being to "preach the baptism of penance unto the remission of sins"; to preach Christ crucified; to teach men to forgive their enemies, if they hope to be forgiven; and this design needs no mask to conceal it.

In regard to the priests of the Catholic Church controlling votes, I don't believe they can control one. That Church is made up of Democrats and Republicans; and both parties are generally led by narrow-minded ex-Know-nothings. I defy any of your readers to say if he or she ever heard a political harangue in a Catholic church. The priests take so little interest in politics, that I doubt if one in a thousand ever votes.

Of the money given in New York in 1870 and other years; as you say, not a dime of it was given to support the Catholic Church; it was given to enlighten the ignorant, and for the care of sick, diseased, maniacs, blind, maimed, paupers, and other objects of public charity. If the Catholic Church is not able to support itself, it ought to go down.

Again, I deny that the wealth of the Catholic Church is a corruption fund; for the Catholic Church has no wealth, comparatively speaking, and, so far as I can see, it is opposed to corruption. Perhaps you or your progressive readers would cite a few authentic cases in support of this bare-faced assertion. The Catholic Church is the church of the poor. Where else can the poor man or woman in shabby clothing go and worship? Certainly not to such aristocratic churches as the Beecherian conventicle in Brooklyn.

While expatiating on the ignorance of Catholics, remember that creed has produced more able scholars and reasonable thinkers than advanced Protestantism, or even more advanced Liberalism; and I have met as much gross ignorance in all the other isms as I have in Catholicism.

One more point: I have conversed with people of all denominations through the length and breadth of this land, and with their clergymen, too; and I have met fewer Catholic priests and members desiring a union of Church and State than in any other religious system. In fact, to judge by our Congress and Legislatures, it would seem to be a union of Wesleyanism and State.

In fact, I see yourself working for a union of Infidelity and State. For I see no reason why the "Demands of Liberalism" should be adhered to any more than the demands of Swedenborgianism, or Mormonism. Besides, Liberalism in Germany and Italy has become synonymous with robbing the churches, because they are churches. If Liberalism mean wholesale robbery, it is better to live honestly under the narrowest dogmas than in such insecurity. We do not want to see the day in free America when we can say with Madame Roland: "Oh Liberty, what outrages are perpetrated in thy name!"

I admire Liberalism so far as it is liberal; but, I regret to see that Liberalism is getting most decidedly illiberal, unreasonable, untruthful.

I do not put myself forward as an advocate for any church or "ism"; but I hate to see falsehood hashed up week after week, and year after year, and set before half-intelligent thinkers as the evolution of modern thought, progress, and liberalism. Give us the square-toed Truth, or give us—nothing.

Yours, etc.,

F. M. MACDONAGH.

[As Mr. MacDonagh evidently considers the above to be "the square-toed Truth," we cheerfully publish it for the benefit of those who may share his opinion.—ED.]

DOUBT AND PERDITION.

ONTARIO, Sept. 20, 1875.

Sir,—In looking over the files of THE INDEX, I came across a short communication of mine inserted in the number of June 3, and headed "The Inner Void." In alluding to those persons who, having renounced the current theology, were looking for some substitute for the discarded faith, I inadvertently made use of these words: "Men in this position may be counted by thousands in the present day, and are to be found in every place, as well as in every denomination of Christians." What I should have said was this; namely, that not only in every denomination, but in every congregation, of Christians, were to be found men who doubted the truth of much of what they heard every Sunday from the lips of the Orthodox clergy, and that such men might be counted by thousands.

I would not deem it worth the while to correct this misstatement at so late a period, if I did not wish to make a few remarks on the subject of doubt and unbelief in matters of religion, which affect great masses of the Christian community. I speak from some personal knowledge, having spent upwards of thirty years of my life in close contact (I may say, intimacy) with mechanics, and such persons as earn their bread by the sweat of their brow. These men are neither scientists nor scholars. They are simply possessed of that amount of knowledge that is attainable in our common schools, and improved by their subsequent experience in life.

If truth in religion be as necessary to a man's well-being as it is in secular matters, we should have a literature suited to the capacities of these people—a literature written impartially and in the spirit of science; and we have none such in this extensive Province. The booksellers do not sell any works but such as are in literal accord with the popular faith. These men, therefore, have no means of enlightenment, and they never get rid of their doubts.

If any one of them should apply to a clergyman (and few, if any, ever do), what will he tell them? Whatever answers he may make to special questions, we may be sure that he will dwell upon the great sinfulness of doubt, and the risk of eternal perdition incurred! He will finally urge them to betake themselves to their knees, to attend church, prayer-meetings, etc.! The man who had the moral courage of consulting the official oracle, and thereby exposing himself to the charge of heresy or unbelief, is not likely to derive much benefit from this prescription. Genuflection and psalm-singing will suit the case of those only who never think, and consequently never doubt. These last seem to be the "little children" of Holy Writ, who believe everything and object to nothing, and are popularly considered the "salt" of the earth.

Those among us who wish to become conversant with modern thought, and more particularly with the results of modern Biblical criticism—and these results must be known before we can get rid of ignorance and superstition—must be indebted to our more liberal friends across the St. Lawrence.

J. FINLAYSON.

"SELFISHNESS" AGAIN.

MY DEAR INDEX:—

In yours of the 9th inst., "J. R. S." says that to hear anything tending to establish an exalted opinion of our race gratifies his feelings, and is therefore of personal benefit to him; and therefore that his writing an article intended to provoke proof of the correctness of that exalted opinion was selfish. This statement exhibits a confusion of ideas—and this I say with entire respect. It involves the assumption that whatever gratifies his feelings is of personal benefit to him, an assumption which is contradicted by half the experience of half the world every half-hour. Thus it involves another assumption, that seeking to establish something which would gratify and benefit him is necessarily selfish. Now, selfishness being an undue regard to self, the question whether a course is selfish does not depend on its tendency to gratify or benefit the actor, but upon its being adopted from an undue regard to that gratification or benefit. One has no right to draw a conclusion that, because mercy gratifies and benefits the possessor, therefore the acts of mercy are selfish. If the act is done from more regard to self-gratification and self-benefit than the rights of others justify, it is selfish; otherwise not. Salt water bathing, when the weather was warmer than it is now, gratified "A.'s" feelings, and benefited him in every way. Was it selfish? It may have been, or it may not; the mere fact of its being grateful and beneficial affords us no means of judging. If, merely to enjoy the pleasure, he spent money which was necessary to the comfort of his family, he was selfish. If no claims of others conflicted, no question of selfishness arose. If, while bathing, he risked his own safety in saving a fellow-being, only because it would afterwards gratify himself and flatter his approbation the rest of his life, and not from regard to the sufferer, he was selfish. If he refused to risk his life, whether he was selfish in so doing depended entirely on his motives. If "J. R. S." had no object in view in seeking to establish the truth of his opinion but his own gratification, he was selfish as he claims he was. Only by seeking to establish that opinion from regard to others rather than to himself could he become unselfish.

Another word, and that the only important one: nobody thought of accusing "J. R. S." of doing wrong. I said the tendency of his views was immoral; but certainly I should be the last one to doubt his right, if he had carefully studied them and believed them, to give them to the world wherever he could find an editor wrongly (?) magnanimous enough to publish them.

Yours, with perfect respect, W. C. R.

THE LOVE OF SELF.

TIPPECANOE CITY, Ohio, Sept. 7, 1875.

Formerly I knew two men very well,—one a compact, robust, hard-fisted, bullet-headed sort of man, possessing a good deal of talent; the other very mild, amiable, conscientious, sympathetic, and impulsive.

On one occasion I saw a man accidentally drop a purse containing fifty or sixty dollars into a deep river, which had a swift current and snaggy bottom. The man who dropped the purse said to the bystanders (our two men were among them): "He who will dive to the bottom and secure the purse shall have its contents." The bullet-head, with scarce a moment's hesitation, made the attempt; failed, came up a few moments for breath, went down again, and came up with the prize. Says our sympathetic man to the winner: "I would not have done the feat for all your wealth" (and he was called rich). The reply was: "Why, this will pay my hired hand for two months' work!"

At another time the same two men were at a steam-boat landing on the Ohio. The water was high, rapid, and deep; many boats were crowded around. A young lady was endeavoring to get from a boat to the wharf, accidentally slipped, and went into the water between the boat and the wharf. The crowd was all excitement; no one dared to venture, not even our brave bullet-head. But our mild, sympathetic man, at one glance, saw the situation; passed rapidly and unnoticed down stream, plunged into the foaming current, stemmed it as well as he could, striking out right and left to feel obstructions, caught the garments of the drowning lady when under a boat, drifted to the stern, came to the surface, and was discovered making for the shore by means of small boats. Both were saved. When asked how he could dare to do as he did, he replied: "I could not help it; I was in agony; and my only relief was to make the effort."

Which of the two was the more selfish man? Did not each act from internal feelings? And were not each one's feelings a part of himself? One acted to gratify his sympathetic nature, the other his pecuniary nature. This case should show us how Nature works for the improvement of mankind. On the actions of one she throws a coldness, disapprobation, almost contempt, that a man of wealth should risk his life to pay his hired hand two months' wages! Who can calculate the beneficial, harmonizing, ameliorating effects upon humanity from the spontaneous sympathetic actions of the other? Thus Nature always gives most life and vitality to the "fittest." It will survive.

E. L. CRANE.

THE PROCESSION IN 1876.

DAVENPORT, Iowa, Sept. 10, 1875.

DEAR INDEX:—

The best thing in you is the zeal for liberty and education as against the union of Church and State, and especially against the claims of the Roman Catholic Church. In THE INDEX of August 12, Mr. Higginson says: "When at Philadelphia, in 1788, in the great festival which celebrated the adoption of our Constitution, the Jewish and Christian clergy walked conspicuously together in the procession, there was a distinct recognition of the principle of universal toleration."

What is to be done to make the procession of 1876 such a demonstration of the fact of universal toleration that all the world will see and believe in it? The contest between Ecclesiasticism and the State is coming again. Let us be awake to the great issue of the day. Let us gain a vocal victory at Philadelphia in 1876 on the Fourth of July.

Yours truly,

S. S. HUNTING.

HE WHO BEGINS by loving Christianity better than truth, will proceed by loving his own sect or church better than Christianity, and end by loving himself better than all.—Coleridge.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
 has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAHAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including
 O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interest. Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO
 FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:
 FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:
 ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
 O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—
 To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.
 Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.
 The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	1.50
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 3 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Post-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (Dr. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	5.00
CONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	4.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays, Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellaneous.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	2.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanase Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	1.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bite of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	1.75
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy. A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions. By B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S (CONFUCIUS) Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1871.....	3.00
Thoughts drawn from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subject of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.00
MILLER (JOAQUIN) Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	3.00
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.00
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons.....	3.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdeemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnaping with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Frothy Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 19 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLELLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....	1.25
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humours, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALE (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heaven as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
The Voyage Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIFFLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldwater's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

$200 A MONTH to Agents everywhere. Address F. L. M'Guffin, 151 Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL, for both sexes, MERIDEN, CONN. EMILY J. LEONARD, Principal.

MORSE'S SUMNER. Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF
MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

BY J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

LECTURES AND CONVERSATIONS.

FREDERIC A. HINCKLEY

Is prepared to lecture or conduct conversational meetings on the following subjects:—
Essential Religion.

Education and Educators in a Republic.

The Ballot for Woman.

Woman: Her Rights and Duties.

Marriage.

The Philosophy of the Labor Movement.

The Relation of the Labor Movement to Intemperance.

Prostitution and Crime.

TERMS MODERATE.

Address Box 1002, Boston Post-office.

DITSON & CO.'S

School Music Books

Constitute a perfect series, providing in the best manner for every class in every School, Academy, and Seminary.

American School Music Readers. In 3 Books, of which Book I (35 cents) is admirably arranged for Primary Schools. Book II. (50 cents) and Book III. (50 cents) for Grammar and younger High School or Academy classes. Compiled by L. O. EMERSON and W. S. TILDEN.

Cheerful Voices (50 cents), by L. O. EMERSON, is a capital collection of School Songs for Common Schools.

The High School Choir ($1.00), by L. O. EMERSON and W. S. TILDEN, is fully equal to their last book, "The Hour of Singing," which for some years has been the standard book. The present work, like the other, is for HIGH SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, and SEMINARIES.

The National Hymn and Tune Book (40 cents) furnishes the best collection of Sacred Music extant for opening and closing schools.

Any book sent, post-paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,

711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

DR. T. LYON'S HYGIENIC HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, MO. Box 247. Send for Circular.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Landaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY

335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!

THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform."

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not unfrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership."

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Ednah D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burtleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by

THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

LANDS FOR SALE, near WALTHAM, S.C. Small tracts and easy terms. Address W. J. DUFFIE, Owner, COLUMBIA, S.C.

MORSE'S PAINE.

PHOTOGRAPHS

For sale at the office of THE INDEX.

Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cts.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES,

IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's

TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion. Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.

For sale by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOOK Card,

—AND—

Job

PRINTING,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 TREMONT PLACE,

BOSTON.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX,

Tremont Place, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1875.

WHOLE No. 302.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —.

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

"If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. On this Centennial year the work of strengthening the foundation of the structure commenced by our forefathers a hundred years ago at Lexington should be begun. Let us all labor for the security of free thought, free speech, free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and equal rights and privileges for all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar appropriated to them shall be applied to the support of any sectarian school; resolve that neither State nor nation shall support institutions save those where every child in the land may get a common school education, unmingled with atheistic, pagan, or sectarian teachings. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar; keep the Church forever separate."—PRESIDENT GRANT, at Des Moines, Sept. 29, 1875.

GLIMPSES.

CARDINAL McCLOSKEY has been received with special favor at Rome, which looks upon America as most fruitful tillage-ground just now.

HERBERT SPENCER is severely criticised in a very able review of Dr. Cazelles' Outline of the Evolution Philosophy, published in the New York Nation of September 9.

THE SPEECH of Carl Schurz at Cincinnati, September 27, on the fallacies of inflation, was a masterly affair. Several extracts from it to which attention is specially invited will be found in our present issue.

THE BAPTIST preachers of this vicinity protest against the opening of the Centennial Exposition on Sundays. The attempts of organized Christianity to get itself officially recognized on that occasion are one of the most important signs of the times. Let every liberal study them well.

THE NEW ministry in Spain is highly eulogized by the London Times, as belonging to the party "formed by O'Donnell from the best elements of the then conservative party and the liberal party. They come into the cabinet with clean hands and a reputation for talent and integrity." They will need all their qualifications, if an issue with the Papal Nuncio is to be made.

CARDINAL CULLEN, of Ireland, has just held a synod of Bishops and Archbishops "to counteract the increasing infidelity and lukewarmness in religion and revolution in politics." The synod "gave particular attention to the subject of education of the young"—which is one of the worst omens of the new activity of the Vatican. Give to priests the exclusive control of education, and in fifty years the whole world would be Catholic. Secular schools are the citadel of freedom.

THE SPEECH of President Grant at the reunion of the Army of the Tennessee, in Des Moines, Iowa, on September 29, was a most remarkable one. The passage we place at the head of this column deserves to be written in letters of gold. It has been ungraciously (and we think maliciously) insinuated that the speech is a bid for a "third term." President Grant's motives are, of course, known only to himself; but we say unhesitatingly that there is nothing truer, finer, or weightier in the world-famous "Farewell Address" of George Washington.

THERE is to be a "Boston Sermon Course" of lectures in Music Hall on successive Wednesday evenings, beginning Oct. 6 with Dr. Talmage, and continuing with Dr. Deems, Dr. Douglass, Bishop Cummins, Bishop Simpson, and Dr. Duncan—all ecclesiastical dignitaries of more or less note. Dr. Deems is of "little church around the corner" fame, while Bishop Cummins has got up some sort of a Reformed Episcopal Church of his own. These and the other luminaries will furnish the requisite star-light this autumn for this benighted "hub of the universe."

A WRITER in the Catholic Record for October declares unblushingly: "There can be no doubt whatever but that the Catholic Church preaches, and always has preached, charity and forbearance to all men—Turk, Jew, unbeliever, heretic, and schismatic. . . . Certain it is, that real religious liberty is the hereditament of the Catholic." With this artful statement compare the present demands of the Papal Nuncio in Spain for the prohibition of all non-Catholic creeds, the superintendence of all education by the clergy, and the coöperation of the secular power in suppressing non-Catholic literature and doctrine of all sorts.

THE MAYNOOTH pastoral of the Irish Bishops announces the purpose of establishing a training school for the education of Catholic schoolmasters, confesses their distrust of the present school system, and declares that "the control of the State over the education of the country has been enlarged to an extent perilous to liberty" [i.e., the liberty of the Church to govern absolutely all mankind]. The Bishops claim that in a few years they will compel the State to recognize these new Catholic teachers as "the educators of the nation." The plot is the same in America, and will succeed, unless wisdom and courage defeat it.

It is proposed by the Christian Statesman that a special building be erected on the Centennial Exposition grounds at Philadelphia, for the purpose of holding daily prayer-meetings which should give to the multitudes next year an "opportunity for the utterance of patriotic sentiment sanctified by the power of religion, and for earnest and importunate prayer for the welfare of the nation." On this the Christian Union pertinently remarks: "Meetings conducted in this spirit, and supported by the voluntary contributions of those interested, would do good; but if they should be merely a cover for promoting the designs of the Religious [Christian] Amendment party, they would be a shame and a nuisance."

THEODORE TILTON lectured in Music Hall, Boston, last Friday evening, to a densely crowded house. He entered the hall, unattended and was not introduced; but the audience received him with long-continued clapping, which soon changed to loud and general cheers. It could scarcely have been considered a fashionable audience, but it was equally removed from rowdiness, and seemed to be composed of very intelligent people at neither of the social extremes. Mr. Tilton lectured very well, in his usual somewhat rhetorical vein, and said some exceedingly good things. He seemed to be making an honest and manly effort to leave behind him the follies and faults of his past career, and to grapple courageously with the "problem of life," which was his subject. In these endeavors he should have the sympathy of every right-minded person, as he certainly has ours.

DR. CHARLES CULLIS, of this city, who professes to the public that his "Consumptives' Home" is sustained by responses to prayer, has undertaken another enterprise of the same sort in his new "Faith Training College," of which he is "President and Professor of Christian Work." Other professorships are those of "Christian Life," "Systematic Theology," "Spiritual Philosophy," "Revival Work" (Rev. A. B. Earle holding this chair), and so forth. The college is declared to have "no other endowment than the 'many and exceedingly great and precious promises' of Him who stands pledged to supply all our need." The revenues of Dr. Cullis' institutions are derived from shrewd and adroit advertising, by which the sympathies of credulous but benevolent people are readily enlisted; and it is a pity that the beauty of really philanthropic endeavors should be marred by unblushing quackery and imposture.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATH, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Krushke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CREAMFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carrie S. Burnham, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Züning, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

Ancient Sacrifice.

BY PROFESSOR F. W. NEWMAN.

To our modern intellects, all killing of brute or man, for the pleasure of the most High, seems so absurd, that perhaps we wonder how such a notion arose. Nor is the topic very simple. To compose the idea of Sacrifice, or Sacred Act, or Act of Faith (Auto da Fe), streams have flowed together from many sources.

A first primitive notion is this: that if for human food we take the life of some tame animal, which is in our power and under our protection, it befits to ask permission from the Author of life. He gave that precious gift alike to sheep and oxen, as to man; therefore we must not slay lightly and causelessly, but only when we can ask his blessing on the deed. In the case of wild animals, the hurry and tumult of hunting did not permit formalities of slaughter. All that could then be done beforehand, was to offer some preliminary prayer that should sanctify the hunting.

But from the primary recognition of God as Lord and centre of life, other things followed. In some nations, the blood, as seat of life, was accounted sacred. It then might not be used for food, but was poured out religiously. Mystery being thus added to the blood, a wild and base fancy was liable to arise, that God, or some God, had pleasure in the blood. Again, the man who had skill in slaughtering, easily added the religious character to his art, and nothing was more natural than to remunerate his services of butchery and prayer by a portion of the slain beast. Hereby the original Pops (or cook?) became identified with the Sacerdos, and expected to feed his household by perquisites from the altar. Thus slaughter became a sacred act, performed by a priest when possible. It next became the interest of priesthood to urge sacrifice as a religious duty; that is, the sacrifice of such animals as were approved for human food. Moreover, vulgar fantasy conspired to give currency to the belief, that the god himself partook in the sacrifice, especially by its smell. On this the Greek poets are often explicit, and in Genesis we read, "Jehovah smelled a sweet savor," as denoting his acceptance of Noah's sacrifice (viii., 21).

Human sacrifice undoubtedly had one of its sources in the fantastic picture of a future world, where the departed soul would need various human aids. In the grave of a chieftain were buried not only his armor and his weapons of war, but perhaps his war-horse too, slain to accompany him in the other world. This we know to have been a modern practice among North American Indians. But a great Scythian or Tartar emperor required nobler victims. In the world of spirits he must have, not a single war-horse, but a body-guard of mounted youths; these must be slain for his service; nay, according to Herodotus, to accompany a king of the Scythians (the Scolotai in Southern Russia) they ordinarily strangled one of his concubines, his cup-bearer, his cook, his groom, his page, his errand-bearer (or adjutant?), and a stud of horses. We cannot doubt that the same fundamental ideas suggested the slaughters in Dahomey, on the death of a king. Cruel as we must deem these acts, they were not malignant, and did not imply peculiar atrocity in the agents. No life was regarded as of any value, if the convenience of the king required its sacrifice. As, at his command, a dutiful subject rushed into certain death against a formidable enemy, so to accompany a king in the other world was an ordinary duty of loyalty; nor had any one a conscience against killing innocent brethren for this purpose. Perhaps, if we could know it, the slain were considered blessed, and even thought themselves so. Those killed religiously in Thibet by the arrows of the boy called Buth, were accounted holy and peculiarly fortunate, according to the testimony of the Jesuit missionaries of 1661. Not very unlike is the moral complexion of a practice among the ancient Getæ, or Goths of the Danube. A belief in immortality did but make human life cheaper to them. Every fifth year they sent a messenger to their deity, Zalmoxis, to inform him of their needs, and the mode of dispatch was as follows: he was tossed into the air, and received on the points of three spears. If he died forthwith, the god was accounted propitious; but if the victim or messenger continued alive, he was reviled as wicked, and another was sent in his place. These accounts show how easily, among men accustomed to slaughter in battle, poetical fantasy may lead straight to human sacrifice.

The phenomena known to us concerning the Greeks are rather peculiar. In their historical era they utterly repudiated human sacrifice; yet they unanimously supposed it to have been practiced by their ancestral heroes on various occasions; and their poets abound in moralizings about Agamemnon slaying his daughter—the most signal case, but not at all solitary. Yet the earliest poets show total unacquaintance with such tales, which (with abundance of other sensational horrors) are mere after-invention, suggested probably by the practices of other nations. Some of their neighbors had wild fantasies of their own, as in the drowning of horses to a river god. One may conjecture that, as in the passage of an army both horses and men were apt to be drowned, it was imagined that by a voluntary sacrifice of a few horses to the honor of the god, his jealousy would be satisfied, and a favorable passage secured.

This opens a new topic. Greeks and Hebrews alike attributed to superior powers a certain jealousy of anything preëminent in man or in terrestrial things. Thus Polycrates, according to Herodotus, being too prosperous, attempted (but in vain) to propitiate divine jealousy by voluntary sacrifices. But among the Greeks this never reached to the point of human victims.

The solemn religious sacrifice of select prisoners of war was apparently normal to the Mexican races, and may have been practiced by some nations of the Old World. It is imputed to the Carthaginians; but many circumstances lessen the credit of the charge. Nevertheless, it is easy to see how, in the interests of humanity, any priest or general might devise the scheme of a formal sacrifice, in order to stop indiscriminate massacre of prisoners. Perhaps not enough is known of the facts to justify any definite theory. That human sacrifice occasionally arose out of vows, is more certain. The vow of a sacred spring (ver sacrum), as recorded in Livy (xxii., 10), was limited to the births among pigs, sheep, goats, and oxen, all of which were ceded to the god under certain conditions; but it is too evident in Leviticus xxvii., 28, 29, that the Hebrew vow might legitimately include human children or slaves; in which case the law (as we now read it) expressly forbids the redemption of a human being, but commands that he be put to death, if he have been devoted to Jehovah. The only practical illustration of this, which we find in the history, is the case of Jephthah's daughter, which suffices to show that this was really the currently received law of early Israel, however rare in practice so extreme and rash a vow. But (what is here to be observed) not the remotest idea appears, in any of the cases of sacrifices hitherto adduced, of its being an expiation or atonement for sin. No doubt, whatever happened, was readily interpreted as entailing some "gift to the altar," which was generally a gift to the priest's table. Thus the birth of a child in a Hebrew family required the offering of a lamb, or at least two young pigeons; not as atoning for any moral sin, but (according to the notion of the early Hebrews) as removing ceremonial uncleanness. The offering is in itself analogous to a baptismal fee paid by a Christian parent to the clergyman. So among the Greeks there was sacrifice preliminary to marriage—proteleia.

The same remark applies to the other Hebrew sacrifices, which are spoken of as expiatory. They never are supposed to remove moral sin, crime, or its punishment. A thief was ordered to restore the double; but his offence having nothing of ceremonial pollution, no ceremonial expiation was imagined. Nor was it dissimilar among the Romans. If any thing ill-omened occurred—such as a monstrous birth, or a shower of stones, or a cow walking upstairs, or a Vestal virgin being unchaste,—the consul might be ordered to "allay the omens" by a propitiatory sacrifice; but only external mischief or ceremonial indecorum was contemplated as thus removable. The great day of Atonement among the Hebrews was expiatory of accidental ceremonial neglects alone (agnomata, Heb. ix., 7). I believe that there is no standing ground at all for an argument which should impute to Hebrews, Greeks, or Romans—the ancient nations best known to us,—that any slaying of victims could atone for conscious wilful sin or crime. Whenever misfortune came they were liable to be tormented by the fear that they had unawares neglected some honor to a god or goddess, some ceremonial duty; as Meleager after the Calydonian boar-hunt did homage to other gods, but forgot Artemis; and wherever there was a complex ceremonial law, such forgetfulness might always be suspected. Hence there was no end of such propitiations; but in Greece and Rome they died out with superstitious fears. Temples received endowments, and priests became too respectable to propagate any self-invented follies for the sake of increasing the sacrifices. Besides, contributions to the treasury of temples had also become an established form of piety.

One other ground of sacrifice has to be named—that which accompanied the making of a COVENANT. The sacrifice was supposed to add force and security to the promise or oath. How this should be, is perhaps most clearly explained by the ancient Roman practice recorded by Polybius (iii., 35), of swearing "per Jovem Lapidem," as the vulgar called it. He who was to swear, took a stone in his hand, and said: "If I intend or practice anything against this engagement, I pray that while all other men remain safe in their own countries, under their own laws, with their own modes of life, their temples, and their sepulchres, I alone may be tossed out, as this stone is now." With these words, he flings the stone out of his hand. In the third book of the Iliad, when a treaty is to be made, a sacrifice and libation of wine is essential. Agamemnon slays the lambs, and the chieftains pour wine on the earth. The people around pray, "Whoever shall first transgress the treaty, as this wine is spilt on the ground, so may his brains be spilt!" We can hardly doubt that the same was the meaning of the sacrifice: "As these murdered lambs fall helpless, so may he who breaks the treaty be murdered." In the Hebrew Pentateuch, Moses is represented (Exod. xxiv., 8,) as sprinkling the people with "the blood of the covenant." But it can hardly be too often repeated, that neither here or in the sprinkling of the door-posts with blood of the Paschal Lamb, does the remotest idea show itself of atonement for sin.

The modern Jews, I believe, unanimously uphold that interpretation of their law, which alone is suggested by intelligent criticism; moreover, the learned and eloquent writer of the Christian "Epistle to the Hebrews" appears fully to admit all that is said above. He is indeed guilty of one great confusion, occasioned by the ambiguous sense of the Greek word diathēkē, which, primarily meaning a disposition of affairs, is used either for any special arrangement, i.e., covenant, or for a man's Last Will and Testament, which is to take effect after his death. It is undeniable that in Heb. ix., 16, 17, 20, the writer has argued illogically by confounding Covenant and Testament, and has bequeathed to Christendom the absurd phrases, Old and New Testament. But he is consistent in his declaration that the legal ceremonies, whether gifts or sacrifices, did not touch "the conscience" (ix., 9) of the worshipper, and could only "purify the flesh" (ix., 13); and that it is not possible for the blood of bulls and goats to take away sins (x. 4-11); nor does it anywhere appear that he mistook the slaughter of the Paschal Lamb for a sin-atonement, as perhaps we must admit that Paul does, on comparing I. Cor. x., 16-18, with I. Cor. v., 7. It is therefore the more astonishing that the writer to the Hebrews or any of his Christian contemporaries learned in the Hebrew law could have dreamed of finding there a weight of analogy for the wild idea, that the violent death of a righteous being by the hands of wicked men, can be construed as a sacrifice pleasing to God, which purifies the conscience of believers. Had he argued as follows: "If the blood of bulls, offered by a priest in the performance of his duty, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh, HOW MUCH MORE shall the blood of a holy prophet, wickedly shed, purify your consciences from a sense of sin," his words would not have been plausible. The argument is visibly monstrous. But by throwing into the background the fact that the murder of Jesus was an odious crime, and of course, in every Christian estimate, horrible to God, and converting it into a voluntary offering of himself, he seeks to glorify the event. "Christ (says he) through the Eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God" (ix., 14); and again, 25, 26, "Nor yet that he should offer himself often, . . . but once, . . . to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." It is notable how such a writer becomes a victim to other men's blunders, error attracting error. Thus he quotes from the Greek Septuagint: "A body hast thou prepared me," as the translation of Psalm xl., 6, of our version, which, on the contrary, agrees with the Hebrew, "mine ears hast thou pierced." Out of this spurious word "body" (x., 5-10), he actually makes an argument which reverses the obvious sense of the Psalm. The Psalmist insists, "God does not want sacrifice, but scorns it; he wants obedience;" but this writer makes out that the Psalmist means, "God does not want the sacrifice of bulls and goats, but the sacrifice of a spotless prophet." The Psalm says nothing about bulls and goats, but about sacrifice and sin-offering absolutely. Now let us concede that we have a right to forget the part which wicked men took in the death of Jesus, and to treat it as his own voluntary act; imagine for a moment that it had been strictly so (which ought to make this argument better, as well as clearer), and what will be the position of things? Jesus will be made out to have slain himself "for the sins of many," in order to "sanctify" his disciples, and "purify them from an evil conscience" by his "one sacrifice for sins" (Heb. x., 12, 14, 22). Would not every Christian shudder at having such a historical fact put before him, as a mode of salvation? One is apt to seem slanderous and blasphemous, in naming the possibility as a hypothesis; yet I repeat, it ought to make the argument of the writer to the Hebrews a fortiori valid, if there be any validity in what he has written. It does appear most marvellous, that in protesting against the Hebrew ceremonies as carnal and weak, because they dealt only with impurities of the flesh, the Christian teachers should have (for the first time perhaps in the world's history) propounded so very carnal and revolting an idea, that the blood of a holy prophet (whether shed violently or voluntarily) can justly remove from our consciences a sense of sin and sanctify us to God. We need not press the extreme weakness of mind which could dwell upon his "suffering without the gate" (Heb. xiii., 12). Nothing but artificial inculcation of this doctrine ("the blood of Jesus") can sustain it among us. Every intelligent English child is shocked when he first hears of "hoping pardon through his blood," and wonders how "blood" is concerned in the matter. The doctrine in fact, is lower by far in carnality than any thing in the Jewish ceremonial; lower, perhaps, than anything that we have a right to impute to Greeks or Romans. Animal sacrifice is discarded, to establish a human sacrifice as cardinal to divine religion! It is a sufficiently mean idea, that the gods love the steam and smell of animal slaughter; but it is still more shocking to imagine that the bloodshed of a holy person is in any sense "a sacrifice for sin," "a propitiation" (or mercy seat? Rom. iii., 25); "an offering and sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savor" (Eph. v., 1); and that by a belief in it, or by a trust and reliance upon it, we become delivered from an evil conscience; that is, from a sense of God's displeasure for our sins. Are we really to believe that the most High was pleased by the crucifixion of Jesus? If it be said, "No, he reprobated the deed, but he was pleased that Jesus so meekly submitted to an inevitable fate," this is mere evasion; for, all comparison of it to a legitimate sacrifice then vanishes. If not death, but mere torture had been inflicted, the "meek submission" remains as praiseworthy as before; but, except as an example of conduct, nothing here (be it death, or be it torture), has any relation to our consciences, or has the least tendency to deliver us from a sense of guilt, if the remembrance of past sins troubles us.

Unitarian Christians are, in general, unwilling to admit that the "atoning blood of Christ" is taught in the New Testament. It is not taught exactly as Archbishop Anselm is said first to have defined it, as "compensation" paid to God for remitting the punishment of man; but that Paul, John the apostle in the Revelations, the writer to the Hebrews, and the First Epistle of Peter, inculcate purification by the sacrifice of Christ, it seems useless to deny. That the Epistle of James is wholly silent on this and other matters, is true; and, I think, it instructively shows how rapidly James was isolated in holding fast to the original doctrine of the Jerusalem Church. When that Church perished corporately with Jerusalem in the war of Titus, no authoritative protest remained among Jewish Christians against the notions which prevailed with the Gentile churches.

It is a remarkable fact, that in the modern evangelical creed this most untenable and most unspiritual doctrine of Human Sacrifice is made paramount. The Divinity of Christ is chiefly valued, because without it "the Atonement" cannot be sustained. But nothing can sustain "the Atonement." It must be thrown over, equally with Eternal Punishment and Vicarious Sin, to make Christian doctrines even plausible to deliberate and impartial thought.

VATICANISM.

THE UNITED STATES A SPLENDID FIELD FOR ITS PROPAGATION.

Col. Fred. Hecker is writing a series of articles for the St. Louis Westliche Post, in which he discusses a very interesting topic. Col. Hecker is of opinion that the United States furnish a very favorable field for the development and the powerful influence of "Vaticanism" (ultramontanism), and he seeks to prove his conviction in those articles. There will be found annexed a translation of the second of these articles, which was published in the Westliche Post on the 26th of August last:—

If we consider the number of organizations of the order of Jesuits, with all its affiliated associations and fraternities already existing in the Union, we can say that this order is already more powerful here than in any other part of the world; that it develops an activity and stirring resoluteness which have their only parallel in the time when that order initiated its counteraction against the Reformation (see Macaulay and Ranke). And everything here is prepared to give the Jesuits the victory. They will triumph over our own political fabric; for they have unity of organization; lead the entire hierarchy; have an army of shrewd, wiry, intelligent, and persevering men; know how to take advantage of every incident, and to win the masses through an accommodating code of morals, calculated for, and conveniently adapted to, every class of community; and know how to educate in their schools a host of trustworthy adherents.

Wherever in Europe it was undertaken to crush Protestantism, either by slow process or violence, and wherever this succeeded, it was wrought by that order. In this effort they proceeded with a wonderful perseverance and almost sublime cunning. In the last quarter of the sixteenth century, the Protestant Reformation was vastly preponderating in Germany, and even in the Austrian provinces thereof. Near three-fifths of the whole, even in the latter, were Protestants. In one generation nearly the whole of Austria was subjected again to Rome. The new doctrine was first extirpated in the Italian and Spanish peninsulars; then the same process of destruction was simultaneously carried into France, the Low Countries, Poland, and Austria. This reaction was attempted to be carried even into Sweden, in the reign of John, the son of Gustave Wasa. It is known what efforts were made to destroy Protestantism in England at the time of Elizabeth and Mary, her predecessor.

With the Roman and Celtic races, the success was surprisingly rapid, and who can deny that here in our Union also, the pure or mixed Celtic element, with its influences and ramifications, is the main support of ultramontanism, for which element, only recently, Ben. Butler claimed the future empire of the Union. To explain this ethnological and psychological phenomenon, we find no room in a newspaper article. But the fact is well established.

In the endeavor to counteract the Reformation, whether by force or otherwise, organization of instruction, public and private, was resorted to as the most indispensable and essential of all means. When the reaction had strengthened itself so far as to be able to use force, it was used unhesitatingly, ruthlessly.

In the war against the Protestants in France, Pope Pius V. sent auxiliary troops, and issued a command to Count Santafore which reads literally as follows: "Not to make any Huguenot prisoner; every one taken to be cut down." Heretics had to be exterminated. There was an order exactly like it given the other day by the priests at San Salvador, Central America.

Even Princes of the Church met with no indulgence, if even the shadow of suspicion fell upon them, and the Reverend Bishop Kendrick, of St. Louis, is on the black list in Rome because of his work which opposes Infallibility. Under the Pontificate of Pius V., the Archbishop of Toledo was condemned by the Pope on account of sixteen theses in his works, which were suspected of having a tendency towards the Protestant doctrine of justification by faith, although the Archbishop had alleged in his defence, "that he had never intended anything else than war to heresy; that he had converted the erring from faith; that he had ordered the bodies of prominent heretics to be exhumed and burned; and that Catholics and Protestants had called him the best champion of the faith."

We may conclude from this condemnation of the Primate of the Spanish Church, how the rest of the people were dealt with in order to extirpate Protestantism. But the other day, Alfonso (the young King of Spain), who can well exclaim, as Telemachus does in old Homer, "No one knows his father," banished from the Madrid University all Professors whose Vaticanism was suspected.

Of what kind this instruction, order, discipline of the masses were at the time of the counter-Reformation is manifest from the fact that no one was sure of his life or property. The City of Rome overflowed with bandits; one of them, a celebrated chief by the name of Morianazzo, having been offered an amnesty by the Pope if he would quit his trade, literally sent him a reply; which means, in short, that he thought his present profession was the safest. The now so much vaunted education of the people by the priests, has resulted up to this day (in Italy and Spain) in the almost every-day depredations of robbers and bandits; who are nevertheless very regular in hearing mass; who bear on their persons consecrated amulets, relics, and medals of the Virgin; say their "Ave Maria," and are not brought up in free schools.

The Jesuits of affiliated orders took every means of introducing themselves into even the most Protestant countries, and, as one of them stated himself, "they sneaked in like lambs, and then behaved like wolves." At first they only demanded permission to establish schools, seminaries, etc., etc. Then they preached, confessed people, introduced processions of clerical pomp, and finally succeeded in getting the members of their Church into the offices (which will be the case here after a while), and finally to exclude other religionists from even becoming citizens. Every true critical history, which treats of the counter-Reformation, will prove this.

Here in our Union, they do not need any permission to establish schools and universities. By reading Sadler's Catholic Directory for 1875, one can convince himself what vast school-power the Vatican already dominates over in this country, and what a mass of persons it educates to its purposes, an immense propaganda! Upon females its influence is particularly exercised in conformity with a letter of instruction of Gregory XIII., of the year 1574. But even this privilege of establishing all sorts of educational institutions of their own, which they only obtained in the Old World (very recently in France) after tremendous struggles, is by the ultramontanians not considered enough here; but their object is to crush every other school system, and, above all, our free-school system.

If we look at the present emigration we find not only a large importation of exiled or dissatisfied members of monastic orders, school-brothers, and secular clergymen, but of a large mass of their faithful flocks. It is only a few days ago that an immigration of eight thousand Italians was announced as coming over. The Protestant immigration is constantly diminishing. In this wise, even without repeating and ballot-stuffing, by mere force of numbers, Protestantism must go to the wall. Unfortunately, the Anglo-Americans, not well posted up in matters and things beyond the United States, see no danger, do not believe in any danger, and will deserve the rod, which they suffer to be bound up and in which binding up they even assist.

The European governments look on with pleasure. In former times they got rid of their criminals by emigration; now they rejoice to see themselves delivered of their troublesome clergy and their adherents. Father Müller, not long ago, stated the Catholic population in the United States at thirteen million, which in twenty years might almost double itself. And how can this vote, closely welded together and operating like an iron wedge, be successfully met by an anti-Vatican opposition, broken as it is into innumerable sects, fighting one another, and torn to rags by prayer-witches, Sabbath and temperance fanatics, Good Templars, and other irrational one-idea organizations?

There are, as we will endeavor to show in our articles, in our social organization, as well as in our form of government, elements which without doubt necessarily drive towards the Vatican. It is folly to believe, as many do, that the Roman (religious) system was more favorable to one form of government, to wit, the monarchical, and that it would flourish best in a monarchy. Romanism puts up with any political system, provided it allows to it the expansion and settlement of its powers. On this condition it likes the republic as much as a monarchy; nay, it likes the first perhaps better, on account of its larger liberty, and the absence of control. Romanism has fought both monarchies and republics, when and as often as they crossed its path. Of what a Pope can do in republics, Venice and Switzerland can tell a mournful tale. Profound scholars and serious investigators have of late called upon Rome to speak out on the question of recognition or non-recognition of constitutional monarchy. This is a vain demand; besides that, the question is already decided in the late syllabus. Rome will tolerate even a constitutional monarchy, which, like that of Belgium, gives it ample elbow-room, as upon the same condition it has allied itself with absolute monarchies, with aristocracies and republics. They are all subject to Rome, according to the canon law. [This may explain why in a recent important law-suit the Italian legal tribunals took special pains to declare in their decision that the canon law was no longer in force in the Kingdom of Italy.—NOTE OF THE TRANSLATOR.]

The Vatican at the present moment has far greater sympathies with our North American Republic than with the German Empire, because our Union furnishes fatter and less restricted pasture grounds. No restrictive laws are to be feared here, and that is a great attraction.

Under the reign of Kings William III. and IV. of Prussia, Rome was for absolute monarchy. Under the Emperor William it has nothing but freedom on its lips, disports itself in democratic demonstrations, and is coquetting with socialism.

No books have ever struck severer blows on monarchy than the works of the Jesuit Fathers Mariana, Bellarmine, Suarez, Boucher; and when Clements, the Jesuit pupil, had struck down with the assassin's steel Henry III. of France, Pope Sixtus VII. was jubilant, and exclaimed, that in the death of the King God's expressed will was clearly to be seen. A god of bandits this Signor Dio. Is this the history to be taught in the confessional schools of the Vatican, in opposition to history taught in the "godless free schools"?

We confess for ourselves that when, in our younger days, we read the works of the above-named fathers, the arguments which we there found in favor of popular sovereignty and against monarchy, laid down as they were with great acumen, great intellect, and subtlety, destroyed in our mind every vestige of monarchical feeling, and grounded us as firmly as a rock on Republican principles. Those Jesuit authors, however, have only brought into a perfect system of syllogisms what already, before the foundation of the order, had been taught in many places in the canon law. See, for instance: Decreti, Pars I., Distinctio 96; Ib. II., Causa 11, Quest. 1; Sexti Decreti, Lib. II., Tit. 14, Cap. 2; Extravagantes Comm., 1 Lib., Tit. 8.

It is, therefore, a very obvious mistake on the part of the majority of our people here to believe that the name of a Republic, that the republican form of our government, is a sufficient bulwark against the domination of the Vatican over our social and political institutions.

The Jesuits look upon Republics as a far better harvest-field for their lust for power. They know full well that it is far more difficult to carry on war against a government with a hereditary chief, which is as centralized and as firmly knit together, and as fond of power, and as quick to act and to move, as the concentrated power of the hierarchy, than to combat States where the strength of government rests not in the centre, but in the masses, as it were peripherically. And those masses (of the people) have no system, no tenacious holding on to maxims, which have an application in the far future; those masses are agitated by the fluctuations of the day, often misled by selfish leaders living from day to day, quickly oblivious of what happened only a short time before; those masses are without knowledge of past history, and of the laws of logical evolution in the life of peoples. Hence the republican system of government of itself gives us no guarantee against Vatican domination. The contrary is the case.

Indeed Pius IX. is right when he says that the United States are ripe for his harvest. Perhaps some one, after a generation has passed, may remember what we for the last few years have predicted in the way of warning, asking our people to be vigilant and on their guard, not from a presumption to play the prophet, but from a knowledge of the laws which rule the development of national life. And when weak-minded persons object to us, that we discuss this "dark" question so often and so earnestly, we answer them simply: This question in the course of time will create more violent commotions than the slavery question did. It will convulse alike the North and the South.

GARIBALDI, in acknowledging a portrait of Bismarck which had been sent him, wrote, "You have sent me a likeness of Bismarck, stamped with a grandeur and truthfulness unparalleled. You have thoroughly understood this great and illustrious man, to whom the world is indebted for those noble moral battles which, more than the material ones, will hurl to the dust the sacerdotal hydra of falsehood."

CALVINISM, could it have had the world under its feet, would have been as merciless as the inquisition itself.—J. A. Froude.

THE BIBLE AND WOMAN.

BY MRS. ANNIE BESANT, OF LONDON.

It is a peculiarity of the Bible that it always manages to be on the popular side, and that it always adapts its words into accordance with popular views. Whenever a truth is born into the world, and the ignorant majority look askance at the new comer, then the Bible steps forward, and solemnly condemns it as anti-Christian, and proclaims that it is lying under the wrath of God. As the truth grows stronger, and wins its way, becoming gradually received into good society, the Bible stretches its limits, and finds that a little explanation will make everything comfortable; so it "receives this person into the congregation of Christ's Church," and gives it a Christian name, and ever afterwards boasts that it was here, as always, on the side of progress. When astronomical science raised its head, the Church struck at it with the Bible, and declared that its truths were falsehoods, because the Bible taught that the world was stationary, and the firmament fixed above it; but now that every one knows that the teachings of astronomy are true, the Bible has been twisted to accord with them, and Moses' firmament has dissolved into boundless ether, in which numberless worlds revolve, and immeasurable distances stretch on every side. When geology was born, the cry was just the same: the Bible taught differently, and therefore geology must be wrong; but geology went on its way quietly, and now every one knows that that the world has existed for ages, and the Bible no longer denies the fact, but struggles to separate its verses so widely that there may be room made between them for geological periods. Finally, as science shivers the Bible in every direction, the Bible finds out that it was never intended to teach science, and that scientific accuracy is not ensured by "inspiration."

While slavery was popular, the Bible approved of it; it was supported by the clergy, and proved God-willed from God's own book. Only the pulpit from which the fallibility of the Bible was taught was open to the denouncer of slavery, until popular feeling turned against the accursed institution, and then the Bible suddenly found out that the spirit of Christianity was against slavery, and Christian England followed in the steps of "infidel France," whose proclamation of fraternity was not a sham, like the "dearly-beloved brethren" of the believers. While kings were strong and peoples weak, the Bible taught the doctrine of the divine right of kings; but "infidels" sounded the trumpet-note of defiance, and proclaimed the rights of man; and peoples, learning their power, laughed to scorn the prerogatives of crowns, and the Bible is no longer the buckler of tyrannical monarchies, because priests no longer dare to preach its doctrines of passive obedience.

And surely the same path shall be trodden to-day as regards the attitude of the Bible on the "woman question." The Bible teaches the subordinate position of women. It curses her in its third chapter, and proclaims that the pains of travail are her punishment; but doctors laugh at the curse, and ward it off with the use of chloroform. It sanctions polygamy and prostitution; but civilization is destroying the one, and is grappling with the evils of the other. It bids wives submit to their husbands as to God himself; but law steps in, and rescues the wife from brutality. It tells them to be in subjection; but women are struggling for freedom. It suffers them not to teach, but bids them keep silence; but woman's tongue and woman's pen are sharing with man the labor of the education of the world. But still the Bible strikes at woman's elevation, and the Bible is quoted against her equality with man, and the tone of society regarding her has for centuries been moulded by Bible teachings, and the degradation in which the Bible keeps her is considered as her God-given position. Soon, when this subjection is a thing of the past, the Bible will change sides, and will proclaim that it teaches the liberty of women, just as it has discovered that it taught the liberty of slaves. Already there are signs of the coming change; "Eastern ideas" are whispered about, and such texts even are quoted as "there is neither male nor female"; and some pretend that it is the Bible that has raised women to the position they now hold! Christians forget to teach that while among them the women were told to "keep silence," among the noble Teuton pagans women were honored and revered as teachers; that while the Christians only admitted men to their priesthood, and regarded women as an evil necessity rather than as a blessing, the Western nations had their priestesses sacred to the roughest and the wildest; that while the Christians were loose in their lives, divided between asceticism and rioting, the Goth lived with one wife, reverencing her, as well as honoring the mother in her age. Before the Christians spread their Eastern teachings among the Western nations by sword and by fire, women were revered by our rough forefathers, and shared with men their labors and their honors,—true wives and real helpmates of the harsher sex. But Christianity degraded them, and thrust them down, holding them up as daughters of Eve, the first temptress, who brought sin and death into the world, bidding men despise them, and teaching that evil asceticism which puts celibacy above marriage (according to the Essene teaching of Jesus), and which regards women as the necessary safety-valves for man's passions, rather than as the ennobling objects of his love. But, in spite of all this degradation wrought by Christianity, it never quite succeeded in stamping out, in the West, the old Gothic feeling, which broke out in the theory of chivalry, and still exists to-day, and which is now regathering strength, and promises well for the speedy emancipation of women. When the poison instilled by Christianity into the relations of the sexes shall quite have worked itself out, then men and women will be able to pay each to each due honor and respect; then wife and mother will not imply the subjection of woman and the mastery of man, but will denote the most sacred relationship in Nature, in which is found the most perfect and most equal friendship, in which mutual tenderness, mutual passion, mutual reverence, bind men and women with a bond whose holiness and strength can never be realized by those who regard women as the Bible teaches, instead of as the friend and partner of man, co-equal sharer with him in the grandeur of humanity.—National Secular Society's Tract No. 4.

THE ISSUE IN OHIO.

Proclamation has been made by the Democratic leaders of Ohio, that this State campaign is to be of decisive effect as to the issues of the presidential election of 1876, and in the very front of these issues they have placed one which involves not only the national interests, but the character, the good, and whole moral being of the American people. An attempt is being made to secure the indorsement by the people of the greatest State of the West, and one of the greatest in the Union, of a financial policy which, if followed by the national government, would discredit Republican institutions the world over; expose the American people to the ridicule and contempt of civilized mankind; make our political, as well as business, life more than ever the hot-bed of gambling and corruption, and plunge the country into all those depths of moral and national bankruptcy and ruin which, as all history demonstrates, never fail to follow a course so utterly demented in its wickedness. The advocates of inflation in this State, as they themselves give us to understand, expect the people of Ohio, by the election of the Democratic candidates, to declare their approbation of that financial policy, that inflation fever, which will, under the stimulus of such success, sweep like wild-fire over the Western and Southern States, overwhelm and subjugate the Democratic national convention next year, dictate its policy and its candidates, and in 1876 put an inflation party into the field strong enough to defy opposition. I candidly confess I see good reason to apprehend such consequences. I do, indeed, not undervalue the importance of the manly, honorable, and patriotic condemnation pronounced by the Democratic convention of New York, on the doctrines preached by their Democratic brethren here. It was an act deserving the grateful applause of every good citizen; but I doubt very seriously, whether that act will stem the flood, if the inflationists in Ohio are successful. Pennsylvania has already followed them, and it is but too probable that the sectional feeling which the inflation movement strives to excite in the West and South will be inflamed to more intense bitterness, and that the financial question will be used as a new agency to revive the course of sectional warfare in our politics. Let us indulge in no delusion. The success of the inflation party in Ohio will be the signal for the general charge along the whole line to submerge the best principles, and leave helpless in the rear the best leaders of the Democratic party, and, spurred on by a reckless demagogism, to capture the national power by a tumultuous rush. This is no matter of mere local concern, as some weakly pretend to believe. It is a national danger which all good citizens should unite to avert, and which surely can be averted only by the defeat of inflation here.

I repeat, therefore, I have not come here to whitewash the faults of the Republican party, to apologize for its shortcomings, or to serve its ambitions; but here is an incalculable mischief threatened by the other side to be prevented, and I simply try to do my duty as I understand it. I beg leave to address my remarks directly to the Democrats of Ohio. In view of my former relations, I trust they will not, for this direct appeal, accuse me of impropriety. When I, as an independent man, in the Senate and before the people, advanced a policy of conciliation and justice with regard to the South; when I attacked official corruption and the transgression of those in power; when I denounced violations of the principles of the constitution perpetrated by Republican officers of the State,—you, my fellow-citizens, lavished upon me expressions of applause and confidence, for which I was duly grateful; but the Democratic inflationists seek to discredit my good faith by the accusation that I have changed sides.

Let us see. In 1872, I stood before you as an advocate of the liberal ticket, which had also been adopted and was supported by the Democrats. That ticket was nominated upon a platform containing as an essential part of its political faith the following resolutions:—

"The public credit must be sacredly maintained, and we denounce repudiation, in every form and guise; a speedy return to specie payment is demanded, alike by the highest consideration of commercial morality and honest government."

That platform was solemnly indorsed and adopted as the political faith of the Democratic party by their national convention at Baltimore. Upon that platform they stood then, and upon it I faithfully stand to-day. Democrats, where are you in making that declaration of principles? I was in earnest. If your leaders betrayed their declared faith, what right have they to accuse me of deserting my course, when I resist its betrayal by them?—Carl Schurz, at Cincinnati.

THE EFFECTS OF INFLATION.

From an authentic statement before me, it appears that in 1873, when the business crash occurred, there were in the aggregate more legal-tenders and bank-notes out than ever before. Including the fractional currency there were $9,000,000 more than in 1872; over $29,000,000 more than in 1871; over $52,000,000 more than in 1870; over $58,000,000 more than in 1869; over $56,000,000 more than in 1868; over $46,000,000 more than in 1867. And even if we count the compound interest notes into the volume of circulating currency, we find that we had in 1873, the year of the crash, a general aggregate of $9,000,000 more than in 1872; over $29,000,000 more than in 1871; over $51,000,000 more than in 1870; over $56,000,000 more than in 1868. And yet the last year mentioned has generally been called the year of unexampled prosperity, and when, during all these years, the currency has reached its greatest volume, that collapse came, which the inflationists would have us believe was caused by contraction. There is the record. There was expansion and no contraction; and if there was no contraction, the contraction cannot have caused the collapse in business.—Carl Schurz, at Cincinnati.

NO RELIEF THROUGH INFLATION.

The question recurs, whether an inflation of currency will furnish the relief we need. You say that, though the banks in business centres are full of money lying idle for want of employment, we want more currency. I tell you business can have as much as it likes without any further act of the government. According to law every one of you, or any association you may form having the necessary capital, can start a bank of issue. A general license to that effect through the free-banking act was given by Congress last winter. We heard so much of the West and South wanting none but local circulation, and starving for greater banking facilities. Now you can make yourselves comfortable. All legal impediments are removed. You can issue any amount of currency; but, behold, the currency will not inflate one cent's worth; and you, worthy patriots, who clamor for more currency, do not lift a finger to create more. Everybody knows that millions and millions of money are lying unemployed in the business centres of the country, East and West, looking for investments sufficiently safe. Everybody knows that in every large city in the land there are dozens of capitalists with abundant means which they might devote to the creation of bank paper issues, if it were profitable. Everybody knows that there is scarcely a town of respectable size without men of means fully able to form a combination for that purpose. On the first of July of this year new currency had been issued to new and old banks amounting to $7,780,000; but according to a letter addressed to me by the comptroller of the currency, $23,579,134 of legal tender notes have been deposited with the treasurer for the purpose of retiring national bank-notes under the act of June 20, 1874, while, under the redemption system created by the same act, over $4,000,000 of national bank-notes have been retired, by far the largest part of this reduction taking place in the West and South, which, we are told, were starving for more circulation. By the 15th of September the figures had risen to nearly $29,000,000. How is this? The business of the country is, they tell us, suffering most terribly for want of currency; and that same business of the country not only is not accommodating itself by issuing more when it has an opportunity, but voluntarily surrendering many millions of what it has otherwise.—Carl Schurz, at Cincinnati.

ROBBING THE POOR BY INFLATION.

We are told that there is an expansion of currency, and its consequent depreciation will benefit the poor, inasmuch as it will benefit the debtor as against the creditor by enabling the former to pay off his debts in less value than that in which they were contracted. The morality of that argument I will not discuss; but let us look at the pretended facts upon which it is based. Statistics of the private indebtedness in the United States before us would unquestionably show that more than seventy-five per cent. of it is owing, too, by men commanding comparatively large means, and that the laborers for wages are the least indebted class of society, even in proportion to their earnings and savings, and next to them the farmers and the small business men. But laboring men are, to a very large amount, creditors of the country. I venture to say that there is neither a manufacturer, nor a merchant, nor a professional man of means in this assembly who is not a debtor; and among his creditors are, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, his fellow-workmen, or his servants, to whom he owes wages for a part of a week or a month. It has been calculated by good authority that the wages thus constantly owing for an average of half a month's service or work amount in the whole country to $120,000,000. And who is it that owns the deposits in the savings banks amounting to about $760,000,000? Not the rich, but the laboring people and persons of small means, who put their surplus earnings there for safe keeping. It is estimated that the same class has in national and private banks and in trust companies another $200,000,000, and that nearly $130,000,000 is owing them in other kinds of debts. There is then the sum of about $1,200,000,000 owing to the laboring people and men of small means, constituting their savings to that amount. That class are creditors, and you pretend that for their benefit you will expand the currency, gold being fifteen per cent. premium. Those savings have a value of $1,020,000,000 in gold. Expand the currency until gold is thirty per cent. premium, and you have robbed those people of $180,000,000. Expand until the gold premium is fifty per cent., and you have stripped them of $420,000,000 of their hard-earned money.—Carl Schurz, at Cincinnati.

THE ONLY SAFETY IN RESUMPTION.

But, if you inflate the currency under the present circumstances, what will be the condition of things? Then the additional greenbacks will not appear as creatures of an imperative public necessity, to save the life of the republic in the extremity of its peril. They will appear as a product of a scheme, the purposes of which are dark. The world will begin to suspect that when a government, in the face of disastrous experiences of mankind, resorts to so extraordinary and dangerous a measure, without necessity, its integrity cannot longer be depended upon. Doubts will arise, and very serious doubts, not as to ability, but as to the honest intentions of the government to redeem its promises, and these doubts will fall upon our business life a deadening blight. The last remnant of confidence will be paralyzed. The world will see the spectre of a republic looming behind so reckless a financial policy. The faith of mankind in the integrity of our government, giving away our credit, will be shaken to its very foundations. And as you sometimes see depositors of a bank excited by a rumor that the cashier is making away with the cash, and instinctively unite in a feverish run upon the counter, so you must not be surprised if, in a general alarm about threatening dishonesty, you see the securities, not only of the government, but of our private corporations also, flung by hundreds of millions into the market, producing a crash more fearful and destructive, and a paralysis more deadly to all of our economic interests than any people on earth can remember for generations past.

But I ask you, with all candor and soberness, business men, farmers, laborers, honest and patriotic citizens of all classes, is it not time to stop such wanton schemes of mischief? There being an abundance of money in the banks that lies unemployed, it is evidently not more money that we need. What do we need? Confidence! Confidence which will induce timid capital to venture into enterprise. And what is the first requirement to restore confidence? It is stability above all things. Stability of current values, which renders possible business calculations of reasonable certainty. When the capitalist is assured that the dollar of to-morrow will have the same value as the dollar of to-day, and this stability of value finds full security in a rational and fixed monetary system, then, and no sooner, will he liberally trust his money to those who want actively to employ it, and promise a fair return. But who of you can tell me what that money will be worth twenty days after the opening of the new session of Congress? Who of you can tell me what wild antics that money may play with the fortunes of all of us, if those who clamor for inflation now shall control the national government a year hence?

My fellow-citizens, all sane men agree that of the great problem which oppresses us, there is but one ultimate solution; it is the return to a specie basis. Whatever other schemes may be devised, they do not even pretend to have a permanent final settlement of the question in view. The resumption of specie payments is the only rational one, for no other system will remove current values from the reach of the arbitrary power of the government. No other can give to current values that stability without which no safe business calculation can be made. No other can restore that confidence which is the first prerequisite of a new period of prosperity. But the resumption of specie payments is also the only possible solution. It must at last come; even the inflationists, while wildly seeking to throw difficulties in its way, still admit that it must finally come. It is as inevitable as fate. Is it not the part of prudent men, then, to move resolutely and with unflinching firmness in the direction of an end so desirable, and also so inevitable?—Carl Schurz, at Cincinnati.

A SOLEMN APPEAL.

I solemnly appeal to every good citizen of this State to be mindful of his responsibility. Upon your action on the 12th of October hangs a great decision. If the people of Ohio strike down the inflation movement in their midst, that will be its final overthrow. It may linger along, but the power of its onset will be broken. If this fails, and the advocacy of barbarism and ruin rush victoriously into the field of next year's great contest, then who knows but that future generations may have to look back upon the one hundredth anniversary of American independence—the time which before all others should fill the national heart with the noblest aspirations—as one of the blackest years in the history of the republic? To meet the danger here is, therefore, the first thing needful from the honest men of all parties. I call upon them to unite in a common effort. Let no one fear that the defeat of an opposition party which uses the advantages of its position to promote such nefarious schemes will be interpreted as an approval of wrong on the other side; for I assure you when this great danger which threatens to engulf all in the whirlpool of corruption, ruin, and dishonor is successfully averted, you will find the men who combated the wrongs of either side as true as ever to their principles. Citizens of Ohio, you are charged with a great office. You have to give the world the assurance that the people of the great American republic are honest and enlightened people; that their integrity and intelligence may be trusted alike, and that mankind may count upon them in the forward march of civilization. I entreat you not to fail in so glorious a duty!—Carl Schurz, at Cincinnati.

IN THE COURSE of an address lately delivered by Cardinal Manning, in Ireland, he stated his belief that nothing but the intervention of the "Blessed and Immaculate Mother" saved France from destruction at the hands of the Germans.

THE NEW ASPECT OF THE CATHOLIC PROBLEM.

In an article on the O'Connell Centennial, the Saturday Review makes the following striking remarks:—

"The principal objection to a celebration of O'Connell's memory is that he has no surviving adherents. Since his time political issues have assumed another form, and the Roman Catholic hierarchy has adopted or proclaimed a system which he could never have foreseen. It is impossible to know what he would have thought of the Immaculate Conception or of the infallibility of the Pope; but it is not improbable that he would have passively acquiesced in both doctrines as mysteries with which laymen had no concern. He would certainly not have approved the secular policy of the Jesuits, which has brought the Holy See into relations of hostility with nearly every State in Europe. With O'Connell's connivance and approval, and probably in accordance with his sincere opinion, the Irish Catholic prelates of his day disclaimed for the satisfaction of Parliament all the most obnoxious theories which have since been propounded in the Syllabus and in the Vatican Decrees. Much of his success was due to his close alliance with the priests; but, although they might be indispensable to him as agents and auxiliaries, they were the subordinates, and he was the undisputed chief. His Orthodoxy, according to the good old type of hereditary Catholicism, was undisputed; but there is no reason to suppose that he ever troubled himself with the study of theology. He can scarcely have believed in the subordination of the State to the Church, which had not been seriously claimed for three centuries."

The change in the relations of the Catholic Church to the world since the Ecumenical Council have been felt throughout the world. The great struggle in Germany has been one of the results. The great argument in England, between Mr. Gladstone and Cardinal Manning and others, has been a sign of the times. France, Spain, and Austria have illustrated the aggressive pretensions of the Church. The vaunted alliance between the Church and the Democratic party in Ohio is an incident of the general history. The apprehension of what may be loosely termed a Know-Nothing revival in this country has not on the part of the Catholic Church been as serious as it might have been. The sagacity of the Catholic hierarchy has been somewhat at fault here. The Know-Nothing party left behind it an unsavory memory; but it does not follow that Ultramontane assumptions of a preposterous character may not be resisted without Know-Nothingism. The Know-Nothings of twenty-one years ago had no such ammunition as the Encyclical and the Syllabus and a file of the Catholic Telegraph would furnish; and a party now proposing to resist any encroachments of the Church upon the State, or to assume that there were such encroachments for the sake of agitation, would not be such idiots as to begin by making war upon all foreign-born citizens and their descendants to the third generations; but they would rally at once to their support the liberal Germans, who would take part with the same zeal with which in Fatherland the imperial policy of Germany against Rome is sustained. It will not do, therefore, to measure the antagonism that may be awakened against the Catholic Church as a politician, as Judge Taft would say, by the Know-Nothing incapacity of a former generation; and the Archbishop of Cincinnati can claim, if troubles come, that he predicted them when he opposed the proclamation of the dogma of infallibility in the Ecumenical Council. Judge Taft was careful to mark the distinction between the clergy and laity of the Catholic Church. There is another distinction to be noted—that between the Ultramontanes and the Liberal Catholics. —Cincinnati Commercial.

A SCOTCH CLERGYMAN, visiting in the parish of St. Ninians, came to a house where he wished to get a Bible for reference. The guide told her daughter to "look for the book on the tap o' the aumry." The girl searched, but could not find it; when the mother said, "Preserve me, I'm sure it maun be thereabouts some way; for we had it at the time o' the flitting." "And when did you flit?" said the minister. To which the wife replied, "Ay, let me see—it will be nineteen years come Beltane."

THOSE persons who began to eat large quantities of fish a few years ago, and have kept up the practice ever since without having experienced the desired increase of intellectual capacity, may thank the New Orleans Republican for this explanation: "Unless a man has brains, it is useless for him to eat brain food. It has never been claimed for fish that it creates, it only strengthens, the brain."

"MAISTER," said an old Scotch servant, "whether it's gude manners, when a gentleman gies ye a glass o' whuskey, to tak' a drap, or drink aff the haill o' it?" The master having, in homely Scotch phrase, judiciously replied to this poser that the courtesy consisted in imbibing the whole, the man exclaimed, with a sigh of relief, "Then, Gude be thankit, I was mannerly!"

A LONDON correspondent of a Liverpool paper tells of another infliction from which the people of London are suffering. All the barrel organs under the care of the Italian immigrants have been supplied with Moody and Sankey's hymn-tunes, which they are now grinding out at every street-corner.

"WE READ in de good book," says a colored Baptist brother down South, "ob John de Baptist; neber of John de Methodist."

Poetry.

THE YELLOW-HAMMER'S NEST.

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

The yellow-hammer came to build his nest
High in the elm tree's ever-nodding crest;
All the long day, upon his task intent,
Backward and forward busily he went;

Gathering from far and near the tiny shreds
That birdies weave for little birdies' beds;
Now bits of grass, now bits of vagrant string,
And now some queerer, dearer sort of thing.

For on the lawn, where he was wont to come
In search of stuff to build his pretty home,
We dropped one day a lock of golden hair
Which our wee darling easily could spare;

And close beside it tenderly we placed
A lock that had the stooping shoulders graced
Of her old grandsire; it was white as snow,
Or cherry-trees when they are all ablow.

Then thrave the yellow-hammer's work apace;
Hundreds of times he sought the lucky place
Where sure, he thought, in his bird-fashion dim,
Wondrous provision had been made for him.

Both locks, the white and golden, disappeared;
The nest was finished, and the brood was reared;
And then there came a pleasant summer's day
When the last yellow-hammer flew away.

Ere long, in triumph, from its leafy height,
We bore the nest so wonderfully light,
And saw how prettily the white and gold
Made warp and woof of many a gleaming fold.

But when again the yellow-hammers came,
Cleaving the orchards with their pallid flame,
Grandsire's white locks and baby's golden head
Were lying low, both in one grassy bed.

And so more dear than ever is the nest
Ta'en from the elm tree's ever-nodding crest.
Little the yellow-hammer thought how rare
A thing he wrought of white and golden hair!

—Harper's for September.

BABY vs. THEOLOGY.

A smiling face, a dimpled chin,
Some tender eyes of blue;
Wherefore is she condemned for sin,
My little maid of two?

She runs to meet me up the path;
Her graces mine renew.
'Tis false! she is no child of wrath,
This little maid of two.

Her little hand is on my cheek,
It thrills me through and through;
My lips refuse awhile to speak,
But kiss my maid of two.

You talk of primal wickedness;
Pray what has that to do
With all this laughing blessedness,
This little maid of two?

"Depraved and totally undone,"
I think'st about your view;
But when your argument is spun,
Here's still my maid of two.

Her innocence, her artless ways,
Her faith and love so true,
Refute your dogma to God's praise;
This little maid of two.

Ah me! were all the world as she,
What should the angels do
But yield their palms, bestow their crowns
On little maids of two?

NEW CASTLE, Aug. 7.

—B. S. Parker, in the Indianapolis Herald.

EPITAPH

FOUND ON THE TOMBSTONE OF ABNER KILLEY, IN ASHFIELD, MASS., DATED 1723.

An apoplectic seized my powers
When I was not expecting death;
The conflict lasted twenty hours,
And then I yielded up my breath.

Now when you this inscription read,
Remember you are born to die;
You know not when or with what speed
The shaft of death from God may fly.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 2.

Andrew Dickson, $1.37; Cash, $3.13; S. M. Whistler, $1; S. H. Jones, $1.50; M. C. Huling, $3.20; G. H. A. Morse, $3.20; American News Co., $2.55; F. A. Hunkley, $3; Isaac Liebmam, 75 cents; A. C. Folsom, $10; J. D. Stranahan, 45 cents; Chas. Greaves, $1; E. M. Berry, $3.20; Fred. Hyde, $1.80; Elisha H. Bearse, $1.60; O. L. Ashenfelter, 75 cents; E. A. Ford, $4.90; R. H. Ranney, $10; H. Miller, $6; R. W. Howes, $10; E. W. Meddough, $65; N. K. Chatterjee, $5.83; M. M. Gardner, 75 cents; L. G. Janes, 25 cents; Sam'l. Ritchie, $5; J. Heistand, $1; David Ballantine, $3.20; Chas. B. Michener, $1.60; David Branson, $43; Clara E. Nourse, $48; Fanny Brewer, $3; Henry Mueller, 25 cents; Chas. A. Miller, 25 cents; Louis Belrose, $20.10; A. M. Eaton, 15 cents; Julius Ferrette, $2; W. W. Justice, $1.20; W. Barbour, $2.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 7, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

F. R. A. ANNUAL REPORT.

The Report, in pamphlet form, of the Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association for 1875 is now ready.

It contains an Essay by Wm. C. Gannett, on "Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and an Essay by F. E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. B. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

It can be obtained, in Boston, at A. Williams & Co.'s, and by mail by addressing "Office of Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass."

Price of single copy, 35 cents; package of four copies or more, 25 cents each.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

WE TAKE great pleasure in announcing that Mr. David H. Clark, formerly of Northumberland, Pa., more recently of New Milford, Pa., and now of Florence, Mass., has kindly consented to become an editorial contributor to THE INDEX, and will furnish articles from time to time as convenience shall permit. Summarily dismissed by the Northumberland Unitarian Society on account of a frank avowal of his changed convictions, we trust he will find that honest thought honestly uttered is valued at its true worth by all who set freedom and truth above the claims of sect or creed. The articles he has already contributed to these columns have been of marked excellence, and are the best possible guarantee of the excellence of those to come.

THE LONDON Times makes merry over the little game of "reuniting Christendom," played recently at Bonn (so far as the English Church was concerned) by men who quarrel with all dissenting denominations at home, and won't even let a Methodist minister call himself "Reverend" on his daughter's tombstone. "In the meantime," adds the Nation with regard to Dr. Döllinger, "the learned and philosophical world, as well as simple people in Germany and elsewhere, begin to laugh at the Doctor and his efforts, and say that, as he has been a good Catholic all his life, and has swallowed everything but Papal Infallibility, he ought not to make such a fuss in his old age about swallowing this, and that he deserves no pity or sympathy—in which there is a painful amount of truth."

LAST SUNDAY we lectured at Florence, Massachusetts, in the fine new Cosmian Hall, on "The Great Public Duty of Radicalism in America." In the evening a meeting of those interested in the Liberal League movement was held, and Messrs. A. T. Lilly, David H. Clark, and Austin Ross, of Florence, and Messrs. Joseph Marsh, Seth Hunt, and Dyer D. Lum, of Northampton, were appointed a joint committee to call a special meeting for the organization of a Liberal League either at Florence or Northampton, as they should judge best. The meeting, which was quite a full one, voted to form a Liberal League in one of these places, with only one dissenting vote. A very earnest spirit prevailed, and we felt greatly encouraged by this solid result of our day's work. The Free Congregational Society are flourishing finely, and have warmly welcomed Mr. D. H. Clark, their new resident minister. Nowhere have we met a more intelligent or earnest audience than this; and the new League will certainly be heard from when organized.

MRS. BESANT, WOMAN SUFFRAGE, AND CHRISTIANITY.

In THE INDEX of May 27, 1875, the following paragraph, founded on a letter which some one of our exchanges (we forget which) attributed to "M. D. C., in the Cincinnati Commercial," was published among our editorial "Glimpses":—

"Mrs. Besant has given a most noble rebuke to the temporizing and timid policy of the Woman Suffrage Society of Great Britain. Her brilliant success as a lecturer and the great popular influence she is winning by her character and ability led the Society to offer her a handsome income, 'on the condition that she should not give public expression to her radical, freethinking views on religious matters.' Mrs. Besant spurned the bribe, declaring that superstition is the tap-root of all oppressions, those of woman included. Woman suffragists who defend Christianity in this country might well learn a lesson of insight, courage, and moral dignity from brave Mrs. Besant."

In the Woman's Journal of June 5, 1875, the following criticisms on the preceding paragraph appeared under the caption "Illiberal Liberalism," and over the signature "T. W. H.":—

"About the facts here stated I know nothing. If any 'Woman Suffrage Society' proposed to engage a lecturer on the precise conditions here stated, it was certainly an insult to the lecturer and an outrage on free speech. But the experience of every one must teach him how easy it is so to state a transaction as to pervert it from its original character; and it is sometimes safer to withhold a severe judgment until one has heard both sides. Waiving that matter, I wish simply to speak of the last sentence of this paragraph. 'Woman Suffragists who defend Christianity in this country might well learn a lesson of insight, courage, and moral dignity from brave Mrs. Besant.' What does this mean?"

"It must either mean, I should suppose, that the editor of THE INDEX is aware of some action in this country like that attributed to the English 'Woman Suffrage Society'—in which case he ought openly to state the facts alleged,—or that he has in mind some prominent individual who consents to disguise his or her opinion on other questions, in order better to promote the Woman Suffrage cause. In this case also the individual should be pointed out and condemned. If it is not best to do this, it certainly is still less desirable to throw on the whole class of 'Woman Suffragists who defend Christianity in this country' the charge of hypocrisy."

"For I am not willing to impute to the editor of THE INDEX—faithful as he is, in his own path, to the Suffrage cause—the wish to found a reproach so serious on any offence less than hypocrisy. I am not yet ready to believe that he has drawn lines so narrow as to assume that for any individual to defend Christianity is in itself a proof of wanting 'courage and moral dignity.' The test of these qualities lies in the readiness to defend the faith one holds; and whether that faith be Christianity or atheism does not affect the matter. If it is base and unworthy to condemn the moral character of any one, merely because he is an atheist, is it any better to condemn him because he is a Christian? It cannot really be the attitude now taken by THE INDEX that it is the moral duty of any one to assume a position that he does not hold, or to make profession of anti-Christianity, when he is in very truth and sincerity a Christian."

"I trust, at any rate, that no Woman Suffrage organization in America will ever commit itself to any such narrowness as this; any more than to the other narrowness here attributed to the English Suffragists. There is room in the movement for those who, like Mrs. Besant, think that superstition is the tap-root of all oppression, and for those who think with equal sincerity that irreligion causes all oppression, while Christianity is the cure for all."

"And, apart from either of these classes, there are many of us, I trust, who have the charity or the common sense to see that, with such staunch Christians in our movement as Bishop Haven, and Mr. Fitzgerald, and Rev. J. H. Jones, we have little right to attribute want of courage or moral dignity to those 'Woman Suffragists who defend Christianity.' Mr. Abbot has hitherto served the movement as faithfully as any of these; and it is a pity that the first suggestion of the need of any theological plank in our platform should proceed from THE INDEX."

The sentence here construed so strangely meant simply that Mrs. Besant perceived (what we consider strictly true) that the cause of Woman-Suffrage encounters no hindrance so formidable as the religious teachings of the Christian Church and the Bible as to woman's proper position, "mission," and "sphere"; and that Mrs. Besant, penetrating to the deeper causes of conservative opposition to the enlargement of woman's activities and freedom of development, set a most worthy example of combined insight, courage, and moral dignity to the honest but decidedly obtuse people who on the one hand build up woman's cause in the name of human rights, yet on the other hand pull it down again in the name of Christianity. No charge of "hypocrisy" was either made or intended, of course; what we had in mind was an article by Rev. David Plumb which we had copied from the Woman's Journal into THE INDEX of Nov. 26, 1874, with the heading—"Gospel and Bible Not Against Woman's Rights," and which we had immediately followed with an extract from Mrs.

Besant herself, under the heading—"The Bible Against Woman's Rights." Seeing no special need of replying to the article above quoted, we let it pass unnoticed, as we do nine-tenths of the criticisms made on what we publish; but in the Woman's Journal of Aug. 7, 1875, our critic returned to the subject as follows:—

"It may be remembered that a statement was quoted in the Woman's Journal, some weeks since, charging some English Woman Suffrage Association with having insulted Mrs. Besant by inviting her to become their agent on condition that she would withhold her atheistical opinions. In answer to inquiry, one of the English correspondents of this paper states that, so far as she can ascertain, no proposition whatever has been made by any English organization to Mrs. Besant, whatever any private individual may have said. She, however, expresses the opinion that Mrs. Besant would not be a popular or successful lecturer on Woman Suffrage, on account of the prominence given by her to her atheistical opinions in her speeches on the other theme. But this is clearly a very different thing from an official demand for a pledge of silence on any subject."

"T. W. H."

It appeared, therefore, to be incumbent upon us, since the essential facts we had stated on the supposed authority of "M. D. C." were now denied, to institute some inquiries. Accordingly we addressed the following letter to the lady concerned:—

BOSTON, Aug. 17, 1875.

MRS. ANNIE L. BESANT, London:

Dear Madam,—May one of your American unknown friends take the liberty of addressing you? I enclose a paragraph I wrote in THE INDEX of May 27 respecting you, based on some statement of the sort in some paper whose name I have forgotten. This statement has been called in question by Col. Higginson in the Woman's Journal twice, and especially in this note in that paper of Aug. 7:—

[The paragraph was here copied.]

Will you kindly favor me with a statement of the real truth on this matter for publication in THE INDEX? . . .

Very respectfully yours,

F. E. ABBOT.

In response to this letter, Mrs. Besant has very kindly sent us the following communication, which will be a sufficient answer to the foregoing criticisms:—

Mrs. Besant's Letter.

19 WESTBOURNE PARK TERRACE, }
BAYSWATER, London, W., Sept. 1, 1875. }

Dear Sir,—The original paragraph was half true and half untrue. No official offer of the kind was ever made to me; it was only strongly intimated to me unofficially that my atheistic lecturing prevented an offer of employment being made me. I answered more than once that the movement for Woman Suffrage was not big enough to devote a life to; it was only a branch of the tree of oppression at the root [of which] I was striking by my work. During the spring I was asked several times to speak at the "drawing-room meetings," which were then fashionable; when I accepted one invitation from the Secretary of the Society in London to "speak for us," I said, laughing, to a friend: "They are ready enough to make use of my tongue where work wants doing, and no credit is to be gained by the doing; but you'll see they will never ask me to speak on their platform in public."

When my attention was called to the paragraph you send me, I was puzzled what to do. I make a practice of never contradicting newspaper paragraphs, because the work of doing so would be endless, if once begun. But as praise was given me which was only half deserved, I wrote to the Woman Suffrage Journal in England, saying the paragraph was inaccurate, and that the Society would doubtless as much object to the broadness of my views as I should object to their limitations. I received an answer from Miss Becker refusing insertion to my note, and saying: "If the Woman Suffrage Journal were to begin the task of setting our American cousins straight on their many errors respecting the movement in England, it would have more than enough to do; and, as the American papers do not reach the general public in this country, the contradiction of any of their statements in the W. S. Journal would simply give wider circulation to the original error."

It is a little odd that, while it was not worth while to insert my note, it was worth while to write to America about me, adding a statement which was either ignorantly or maliciously untrue. Perhaps the most complete answer to the statement that my views would prevent me from being a popular or successful lecturer on this subject is the dry fact that, while the Suffrage Society needs to ask for subscriptions in order to enable them to give lectures, I find, on the contrary, that a fair income may be made by lecturing on this and other subjects. The real truth is that the Woman Suffrage movement, as conducted by the National Society, is in no sense a popular movement in England; it is a movement of the upper classes, of the propertied women to whom alone a vote would be given, if Mr. Forsyth's bill became law. It is timid, apologetic, irresolute, favored much by the clergy, and smiled on by conservatives. I have never spoken of it thus before, because it is a movement in the right direction, and may be used by stronger and keener-sighted women as a stepping-stone to something better and nobler. Their hostility to myself has been to me a matter of indifference: when one is fighting a big battle, a regiment more or less of the enemy makes very little difference.

I send you a tract on the Bible part of the question; pardon its coarseness of printing, as it is the roughest of rough proofs. If you can shoot it at Christianity, pray employ it. I enclose also a paragraph about myself, which is going the rounds here; we may have a very interesting fight.

Mr. Bradlaugh asked me to say, when I wrote to you, that he hopes soon to shake hands with you on the other side.

Truly yours,

ANNIE BESANT.

F. E. ABBOT, Esq.

The paragraph referred to as enclosed in the above very interesting letter is as follows:—

MARITAL RIGHTS OF "FREETHINKERS."—Mrs. Annie Besant, "freethinker," and public lecturer on woman's rights, may shortly acquire a celebrity which the most ardent propagation of her peculiar views would never give her. She is, says a London correspondent, the wife of the Rev. Frank Besant, Vicar of Silsey, near Boston. After the lady became known for her advocacy of atheistic ideas, a formal deed of separation was obtained by her husband, and under this deed Mrs. Besant was entitled to the sole custody of her infant daughter Mabel until the child became of age, with the proviso that the father was to be visited by the girl for one month in each year. This deed was executed in 1873. Mr. Besant obtained possession of the child recently under covert of the annual visit, and he is said to insist on retaining her on the ground that from Mrs. Besant's atheistic preaching she has no right to the custody of her daughter. Under pressure Mr. Besant has meantime surrendered the child; but the question is expected to be brought before the law courts. In the case of Shelley it may be remarked that it was decided an atheist father should not be the guardian of his children. Messrs. Lewis and Lewis, the well-known solicitors, have been engaged to watch proceedings on behalf of Mrs. Besant, who will be supported by all the force of the freethinking party throughout the country.

CAPITAL AND LABOR.

Capitalists pool their money in order to increase its power. One hundred men contribute $5,000 each to the stock of a manufacturing company and to strengthen this combination of capital they unite with it the efficiency of complete and thorough organization. The money, the brains, and experience of these men are utilized by combination. They enter the labor market to purchase labor, and the cotton-goods market to sell their fabrics, and immediately they find themselves in competition with other corporations. In the projection of the enterprise combination was resorted to, and once more it is employed. Corporation A unites with corporations B, C, D, and E, in an effort to regulate, and as far as possible, to control, wages and to limit production. The power thus secured is immense, and it is needless to say is used to just such an extent and in such direction as self-interest may suggest. No one questions the right of these mill-owners to secure this power and to use it. Any attempt to alienate the right to combine would be resisted to the death by capitalists, and they would confidently appeal to the community to sustain them. Combination is entirely legitimate when loss is to be averted, or profits doubled and dividends declared.

Now, if combination is a legitimate resort of the manufacturer, why not of the operative? Labor is the capital of the workingman; unfortunately for him it is not tangible property as well. The product of the mill can be marketed at once, or carried indefinitely by its owner. The workingman's labor of to-day must be sold to-day or it disappears forever. Labor, from its inherent character, every one will probably admit, is at a tremendous disadvantage when compared with other forms of capital, and for this reason, if for no other, the laborer is justly entitled to all the protection that the civil law and the moral sense of the community in which he lives can give him.

To the capitalist the right of combination is conceded. For the laborer it should be demanded and secured, for it is one of the few tools or weapons that become potent in his hands.

It is popular to decry trades unions. No one can be more ready than I am to deplore and to condemn some features of the management of these societies, though it is far superior to what ignorant denunciation and designing misrepresentation would have us believe. They mean simply combination for the purpose of giving strength and efficiency to labor. They are to the workingman what single corporations and combined corporations are to the capitalist.

They are instituted to protect, to regulate, and as far as possible, to control, wages. Deprive the laborer of this right of combination while you reserve it to the capitalist, and the laborer is no longer a freeman.

This is precisely what the Fall River manufacturers have accomplished. "The form of the contract" they have forced upon the operatives is given by the Boston Daily Advertiser as follows:—

AGREEMENT.

We, the undersigned, each for himself, and not jointly, in consideration of our respective employment by the _____ MILLS, and as a part of our respective agreement with the same, do hereby severally agree with said company:—

1. That we will not, while in the employ of said corporation, belong to, or be influenced by the action of, any association or combination whose members are subject to the will of the majority in the matter of wages, or any other subject connected with the free right of any person to work for whom and at such rates as they may see fit.

2. That should we wish to leave the employ of said corporation, we will give notice in writing to our overseers, and will continue to work ten days after said notice; it being understood that notices of not more than one-eighth of any one class of operatives will be accepted within one week, or if less than eight persons in any one class, not more than one notice from such class; and should we leave the mill without giving and working the term of said notice, we will forfeit all money that may be due us from said corporation for labor previously performed.

3. Any breach of the provisions of this agreement, or the printed regulations posted in the mills, shall be considered 'misconduct' on the part of the respective subscribers hereto, and shall be sufficient cause for summary discharge from the employment of said corporation, without notice or payment of wages in lieu of notice.

It is an insult to our intelligence to characterize as a contract these conditions imposed upon starving men, women, and children. A contract implies mutual and reciprocal obligation, but the above "agreement" does not contain a suspicion of such obligation. With millions of dollars and compact organizations, these mill-owners combine to divide and to isolate the operatives, and to prevent on their part a resort to the very method of protection which is used so effectively against them. The only coöperation permitted is a negative combination by which the operatives, in event of a desire to seek other employment, are pledged to limit the number of notices to be served simultaneously, to a very small number. Combination for their own protection is "misconduct," while coöperation for the annihilation of their own power is a necessary condition to employment.

Such refined tyranny merits the execration of mankind. It must be rebuked and overthrown if the liberties of working men and women of this country are to be preserved. If an indifferent public suffer it to be continued, organized capital will, if possible, become more daring and reckless. The next move may be to coerce by "agreements" and "contracts" the votes of the operatives. How easy to say, "Vote for our candidate, vote against labor-reform candidates; they seek to regulate labor and wages."

I know full well the provocation that preceded the action of the Fall River corporations; and I know something of the wrongs of the working-class; but the question now is not "which is the more guilty party?" or "who struck the first blow?" For the moment but one question presses for a reply; and that is, "Shall liberty, life and property be protected or sacrificed?" All honor to the Governor of the Commonwealth for his prompt action; he has done wisely and well in protecting property and life. Will the free citizens of the Commonwealth see to it that liberty is as thoroughly vindicated?

For the present, workingmen are on their knees, and Capital treads them under her feet.

The hour may come when Labor will take her revenge; and when it does let the French Revolution bear witness how terrible her revenge will be. Too late the people will recognize responsibilities neglected and duties unperformed. But such catastrophes can be averted. Let the moral sense of the community find expression. Instruct these rash capitalists that there is a limit to their power. Force them to withdraw their selfish, short-sighted, cowardly conditions. Demand that all "conditions" shall be abolished, and replaced by contracts implying mutual and reciprocal obligation. Teach capital and labor alike that their rights are equally inviolate.

B. P. H.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—At the close of the National Synod of the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland last week, Bishop Moriarty, of Kerry, favored the religious world with some choice specimens of Vatican declamation. It is as well that we Rationalists or Freethinkers should know in what light we are regarded by those who are most interested in our suppression. Not that we can care for Bishop Moriarty's wrath any more than for the Pope's; but the occasion was an august one, and the utterance recognized by the whole Roman Church as significant, if not supremely authoritative.

"Man's greedy passions," said the preacher, "seek for free indulgence; but the Church is ever in his way, warning, forbidding, threatening, and embittering his enjoyment with an everlasting non licet." Hence he traced the hatred of the world towards the Church, which had ever been manifested by persecution; "and at present their glorious brethren were confessing their faith in the dungeons of the German Empire."

"Throughout the greater part of the Continent the spirit of evil foams with demoniac rage against pastors and priests of the Christian Church."

The moving spirit of the persecution is said to be "unmixed hatred of God." "Wicked Atheism seeks to upset all belief in God, in morality, and in virtue; while legislators and civil rulers seek to restore the Pagan supremacy of the State, and to tear up the charter of Christian liberty."

Of this language the Times pithily remarks: "It is not dignified, and it is certainly not accurate."

It is for this reason especially that I have quoted Dr. Moriarty's discourse for the benefit of your readers. Such a man can hardly be so ignorant and blind as to think he is making a just charge against the Protestant and sceptical worlds.

No stretch of charity will enable one to say that this gross misrepresentation is not wilful. And if wilful, it is resorted to because of the poverty of the case for which the Bishop held a brief. If anything could justify our rejoicing in iniquity "instead of rejoicing in the truth," it would be the evidence which such "iniquity" bears to the hopelessness of the Roman Catholic cause, and to the panic which has overtaken its champions.

The Times so well deserves our thanks for its comments on this sermon of the Bishop's that I am tempted to quote one passage which sceptics at all events will welcome:—

"At all events, if there be one distinctive peculiarity of the present time, it is that attacks against specific religious creeds are not simultaneously directed against morality and virtue. On the contrary, the most formidable antagonists of the Christian religion, whether in its Roman Catholic or Protestant form, are persons who are at least as enthusiastic on behalf of morality and virtue as Bishop Moriarty and the National Synod of the Irish Roman Catholic Church. Instead of 'demoniac rage,' the temper most strenuously exerted in controversy against Roman doctrine is that of calm confidence in the increasing predominance of moral and virtuous influences."

I wish every Freethinker in Europe and America would take that little extract home and think it over with the seriousness it deserves, and remember that the whole credit of our free thinking stands or falls in the estimation of mankind according as we do or do not maintain intact the supremacy of virtuous living.

With far more tact than Bishop Moriarty exhibits, Cardinal Manning has begun the "coaxing dodge," and certainly displays wondrous cunning, if not wisdom, in his arguments with the poor, illogical Protestant Evangelicals. Preaching lately at Manchester, His Eminence selected for his subject "Jesus Christ and Him Crucified," declaring this to be "the central doctrine of the Catholic faith."

He thus disarms Evangelical opposition which has only lived at all on the idea that Rome had thrust "Jesus Christ and him crucified" into the background for the sake of Mary and the saints. He speaks gently and respectfully of the Lutheran Reformation, only pitying its deluded disciples for having lost the priceless privilege of the guidance and protection of Rome. He praises the earnestness of the Puritans, and fairly (or with subtle wiles) makes love to the Evangelical Christians, pointing out the danger they are in from having cast loose from the ancient moorings, and gone adrift among currents which must lead to rationalism and unbelief,—things they dread quite as much as Romanism, if not more.

In the course of his sermon the Cardinal admitted to our heart's content the wide-spread rationalism in the Church of England, and gave us his authority for it, that Oxford was wholly given over to it.

This, too, is encouraging, and is the same admission made by Bishop Moriarty, only more guarded and refined.

And so you have a cardinal, likewise, in New York. What will you do with him? Shall you let him quietly go on sowing tares among the wheat? or shall you dog his footsteps, watch every movement, catch every word?

You Americans must not go to sleep. Many a prophet has foretold your being handed over en masse to the papal power, and that the Roman Catholic faith has another millennium before her in the New World.

Such an abyss can only be reached through an apathy and carelessness never yet manifested by your shrewd nation, nor possible to you unless you suffer your morality and self-respect to be broken down. Virtue and social purification are the best antidotes to intellectual palsy.

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, S.E., Sept. 11, 1875.

Communications.

A REMARKABLE STORY.

MR. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—I long since determined never to write again for publication; but after reading the article from Mr. Toyama with its concluding question, "Shall we, or shall we not, believe in miracles?" I desire not to answer that article, but state a fact, and ask, What am I to believe? I have no hobby in this; and I want the truth, even at the risk of losing everything beside.

I truly believe that, if all papers were perfectly free to all communications, and men were fearless in stating unpopular truths, we should find that one-half of the American people believe in spirit return. An experience of my own convinces me that what we call death is not the termination of man's mental existence, or else there is a power pertaining to certain people more wonderful even than spirit return. Is it not safe to say we are still children in the domain of science and actual knowledge; and Nature holds in her grasp millions of secrets that the puny power of man has never discovered? I value my mind or mental power far more than my body; I do not believe that any portion of matter is ever lost, but exists in some other form. Then how am I to reconcile myself to the annihilation of what is far more valuable, the faculties that lift man above the animal world? Still, I do not think the occurrence that I shall presently relate was "a miracle." I think it was in obedience to some law of Nature, old as intelligence in man, but comparatively new to us, because it has been by religious superstition forced into retirement wherever it has made its feeble effort for recognition. There is no nation, tribe, or people that does not have in some form or other the belief in a return of the dead. In every error there is a kernel of truth; it is the part of wise men to seek to detach it from its husk.

The experiments of Crooks and Wallace in this matter are not a thing to be sneered down; and I can but smile, when I see Bible Christians uniting with unbelieving scientists to denounce all such experiments. The solution they give to the matter places Bible miracles in the domain of natural law; and on the manifestations that are occurring to-day that book will have to stand.

I come of a race of sceptics; for that reason, if no other, my statement merits a little consideration.

My father died during the recent war, a prisoner. I was his sole attendant. The day before his death, I sat on the bed beside him, holding his hands in my own. We had been separated for a long time, and had met surrounded by strangers. He lay looking earnestly in my face; suddenly he asked me a pointed question pertaining to myself, of a nature rarely broached by one person to another. I answered him, as I ever did, truthfully. He then in the most solemn and impressive manner counselled me regarding the matter, and then exacted from me a solemn promise, which I gave in a manner equally solemn in return. During the evening he was removed to another room, and died before daylight the next morning.

Last winter I was invited by a gentleman of excellent standing to attend a private séance, given by a well-known lady of another State,—Mrs. Mary Hollis, of Louisville. It was held, as usual, in darkness. She was among entire strangers, and alone, in a room she had never entered until then; in fact, she had never met the hostess before. I heard eight voices speak there, claiming to be spirit voices. I spoke to her many times, carrying on conversation purposely to see if this interfered with the speaking of those voices; it did not in the least. If this was ventriloquism, it is of a kind more wonderful than ever before known.

The night before going there, I had mentally addressed myself to my father, requesting him, if there was any truth in this thing, to give me some positive test, proving to me the continued existence of individual spirits after death. A voice spoke to me in a clear, loud whisper at my ear, calling me by my old pet name used by him alone in life.

This voice began by stating that he was going to answer my "prayer" of the night before. It then recalled the interview I have alluded to, stated the position in which I sat, referred to his being removed from that room, and to his death in another; asked my pardon for introducing the subject, but said it was the only thing that was a sacred secret between himself and me, and the only thing that he could make use of as a positive test; adding at the same time that I was a sceptic by nature, and he doubted if I would believe this. My attention was then called to two living members of my family, and the statement made that my unusual, and far from conventional, course pursued toward one of them had been caused by his constant efforts to impress me so to act, and thus assist him in repairing what after death he had found was a grievous crime on his part—the shirking during life of an individual responsibility toward another. Then, in the most urgent manner, he petitioned me to continue the course I was pursuing toward her, for it was aiding him, and would save me many a pang, when I came where he then was. The medium was a stranger to me and mine, and all the matter under discussion was such as we never broach to friends, much less to strangers.

Now we will grant there was no spirit entity to speak,—grant that the medium saw clairvoyantly what was once enacted, and read what had once been in my mind, though forgotten; but is there not some difficulty in explaining the facts I have narrated? I value my mental powers more than my physical, and I do not think the latter are to be entirely lost. I cannot so misuse my reasoning faculties as to say this is all nonsense; though, when Dr. Hare petitioned the Academy of Sciences to investigate the wonderful things he had seen, they scouted the proposition with scorn, and spent the same evening in discussing the sage question, "What causes roosters to crow at midnight?"

Respectfully yours,

MRS. E. L. SAXON.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 9.

"TWO FUNDAMENTAL ERRORS."

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

As you granted space for my note of August 29th, and as on the same page of THE INDEX, over the initial "Z.," appear two fundamental errors, I venture in a few words to point them out. Prof. Amasa Walker, in one paragraph in his Science of Wealth, has laid down two propositions as true, in which he has been followed by many writers and political leaders.

On pages 146 and 147 Mr. Walker says: "Such a currency [referring to credit currency] may transfer debts, but it cannot pay them;" and "gold, if compared with them [such notes] will bear a premium, the amount of which will indicate the excess and depreciation of the currency." Now neither of these propositions has ever been supported by proof, and they are neither of them true.

(1) Without going into a further analysis of the first proposition, it is enough to ask if we are to understand that all the thousands of millions of debts that have been created and cancelled by the use of greenbacks in the last ten years have only been transferred to be hereafter finally paid in gold, when greenbacks are retired?

(2) Volume alone, in the case of inconvertible legal tender currency, does not determine the premium on gold, or the depreciation of the notes as compared with gold. It is only one of many elements. The demand for gold may be, and at the present time is, more controlling than volume.

Suppose we had no interest on bonds to pay, and no duties to collect in gold; or that the interest on the public debt, and on all railroad and municipal bonds, was payable in currency; and suppose at the same time we paid for all our imports with commodities, then, with these uses for gold cut off, would the depreciation of greenbacks be the same as now? Most plainly not.

Suppose next year we have large crops, and in Europe crops are a failure, so that not only our interest would be paid with commodities, but gold sent here to settle balances, how would gold then rate as compared with legal tender currency?

But, more than this, the rise and fall in the premium on gold witnessed daily in Wall Street is plainly not caused by a corresponding rise and fall in the volume of paper currency. Volume is one of the many elements that enter into the question, but by no means the only one, and may not be the most important one.

Again, "Z." takes it for granted that a convertible currency can never be inflated, and he might, perhaps, claim Bonamy Price as authority in support of this position; but experience in this country is certainly against him. When, however, gold and silver and paper all circulate as money and are convertible, an increase in the currency, commodities and activity of exchanges remaining the same, lowers the purchasing power of money, in which case the metallic money gradually leaves the country for markets where its purchasing power is not lessened; then contraction sets in, usually followed by panic and a commercial crisis.

Facts and figures covering the periods of panics in this country prior to 1873 clearly prove that there may be inflation with convertible paper currency as well as with inconvertible currency. A. J. W.

MARIETTA, O., Sept. 21, 1875.

THE "SUPERNATURAL SPHERE."

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

It seems to be a prominent aim of your journal to scrutinize, closely as to what is the truth. If we hold fast to this aim, without any special wish to bolster up mere personal convictions because such convictions have become our own, nothing can be more worthy,—at least until the rule of positive science is attained, when personal opinions necessarily give place to actual knowledge. Allow me, therefore, to interpose a brief question concerning a proposition of yours made in answer to a former question of mine. The proposition was this: "We emancipationists" propose NATURE as 'the regulative law of liberty,' and SCIENCE as the 'knowledge of Nature.' The important questions which naturally arise here are these: What is Nature? Is there aught intelligible beside Nature? If so, what? Can Nature suffice to define and explain itself? If not, to what are we to resort for a sure explication of Nature? Surely there must be a definite verity practically available as such, else the naming of a knowledge or science of Nature, as an actual attainment for the human mind, is only mockery.

There are those who conceive that creation involves a realm of pure being and a realm of seeming, both distinctly cognizable to the human mind; that the realm of imagery, or seeming, constitutes the natural sphere, and the realm of being, or reality, constitutes the supernatural sphere. If this be a valid conception, it follows that the shadow cannot sufficiently explicate itself; that ample knowledge of the project can alone be found in an ample knowledge of that which projects it; which, if true, makes knowledge, as a science of being, indispensable to knowledge as a valid science of Nature.

There is to my mind a question pending here of momentous importance to practical regards, an intelligent solution of which would not be out of place in the columns of THE INDEX. What say you? What are the essential laws of being as a rule of science? And how are they practically related to "the things of time and sense," to give the mind of man its proper mastery there?

Truly yours,

THERON GRAY.

CONCORD, N.H., Sept. 23.

[Our "proposition" referred those who ask what "Nature" is to Science as its only legitimate interpreter; and it is impossible for us to state the "essential laws of Nature," except by again referring to what Science has discovered and is discovering. Further than Science instructs him concerning those laws, man has no knowledge of Nature at all. For one, we leave for others all the vague speculations which deal with "the supernatural sphere," and respectfully decline to be drawn into any bubble-blowing of that sort. Outside of Nature, which includes all real existence with its laws and causes, no "sphere" is cognizable; and outside of Science, which includes all knowledge of Nature, nothing is possible but nescience. Our correspondent will please excuse us from giving any different answer to his questions.—ED.]

COL. HECKER ON VATICANISM.

MINNEAPOLIS, Sept. 7, 1875.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I am nearer to Viator than to yourself in his expressed opinions on the subject of Catholicism in America; but after all you may be nearer right than he or myself. At any rate, many of the clearest intellects in America believe as you do, and for your comfort and consolation I inclose a slip taken from the Chicago Tribune of yesterday.

The writer, Col. Frederick Hecker, previous to 1848, was a professor in one of the universities in Southern Germany. During the revolution of 1848 he became the President of the Provisional Germanic Republic, and was closely associated with General Franz Siegel, and more remotely with Carl Schurz. After the revolution was crushed, he came to America, and settled in Illinois. I think he took a subordinate part in our great civil war, commanding (if my memory serves me) an Illinois regiment in the South-west, for a time. He is quite an old man now, being above sixty; but is justly regarded by his countrymen as an able, courageous, scholarly, and patriotic specimen of the Germanic race. His articles (this being only one of a series) are being quite widely read in the West.

Your friend, FRANK J. MEAD.

[Col. Hecker's article will be found on a previous page of this issue.—ED.]

WAS THERE a religion in the Stone Age? Till the other day nothing was known that would indicate the existence of a religion among the people of the Stone Age. But a little over a year ago there were discovered traces of a cultus, the most ancient of which we have any idea. I propose here to narrate how we gained our knowledge of the gross and oftentimes savage superstitions of our early ancestors. This important discovery was made by Dr. Prunieries, of Marvejols. As he was cleaning some skulls from the dolmens of Lozere, he found in the interior of one of them a bone disk carefully polished on the edges, and evidently made of a fragment of cranium, perhaps of the parietal bone. The skull in which this disk was found presented a great hole, through which it might have passed; still, evidently, it had not come from the part destroyed, being considerably thicker than the other bones of the skull; and, furthermore, differing from them in color. On examining this cranium at the point where it was mutilated, the edges of the opening were found to be carefully polished and beveled on the external surface, and it was plain that the hole itself, like the disk of bone, had been wrought by the hand of man. Was it also man who put the bone disk inside of the skull? One might think at first that it was the effect of an accident similar to that by which the beads of a necklace often drop into the skull; but, when other pieces were discovered similar to that described, it could not be doubted that it was the hand of man which placed the disk of bone in the skull. What was the intention? It is impossible to say with certainty, but it is difficult not to believe that the practice was coupled with a religious idea.—Exchange.

STOCK LIST OF THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

In July last a copy of the following circular was mailed to the address of every stockholder of the Index Association:—

TREASURER'S NOTICE.

OFFICE OF THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
BOSTON, July 15, 1875.

Dear Sir,—At the last monthly meeting of the Directors of this Association, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:—
“Resolved, That the Treasurer be instructed to issue, as soon as may be convenient, a circular to all the stockholders of the Index Association, notifying them that a complete list of said stockholders, with the total amount of the assessments hitherto voted by the Board, the total amount of the payments thereon, and the balance (if any) now due in each case, set opposite their respective names, will be published next October in THE INDEX; and also requesting all of them who may still be indebted to the Association for unpaid assessments to remit the amount of such indebtedness before the first of September next, that they may be credited in said list with payment in full to date,—or to render such reasons for not so doing as shall seem to the Directors sufficient for omitting their names from the published list.”

In obedience to the above order of the Board of Directors, I have mailed this circular to your address, and respectfully invite your attention to its contents. The enclosed notice will inform you of the amount of the stock assessments (if any) which stand charged to your name on the books of the Association; and it is hoped that you will be so kind as to remit accordingly. If all the stockholders shall do so, the continued publication of THE INDEX will be assured beyond a doubt; and it is greatly to be desired that those who have subscribed for this purpose to the stock shall all appear on the forthcoming list as having honorably discharged the obligation thus voluntarily and generously assumed.

Yours truly,
R. H. RANNEY,
Treasurer of the Index Association.

On September 22, the following resolution was passed by the Board of Directors:—

“Resolved, That the list as submitted be printed once at length in THE INDEX, with the appended note that so much of the list as relates to unpaid assessments will be hereafter published once each month in THE INDEX until the assessments are paid; and that the list be hereafter published in accordance with that note, except as to names for which a satisfactory reason for non-payment has been offered to the Board.”

The list here published in accordance with these votes of the Directors is brought down to the date of October 5, 1875:—

Residence.	Name.	Assessments Voted.	Assessments Paid.	Assessments Unpaid.	Assessments Paid in Adv.
Sacramento, Cal.	Henry Miller	200	100	100
San Buenaventura, Cal.	Wm. Shepard	40	40
San José, Cal.	Mrs. J. G. Kinley	40	40
Middlefield, Ct.	W. H. Downes	560	560
Birmingham, Ct.	L. O. Bass	40	40
Colebrook, Ct.	Wm. Jabine	60	60
Danbury, Ct.	M. H. Doolittle	40	40
Washington, D.C.	Darius Lyman	30	10	20
London, England.	F. A. Maxse	10	10		90
Chicago, Ill.	Ernst Prussing	200	200
Terre Haute, Ind.	H. L. Hall	40	40
La Grange, Ind.	W. H. Orvington	400	200	200
Kendallville, Ind.	Jos. Singer	40	40
New Harmony, Ind.	W. B. Billings	200	200
Evansville, Ind.	A. Van Der Nailer	30	30
Indianapolis, Ind.	R. M. Whipple	60	20	40
Richmond, Ind.	Mrs. Sarah F. Mills	30	30
Vincennes, Ind.	G. N. Jennings	40	10	30
Keokuk, Iowa.	C. W. Newton	40	40
Davenport, Iowa.	H. A. Mills	40	40
Burlington, Iowa.	C. S. Burt	40	40
Dubuque, Iowa.	C. R. Woodward	40	10	30
Quincy, Mass.	R. S. Brigham	40	40
Boston, Mass.	Chas. A. Scofield	40	40
Worcester, Mass.	D. E. Sparks	40	30	10
Fall River, Mass.	Wesley Best	40	30	10
Amesbury, Mass.	A. L. Munroe	30	10	20
Newton, Mass.	J. D. Fisk	120	120
Newton, Mass.	E. W. Weir	80	80
Princeton, Mass.	G. C. Glatte	120	90	30
Fairhaven, Mass.	Thos. Mumford	40	40
Newbury, Mass.	Mrs. L. E. Blount	40	40
Lawrence, Mass.	G. M. Daussman	40	40
Lynn, Mass.	F. W. Cook	80	20	60
Lexington, Mass.	Mrs. J. J. Pillsbury	40	40
Chicopee, Mass.	J. O. Martin	40	20	20
Ipewich, Mass.	Ferd. Christmann	40	20	20
Springfield, Mass.	Thos. Davis	40	40
Monroe, Mich.	Henry Schnull	40	20	20
Detroit, Mich.	Alex. Metzger	40	40
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Gust. Zschech	40	20	20
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Herman Lieber	40	10	30
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Clemens Vonnegut	40	40
Ann Arbor, Mich.	J. R. Weist	40	10	30
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Jas. Smelser	40	40
Ann Arbor, Mich.	John H. Popp	40	40
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Chas. Live	40	40
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Chas. Graet	40	20	20
Ann Arbor, Mich.	E. S. Barrows	40	30	10
Ann Arbor, Mich.	W. W. Grant	40	40
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Wm. H. Ellery	40	20	20
Ann Arbor, Mich.	J. H. Lull	40	40
Ann Arbor, Mich.	S. S. Wemott	40	20	20
Ann Arbor, Mich.	D. B. Henderson	40	10	30
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Asa Horr	80	80
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Asa Horr	80	80
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Chas. M. Wetherbee	120	40	80
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Chas. M. Wetherbee	120	40	80
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Mrs. M. N. Adams	40	40
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Mrs. Mary Westphal	40	40
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Sam'l T. Durkee	40	10	30
Ann Arbor, Mich.	J. M. Hadley	40	30	10
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Frank Prather	40	10	30
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Lewis Kurtz	40	10	30
Ann Arbor, Mich.	J. T. Brady	40	30	10
Ann Arbor, Mich.	M. S. Beach	40	40
Ann Arbor, Mich.	L. S. Bacon	40	40
Ann Arbor, Mich.	C. Robinson	40	30	10
Ann Arbor, Mich.	J. L. Hill	1600	1600
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Francis E. Ely	80	80
Ann Arbor, Mich.	John Wilson	80	80
Ann Arbor, Mich.	A. W. Stevens	40	40
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Mrs. A. F. Curtis	30	30
Ann Arbor, Mich.	John McDuffie	30	30
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Miss Arethusa Hall	120	120
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Seth Hunt	40	20	20
Ann Arbor, Mich.	J. L. Whiting	40	40
Ann Arbor, Mich.	J. F. Barrett	80	80
Ann Arbor, Mich.	A. M. Howland	200	200
Ann Arbor, Mich.	W. C. Gannett	200	200
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Miss M. C. Perkins	200	200
Ann Arbor, Mich.	A. Folsom	200	200
Ann Arbor, Mich.	A. Folsom (Trustee)	120	60	60
Ann Arbor, Mich.	S. E. Sewall	200	200
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Phizur Wright	400	400
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Henry K. Oliver, Jr.	160	160
Ann Arbor, Mich.	E. P. Halliwell	400	400
Ann Arbor, Mich.	W. Emerson	40	40
Ann Arbor, Mich.	S. H. Roper	80	80
Ann Arbor, Mich.	G. K. Withington	80	80
Ann Arbor, Mich.	R. H. Ranney	40	40
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Hannah E. Stevenson	110	110
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Jas. A. Dupee	200	100	100
Ann Arbor, Mich.	John F. Mills	40	20	20
Ann Arbor, Mich.	J. C. Haynes	120	120
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Geo. W. Park	40	40
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Frederic Beck	40	40
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Miss Rebecca B. Wicker	40	20	20
Ann Arbor, Mich.	C. A. W. Crosby	80	80
Ann Arbor, Mich.	M. Luce	80	40	40
Ann Arbor, Mich.	Henry N. Stone	80	60	20

Residence.	Name.	Assessments Voted.	Assessments Paid.	Assessments Unpaid.	Assessments Paid in Adv.
Boston, Mass.	S. H. Pearce	40	20	20
"	A. A. Knight	40	30	10
"	Chas. T. How	120	120
"	F. A. Greene	40	30	10
"	Nath'l Cummings	40	40
"	F. H. Henshaw	40	20	20
"	Mrs. K. G. Wells	40	40		10
"	E. B. Loring	40	20	20
"	Justin Kidcut	200	200
"	John Wetherbee	40	40
"	Gardner Murphy	40	40
"	Geo. Henshaw	40	40
"	Isaac Ames	120	60	60
"	Francis Alger	120	90	30
"	D. F. Child	120	120
"	Chas. Richardson	40	40
"	Mrs. M. M. Ballou	40	10	20
"	R. W. Howes	30	30
"	Chas. W. Story	30	20	10
"	B. F. Dyer	30	30
"	Chas. E. Pratt	10	10
Florence, Mass.	S. L. Hill	400	400		600
Haverhill, Mass.	W. H. Spencer	80	80		20
New Bedford, Mass.	W. J. Potter	280	280
"	H. B. Clarke	120	120
"	Mrs. Cla. a M. Rotch	200	200
"	S. Griffiths Morgan	120	120		60
"	John W. Sullings	80	40	40
"	Jas. C. Delano	40	20	20
"	Geo. A. Bourne	40	40
"	W. C. Macy	40	10	30
"	Mrs. Benj. Cummings	40	40		20
"	Miss Mary Gifford	40	40		60
"	Benj. Rodman	120	120		180
"	G. F. Matthes	40	40
"	Mrs. Andrew Robeson	40	40		10
"	C. H. Peirce	40	40
"	Mrs. C. A. Tucker	40	40
"	Frederic Coffin	40	10	30
"	Chas. H. Coffin	40	20	20
"	Thos. H. Knowles	30	30
"	Mrs. C. B. Richmond	120	120
Lowell, Mass.	E. G. Burnet	80	20	60
Webster, Mass.	A. S. Brown	40	40		10
Worcester, Mass.	Edwin Brown	40	40
"	F. M. Lamb	40	40
"	Chas. Nash	80	80		120
"	Theo. Brown	40	30	10
"	C. W. Easterbrook	40	30	10
Fall River, Mass.	Clark Jilson	40	10	30
"	Wm. Rotch	80	80
Amesbury, Mass.	Jas. M. Aldrich	40	40		10
"	G. H. Briggs	80	20	60
"	Edward A. Brown	30	30
Newton, Mass.	Mary Shannon	160	160		240
W. Newton, Mass.	Mary C. Shannon	40	40		40
"	M. A. Thurston	30	30
Princeton, Mass.	Benj. R. Tucker	40	40
Fairhaven, Mass.	John A. Hawes	80	20	60
Newbury, Mass.	Mrs. L. M. Plummer	30	30		10
"	N. Little	30	30
"	N. Little, Jr.	30	30
Lawrence, Mass.	Pardon Armington	30	30		10
Lynn, Mass.	Chas. Buffum	30	30
"	Mrs. Benj. Ireson	20	20
Lexington, Mass.	Jas. Purinton	30	10	20
"	W. J. Currier	30	30
"	Geo. W. Robinson	30	10	20
Chicopee, Mass.	W. H. Gilmore	30	30
"	C. A. Greenleaf	30	30
Ipswich, Mass.	James Damon	20	10	10
Springfield, Mass.	Jefferson Church	30	30		10
Monroe, Mich.	Chas. Post	120	120
Detroit, Mich.	E. F. Ward	800	400	400
"	M. H. Isbell	40	20	20
"	John J. Bagley	1200	1200
"	B. F. Stamm	40	10	30
"	L. T. Ives	80	80
"	Fred. Stearns	40	10	30
"	E. W. Meddough	350	350
"	Geo. Jerome	40	10	30
"	D. J. Davison	40	40
"	Wm. Wiley	40	40		50
"	Geo. N. Fletcher	40	40
"	A. W. Leggett	30	30
Battle Creek, Mich.	Wm. Newman	40	20	20
"	John Harper	40	10	30
"	C. M. Stiles	40	10	30
Ionia, Mich.		40	10	30
Union City, Mich.	J. D. Zimmerman	40	30	10
"	Phebe A. Zimmerman	40	30	10
"	Geo. Hubbard	40	10	30
"	S. H. Nye	40	40
"	Chas. H. Spring	40	40
"	D. D. W. Rodgers	40	40
Houlton, Me.	Cary Bros	40	40
Castine, Me.	R. L. Baker	40	20	20
Ft. Fairfield, Me.	J. S. Palmer	20	20
Portland, Me.	J. E. Follett	40	40		20
Winona, Minn.	W. W. Spalding	40	40
Duluth, Minn.	Oscar Roos	80	80
Taylor's Falls, Minn.	S. C. Gale	400	100	300
Minneapolis, Minn.	R. E. Grimeshaw	40	20	20
"	Marshall Bros	40	10	30
Long Lake, Minn.	S. Lydiard	40	30	10
Lake City, Minn.	J. G. Richardson	40	40
"	D. K. Boutelle	40	20	20
Sandy Spring, Md.	Benj. Halliwell	40	40		10
Tupelo, Miss.	R. B. Stone	40	40
Palmyra, Mo.	S. C. Eastman	40	30	10
St. Louis, Mo.	Henry Stage	80	20	60
"	J. C. Rooney	80	20	60
"	Robert Moore	40	20	20
"	E. G. Windegger	40	20	20
St. Joseph, Mo.	Jacob Sprinkel	40	30	10
"	P. V. Wise	40	40
"	C. Murat Masterson	40	40
New York, N.Y.	Asa K. Butts	1280	340	940
"	E. F. Dinsmore	80	40	40
"	Mrs. F. W. Christern	110	110		190
"	M. L. Holbrook	80	20	60
"	Geo. W. Whitty	80	80
"	S. Sexton	40	20	20
"	Henry H. Richardson	80	20	60
"	Mrs. M. R. Van Rensselaer	40	20	20
"	W. P. Chambers	40	40
"	O. B. Frothingham	200	200		300
"	A. Werner	40	40
"	W. E. Booraem	40	30	10
"	J. Lienau	70	50	20
"	J. P. Dinsmore	80	40	40
"	B. W. Pierce	400	100	300
"	D. Thorne	200	100	100
"	M. B. Bryant	80	80
"	Lewis G. Jones	40	40
"	J. J. Nichols	120	30	90
"	J. W. Bigelow	80	20	60
"	E. Naumberg	40	20	20
"	Miss E. Bock	30	30		10
"	Morris Altman	30	30		50
"	Arnold Tanzer	300	300		300
"	A. M. Lee	30	30
"	Mrs. M. E. Bird	30	30		10
"	W. L. Taylor	30	30		10
"	John Cowan	30	20	10
"	John Mills	30	30		30
"	R. B. Westbrook	30	30
"	W. C. Russel	80	60	20
"	J. E. Oliver	20	20
thaca, N.Y.		40	30	10
Peekskill, N.Y.	J. Whittaker	40	30	10
Kerhonkson, N.Y.	D. Ayres, Jr.	40	40
Brooklyn, N.Y.		40	40

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory results—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.

Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including
 O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE
 INDEX ASSOCIATION,

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics, 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol.; Any volume sold separately. 51 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with the Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. 3 vols. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts, Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life, The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
The Effect of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portraits.....	4.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in Reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by E. V. Rieu. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of.....	10.50
Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.80
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion, or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERE (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	1.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
Lyell's Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.40
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MYART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Unity. Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	2.00
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	1.75
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Sermons, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Denial of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trothy Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, and the Expense of Heaven.....	5.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHELLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness, specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDIKT DE). Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Glass-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....	1.25
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humourists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercises in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols. II., IV., and VI., each.....	.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sketches.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

$200 A MONTH to Agents everywhere. Address Excelsior Mfg Co., 151 Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL, for both sexes, MERIDEN, CONN. EMILY J. LEONARD, Principal.

MORSE'S PAINE. PHOTOGRAPHS

For sale at the office of THE INDEX.
Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cts.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

BISHOP FERRETTE'S FRENCH LESSONS, IN BOSTON OR CAMBRIDGE.

One Pupil, $40.00.
Two Pupils, $44.00; per Pupil, $22.00.
Three " 48.00; " " 16.00.
Four " 52.00; " " 13.00.
Five " 55.00; " " 11.00.
Six or more Pupils, $10 per Pupil.

Address: BISHOP FERRETTE, Cambridge, Mass.

THE AMERICAN EDITION OF MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE, Boston, Mass.

W. S. BELL'S LECTURES.

I am now ready to deliver any or all of the following lectures in any part of the country. Those wishing to communicate with me can address me at No. 65 Foster St., New Bedford, Mass. The following is a list of the subjects of my lectures:—

1. EVOLUTION (new lecture).
2. DARWINISM " "
3. LIFE AND WRITINGS OF SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE.
4. CHARLES LAMB.
5. THOMAS PAINE.
6. CHRISTIANITY OPPOSED TO CIVILIZATION.
7. RELIGION ANTAGONISTIC TO SCIENCE.
8. THE SAYINGS OF JESUS.
9. THE RESURRECTION OF JESUS.
10. THE DELUGE.
11. GEOLOGY.

LECTURES AND CONVERSATIONS.

FREDERIC A. HINCKLEY

Is prepared to lecture or conduct conversational meetings on the following subjects:—

- Essential Religion.
- Education and Educators in a Republic.
- The Ballot for Woman.
- Woman: Her Rights and Duties.
- Marriage.
- The Philosophy of the Labor Movement.
- The Relation of the Labor Movement to Intemperance, Prostitution, and Crime.

TERMS MODERATE.

Address Box 916, Boston Post-office.

MUSIC BOOKS FOR THE AUTUMN.

For Sabbath-schools, our beautiful Shining River. 35 cts. The newest, as it is one of the best, of Sunday-school Song Books.

For Singing-schools, the famous Song Monarch. 75 cts. Perfectly adapted to interest Singing Classes.

For Devotional Meetings (just published), Living Waters. 30 cts. Compiled by D. F. Hodges. A rich treasury of the sweetest hymns and tunes.

For Choruses, Conventions, and Choirs: The Leader. $1.38. Tunes, Anthems, Chants.

Chorus Choir. $2.00. Choruses and Anthems.

Perkins' Anthem Book. $1.50. Easy Anthems.

Trial by Jury. $1.00. Just published. A most mirth-provoking Operetta, with fine music.

Sent, post-paid, for retail price.

Liberal discounts to Societies and Conventions.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

CHARLES H. DITSON & CO.,

711 Broadway, New York.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGIENIC HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, MO. Box 247. Send for Circular.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address NATH'L T. ALLEN, WEST NEWTON, MASS.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY

335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!

THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform.

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not infrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion,—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Ednah D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by

THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

LANDS FOR SALE, near WALTHAM, S.C. Small tracts and easy terms. Address W. J. DUFFIE, Owner, COLUMBIA, S.C.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.

For sale by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX, Tremont Place, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1875.

WHOLE No. 303.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———.

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

"If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. On this Centennial year the work of strengthening the foundation of the structure commenced by our forefathers a hundred years ago at Lexington should be begun. Let us all labor for the security of free thought, free speech, free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and equal rights and privileges for all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar appropriated to them shall be applied to the support of any sectarian school; resolve that neither State nor nation shall support institutions save those where every child in the land may get a common school education, unmixed with atheistic, pagan, or sectarian teachings. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar; keep the Church forever separate."—PRESIDENT GRANT, at Des Moines, Sept. 29, 1875.

GLIMPSES.

THE RECOVERY of Robert Dale Owen is so well assured that he leaves the asylum very shortly. His many friends are rejoicing with good reason.

THE LATE Census Report of Southern India gives 490,299 as the number of native Christians in the Madras Presidency, of whom 397,071 are Catholics and 93,228 Protestants.

BROWNSON'S Quarterly Review, so long known as an able propagandist of the Catholic faith, is discontinued with the present number. Dr. Brownson says he takes this step, not from lack of support or sympathy, but from failing health alone.

TO PREVENT the disinterment of Guibord's remains by the Catholics, a stone coffin twelve feet long and four feet wide has been prepared, to be covered by a great stone slab riveted down by six iron bars! It will require some muscle to knock off this "chip on the shoulder."

CHARLES BRADLAUGH began his lecture-season at Music Hall, Boston, a week ago Wednesday evening. His subject was "Five Dead Men I have Known"; namely, Robert Owen, Joseph Mazzini, John Stuart Mill, Charles Sumner, and Ledru Rollin. As usual, his lecture was well received.

A MINNESOTA DEACON, J. C. Cook by name, lately prosecuted Charles Canfield at Austin, in that State, for violation of the "Sabbath"; and the accused was only discharged on the ground that the work he performed (cutting grain with a reaper) was one of "necessity." Our authority for this statement is the Faribault Republican, of September 15.

MOODY AND SANKEY begin their American campaign on October 31, in Brooklyn. Mr. Moody shook off the dust of Philadelphia from his shoes, because, he says, he found the Young Christians of that city, officers and members, all absorbed in a big fair they are projecting for the first of November. He does not believe in Young Christianity; he wants the real article.

CAPTAIN WEBB'S exploit in swimming the English Channel, a distance of twenty miles, furnishes a good argument against the assumed physical degeneracy of the moderns as compared with the ancients. Is there not some muscular Yankee who will swim from New York to Liverpool? If not, we fear this is no longer the "best government the sun ever shone upon."

THIS NEWSPAPER waif is floating about, and seems intrinsically credible, though we do not vouch for it: "An English yachtman who has been to the South Sea Islands says that, in spite of their Christianity, the Samoans are the most arrant thieves, and their morality is at the lowest ebb. The foreign missionaries have abolished all innocent enjoyments, such as dancing, wrestling, and many games, and their so-called Christian congregations grow up to be a set of hypocritical humbugs."

HERE is a joke which better deserves to go the rounds of the papers than most of those thus honored: "They tell a wicked story about a jovial soul that came up to the gates of heaven and asked admission. 'No,' said St. Peter, severely; 'you can't get in; you're not fit.' The traveller stepped back, looked the old saint steadily in the eye, and crowed three times. St. Peter colored, shuddered, and fumbled for his key. 'You can go in,' said he, in a rather shaky voice, 'but don't do that to me again.'"

MRS. SWISSELM, having said that she "does not want companionship in heaven with the last man who went there from an Allegheny County gallows," defends herself from criticism on this score in the Pittsburgh Commercial, closing her letter thus: "Our Protestantism has unduly depreciated morality, and unduly exalted what we call religion, and we are reaping the bitter fruit of our mistake in corruption everywhere hiding itself under the cloak of piety, or openly scornful of a religion which levels the distinction between virtue and vice, or rather gives vice the best of it, by adjudging a Theodore Parker to eternal woe, and an Ortwine to everlasting bliss."

ADAM SMITH, the author of the famous Wealth of Nations, was a man who intensely disliked moral apathy—that obtuseness of moral perception or feebleness of moral feeling which renders impossible a generous glow of admiration for virtue and an equally generous detestation of vice or meanness, and which sometimes, under pretence of liberality, views even the blackest crimes with a sort of complacency. "At a party at Dalkeith Palace, where Mr. ———, in his mawkish way, was finding palliations for some villainous transaction, the Doctor waited in patient silence till he was gone, and then exclaimed: 'Now I can breathe freely! I cannot bear that man; he has no indignation in him!'"

ON THE eighth of October, as fair and lovely an autumn day as ever lighted up the gaily-tinted woods with golden sunshine and arched them over with a dome of cloudless azure sky, a statue was publicly and solemnly dedicated, in the old cemetery of Hingham, to the memory of John Albion Andrew, the great War Governor of Massachusetts. It was an offering of gratitude, reverence and love from those who fought by land and sea the battles of the old Bay State in the cause of human freedom. No man had ever a better title than he to such a tribute at the hands of his fellow-citizens. Pure, brave, patriotic, tender-hearted, illustrious alike for public and private virtues of the noblest order, he sealed the record of Massachusetts in those dark days with the starry signet of a great fame and a greater character. His light still shines, and will continue to shine while goodness is loved and greatness honored among men.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Tribune thus mentions the late Professor Cairnes, a paper by whom on Herbert Spencer we recently republished from the Fortnightly Review: "Prof. Cairnes's rank as an economist was very high, probably the highest in England. Mr. Mill was one of those who set the greatest value on his powers and on his contributions to economical literature. His last book was his most important and most vigorous. He dictated the whole of it while victim to a malady which fastened him to his bed, stiffened his whole body, denied him the use of his limbs, and racked him with acute pains—rheumatic arthritis. Seldom has a more wonderful intellectual power been displayed than his in such circumstances. Friends gathered about him; one friend, the most faithful of all, his wife, never quitted him, and never wearied in her long task of ministering to his mental wants, reading to him and writing from his dictation. His courage, good spirits, and unusual conversational powers remained to near the last."

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BEBLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAT CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBEO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERBURY, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carrie S. Burnham, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünning, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

A Heretic.

BY MRS. DAVID H. CLARK.

The real life is the romance after all. "Truth is stranger than fiction," we say; yet what fiction would be thoroughly readable were it not true—true to what occurs daily in human hearts and lives?

We laugh and weep over the glorified pages of the great romancer. We sob, with a heart-breaking sorrow, over the death of little Paul; we see the group of mourners; and "the golden water dancing on the wall." Our souls rise in indignation against such characters as Florence Dombey's father, and poor little Davy's step-father. Murdstone! What a touch of genius in the fitting application of that name! The first syllable almost equivalent to the word which stands for the taking of a human life; the second conveying the idea of the hardness, the coldness of that unsympathetic nature, whose ingrained rule of action was—tyranny!

And yet, would these things so compel us if we did not feel that they were the very renderings of actual experience? We know that the writer went up and down the highways and byways, garnering whatever appealed to his exquisite sensibilities, his keen perceptions, his subtle discrimination, whether encountered in the crowded purlieus of the city or the spacious residences of Belgravia.

Life—the vast, throbbing, teeming mystery—is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever; and he who can best portray its myriad destinies is the master artist—and no other!

If, therefore, any merit lie in these poor pages, it will be by reason of the truth they contain. It will be because the narrative is "born of experience," and is not simply a coinage of the imagination. It is no highly-wrought story, with graceful harmonies of circumstance and plot, but an incomplete sketching of a few events, bound by a single winter's span.

The village of Drowseford was astir by a new sensation. It was on everybody's lips. The sewing-society of the Church of the Apostolic Succession met that week at Mrs. Mackenzie's, and the topic of conversation was the same in all the buzzing côteries—over the long red and yellow flannel petticoats for the unregenerated babies of Madagascar (though why flannel should be needed in such a climate, even for new-born infants, is a question which, it is safe to conjecture, no Apostolic Successioner had ever ventured to raise); over the finishing off of the three embroidered sofa pillows to be "chanced off" at the next church festival; and over the set of new fine linen shirts which the zealous Apostolics were making for their well beloved pastor.

"Well," said Mrs. Rankin, "I, for one, cannot find it in my conscience to censure him if he thinks he is right; and he may be as nearly right as any of us for all we positively know to the contrary."

A pious thrill rustled through the Successioners at this imputation, faintly shadowed forth—this little rift of doubt in respect to the infallibility of Mother Church; but as Mrs. Rankin paid a heavy pew rent, and enjoyed thereby certain tacitly conceded immunities of speech and action, her little heresy was suffered to pass.

Miss Sharples, the lady past the bloom of youth, who "gushed" over children, and professed an acquaintance with art, though, in reality, knowing very little about it, exclaimed:—

"A man with a wife and child ought to think of their prospects! That charming little boy of his looks like a Manila cherub just stepped down from the frame!"

Susie Harkness and Ada Bowman exchanged lightning glances (very naughty and disrespectful of them, to be sure), and Susie whispered to her mother, who sat near:—

"A Manila cherub ought certainly to be in a straw frame!"

The Reverend Sempronius Lahmeswull was announced. He entered smiling benignly, as a good shepherd should; his eyes mildly blue; his hair (the color of which verged on the auriferous sandy); brushed guilelessly back exposed his white and shining brow.

Susie Harkness, who was alarmingly deficient in veneration, once told him that she wished he would always part his hair in the middle, as he reminded her so much of her sister, a dear little girl four years old!

Miss Sharples blushed and simpered, as the pastor took a seat by her side, and brought the effulgence of his cerulean eyes to bear on her bony lineaments. With a deferential bend in her lank person, she said:—

"Dear Mr. Lahmeswull, pray give us your opinion of the skizzum in the Church of the Inner Voice."

"Ah, Miss Sharples, Miss Sharples! Do not ask me to sit in judgment upon any laboreh in the Lohd's vineyard, even though he laboh not in accordance with the doctrines of the Established Church. Chahwity, mah deah friend, chahwity covehs a muhlitude of sins."

With this strikingly original remark, delivered in an impressive manner, with much waving of hands, the Rev. Lahmeswull subsided into the profound melancholy habitual with him when asked to pass an opinion. (We read that the owl was the attendant bird of Minerva; it may be that owliness of demeanor passes current for wisdom at the present day.)

To this safe and guarded style of conversation may be attributed much of the influence which the Rev. Sempronius possessed over the hearts of the Apostolics. No cloudlet troubled the serene and vacuous heaven of his faith; his placid slumbers were never disturbed by the theological doubts and questionings to which members of his craft are sometimes subject.

"Blessed are those who do not inquire into the holy things which they set forth, for great shall be the number of their dressing-gowns, and many the sewers thereon," might be formulated as a new beatitude whenever those, uttered so long ago, become ready (through too much practical application in the lives of the children of men) to be cast aside like an outworn garment.

"Tea is ready, ladies. Ah! Mr. Lahmeswull, I feared you were going to disappoint us this afternoon," said Mrs. Mackenzie, coming in from the dining-room, whence floated an aristocratic odor of barbecued chicken and of the greenest of tea; while a glimpse of snowy Mackenzie linen, sparkling glasses, and polished silver made glad the hearts of the Apostolic Successioners.

We read that the Twelve fasted oftener than they feasted—but that was more than eighteen hundred years ago; and now—"nous avons change tout cela!"

The pastor offered his arm to Miss Sharples, who took it mincingly and with many roseate signals, and the hive of industrious bees were soon regaling themselves on the sweets of Mrs. Mackenzie's table. Leaving them at their pleasant occupation, I shall introduce some other characters, and explain what may have seemed enigmatical in the foregoing pages.

The Reverend Searcher Newlight, of the Church of the Inner Voice, had stirred up an ecclesiastical hornet's nest—unwittingly, it is true, but none the less surely.

It is a truism that the minds of men and women progress or retrograde according to their manner of study and habits of thought as bodily powers become developed or atrophied through use or disuse. In the course of his reading and meditating the Reverend Searcher had gradually grown convinced of the broadest, freest principles that can underlie religious belief, at the same time losing his hold on some of the tenets regarded as indispensable by a number of his fellow-ministers; belonging, as he did, to a sect which protests against a formulated creed, this seems in no wise strange.

The "eternal verities" had appeared to his soul divested of the accompaniments of dogma, and he had allowed a few heretical expressions to flow forth, in blackest ink, upon the virgin whiteness of his sermon page, so sullying it forevermore in the estimation of some of his congregation.

Was he to blame? Should the butterfly be chided for escaping from the shell of the chrysalis when the time has come for the grub-life to cease?

The minister having had greater facilities of research, had simply grown beyond his people, and swiftly was he to reap the penalty.

"Outrageous! He ought to be muzzled!" exclaimed Mrs. Colonel Bossemall, as she came out of church on that memorable Sunday.

This lady was the female autocrat of the Inner Voicists—the Lady Superior—the Chief Priestess—the sine qua non of the institution. In small matters as in great her fiat was the epitome of a Papal Bull—her opinion embodied the essential wisdom of the conventicle.

[N. B.—Churches have their great guns as well as their canons, and a small village hierarchy may be as much a petticoat government as was "La belle France" in the days of Louis the Gallant.]

The Reverend Searcher was disquieted. What the issue of the agitation might be he could dimly surmise but not fully determine. Suppose the ominous murmurs of discontent (for Mrs. Colonel Bossemall's voice was not the only one raised to sound the alarm) should swell into the unalterable decree! Well, he was sure of one human being—his wife! He knew that she would stand out, brave and heart-warm, to the end of the chapter, though every man's hand should be against him. But what was he fit for beyond his profession, having, unlike the Apostles of old, no trade or handicraft to stand him in good stead? How fervently he wished for brawny arms and muscles of iron, for the deftness, the power, of an artisan or a coal-heaver!

Meanwhile, there was Chris and the baby—with winter coming on.

He neared his home with slow steps. Chris was smiling in the door, with the chubby, two-year-old baby at her side. She was a black-eyed, resolute little woman, who would die rather than flinch in any cause that she espoused. Having been born on the 25th of December, she was baptized Sarah Christmas Carver; but when she arrived at years of discretion she repudiated the first part of her title (having an abomination for the name of Sarah), and was thenceforth known as "Chris" to her intimate friends and companions.

The minister told her of his apprehensions, and her eyes flashed as she said, "Do your duty wherever it may lead you, and put your trust in an overruling Beneficence, as far as consequences are concerned." A very bold and fearless creed, no doubt, but one which frequently calls for martyrs and heroes to uphold it.

During the week a prominent member of the congregation called on the Rev. Searcher, and, in a thoroughly well meaning, kindly spirit, mildly expostulated—predicted the result of any further pulpit airing of certain opinions held by the minister, and, finally, counselled—policy!

This last was the camel's ounce. On the following Sunday the minister ascended the pulpit steps determined to "tell the truth and shame the Father of lies"! Without faltering, without cravenness, from beginning to end he delivered the simple exposition of his views, and left his fate in the hands of his hearers.

Would they tolerate him (knowing him to hold such views, which differed not so widely from their own, and were, in fact, the logical outcome of the latter)? Would they stand by and assist him in building up their little church on a broader, firmer basis, or would they pass sentence of dissolution?

The incipient spirit of Torquemada (never, it seems, to be wholly eradicated from the heart of man) triumphed. The congregation oozed out of the church in gloomy, foreboding silence. The minister delivered the benediction (never again to be uttered by him over that assemblage), and as he came down from the desk and stood by the altar, not one of all his spiritual children turned to give him customary greeting—not one, save a mild-faced woman, who loved to dwell at peace with all the world.

Above him shone the mural tablet commemorating the virtues and heroism of the martyr founder of that church—martyred for heresy in his day and generation; below him, shaking the dust of the profaned temple from their pious feet, were not a few of that martyr-founder's lineal descendants.

Chris was there and saw it all. Among the judges were some of her own kinsfolk.

The Rev. Searcher Newlight was now adrift on the wide ocean of fate. For the first few days after his avowal of freedom from sectarian trammels he was, purposeless, swayed by vague plans, not knowing where to cast anchor. A faint hope lingered in his breast that the Church of the Inner Voice might reconsider his case, and revoke its tacit implication of his unworthiness to dispense its spiritual pabulum. But as days went on, his expectation died within him, and he was forced to look about for a means of gaining a livelihood.

It is with no small pang that a clergyman, after years of faithful, unremitting service, is called upon to lay down, in one short hour, the burden of his duties, in the consciousness that he can never again take it up under the old condition of things.

By early education, predilection, and habits of thought, Mr. Newlight was better adapted to the pastoral calling than to any other. If a new and independent society could have been formed at once, with him for its minister, he would have felt the change less keenly; but his adherents were few and the disaffected ones many. At the time no place of meeting was available, even had the number of the faithful been greater. The little band of New Protestants were, therefore, obliged to bide their time; and meanwhile, the Rev. Searcher must earn bread for his wife and child.

After seeking many days for employment, Mr. Newlight embraced, as a last resource, the vocation of a book agent, uncongenial as it was to his disposition. Poor little Chris trudged out bravely, one bleak day, to solicit subscribers for an illustrated monthly. But, finding that the undertaking exhausted her limbs and patience in a far greater ratio than it replenished her purse, she abandoned it.

She drummed up a French class of four; and, after preliminaries had been arranged, terms settled, and the day fixed for the first meeting of the class, the petticoated wire-puller told her husband.

She tried story-writing, that frequent experiment of ardent, unchilled fledglings, when first overtaken by adversity. Of course, like others before her, she soared on eagles' wings in the beginning, and sent her crudities to Fluter's Monthly, and, as a natural corollary, they were returned with the usual polite dismissal—the amiable editorial subterfuge of "thanks for the privilege of examining," etc.

It is needless to say that she wrote too hastily. One sentence a day, if it be golden, is worth forty as dull as lead; but it is difficult to make young writers understand the solid twenty-four carat value of slow work.

Chris clipped her pinions after several rebuffs, and wrote without compensation for two or three magazines, grateful for the mere privilege of "getting into print." "Something may come of it some day," she said, and drove her pen (or pencil) at every available moment.

With house-work, sewing, French class, and running about after mischievous Dicky, her opportunities for literary pursuits were limited. She has told me since that she often accomplished her self-imposed modicum of solid reading while watching the bread in the oven, or waiting for the potatoes to boil—stocking-darning, mending, and the renovating of garments that had "waxed old," going on at the same time.

During the early days of autumn she was left much alone with Dicky, her husband pursuing his business in the neighboring towns. He frequently walked to and from the next village (several miles), in order to save railroad fare, in weather that was scarcely fit for a strong man to combat, and would come home tired, chilled, and "hungry enough to eat the door-hinges off," he would say to his wife.

"Well," said Mrs. McGonegal (who did heavy washing and scrubbing for Chris), as she came into the kitchen with a heaped-up basket of wind-blown clothes, "it's my opinion that them that washes to-day gits the day, and them that waits till to-morrow don't"—intimating that a storm was in progress.

Chris and Mrs. McGonegal had the house to themselves that day, as the Rev. Searcher had gone to Millville, ten or twelve miles distant, and Dicky was playing with a neighbor's child.

Chris felt lonely and heavy hearted, and longed for this simple, homely soul to bear her company, and cheer her with her steadfast outlook, and her straightforward trust in the shadowing good that bounds the universe. We need, at times, this communion with the rugged workers of the world, to teach us that our boasted superiority is not always what we deem it; to show us that the magnetic links of sympathy may serve to bind two intellects on widely differing planes; to remind us of the indissoluble humanity that appeals in all the race. Plants grow by reaching down, and may not men and women?

"Do stay with me this afternoon, Mrs. McGonegal," pleaded Chris; "it is so lonely, and I know you have nothing to call you home."

"I had a quilt that I was a thinkin' of settin' up yit; but I dunno but I might stay a spell with you and let the bed spread go," answered the washer-woman, a little dubiously. "S'pose I chirk up the fire, and both of us git at it 'n'in'!"

The stove soon glowed ruddy from its open doors, and as Mrs. McGonegal worked she talked—a harmless flow of village gossip. "There goes poor Becky Carden," she exclaimed, looking out of the window. "I reckon you hain't never heard the rights of her story now, did ye, Mis' Newlight?"

Chris replying in the negative, the loquacious little woman continued:—

"Well, it's a born fact that she wasn't just treated as she'd order a ben; but lawful sakes! there ain't many that knows all the ups and downs of poor Becky's disgrace. 'Twould be a warnin' to 'em if they did, most likely. It's my opinion thur's a heap o' charity needed, one way or another!" (The Rev. Lahmeswull's idea clothed in plain language, and uttered in an unsanctimonious spirit.)

"You see, Becky was engaged to Gilbert Corson, but her mother (and thur's whur Mis' Carden done wrong) wanted her to give Gilbert the slip and try and git Hen Paisley, who she thought was better off, and a little more fine in his ways. Hen didn't care nothin' 't all about Becky; but still he thought if she was fool enough to flirt and keery on with him, he wouldn't stan' back. So things went on and on, and Gilbert would come one night to see Becky and Hen Paisley would come the next, all unbeknownst to each other. The weddin' day was sot for her to marry Gilbert (much agin Mis' Carden's will, though she know'd she darsen't lay a straw in the road), and Gilbert's folks had made big preparin's for the house warmin'. Becky's Uncle John had give her ten dollars to buy a suit, and Mis' Carden promised her the cookin' stove. The suit was bought, and her and her mother sewed night and day to git it done. The very evenin' she was to marry Gilbert Becky went off buggy-ridin' with Hen Paisley, and never come back for two or three days! She had went to an aunt of her's in the country, and was stayin' there jist a purpose to plague Gilbert, and see how much he would stand. Then Gilbert swore he'd have revengeance!"

"Gilbert swore he'd have revengeance," resumed Mrs. McGonegal; "and for 'most a year him and Becky was bad friends. Then all of a sudden he took to goin' with her agin—and well, everybuddy knows the rest. (Lawful sakes! these pettcutts o' Dicky's is scorched that redickilus thur's no gettin' it out!)"

"Did her baby live?" asked Chris—the natural question of a mother.

"No—lucky for it, it didn't, poor innocent! It lays up in the simmetry, with a little gray headstone, and 'Gilberta' (it was a girl) cut on the stone—that's all."

Chris, sighing, shook out one of Dicky's little gingham aprons, and as she thought of her own rosy, beaming boy, then of the tiny, unhonored grave in the "simmetry," a flood of grateful emotion came over her at the remembrance of her blessings, meagre though her purse and larder were that day.

As Chris was not in a talkative mood, Mrs. McGonegal had the field of conversation to herself, and exerted her powers to entertain Mrs. Newlight, for whom she had a great respect, mingled with a warm, motherly feeling of a protective nature.

"These shirts hain't so overly white this week. May be it's the soap. I always give my clothes two suds and a bile. Two suds and a bile—and then, if they don't git white, I don't take the blame. Thur's some that washes 'cordin' to time, like Mis' Maguire that washes for Simpson's, and don't care whether the clothes gits white or not; but I hain't one o' them kind."

A pause—broken only by the trotting of Mrs. McGonegal's feet over the uncarpeted floor, and the sound of the irons striking the table.

"You hain't ben to hear the preachin' up on the hill, hev you, Mis' Newlight?"

"No," said Chris; "who is the minister?"

"Well, it's a seck they call the Anvangelical Methodists, and Mr. Sober is the minister,—a proper nice man, I've heerd say. I always liked the Anvangelical Methodists. Law, if 'tain't snowin', so airly in the season, too! and here comes Mr. Newlight with his beard all kivered with it! You go and meet him, honey, and I'll jest finish up these here kitchen towels an' things, so's you won't hev no i'nin' layin' 'round to-morrow."

Chris ran to open the door for her husband, and he came in with such a cheerful expression, such a jubilant ring in his greeting, that she felt instinctively something of a prosperous nature had occurred.

"What is it, dear?" she softly asked, as she helped him to shed his time-worn overcoat.

"Oh, glorious news, little woman! As I came up from the train I met John Langhaz, who told me that he and four or five others are to hold a meeting this evening, to discuss the practicability of a new society, with me for its minister. The chief difficulty is the want of a hall, but they may be able to rent the old Wesleyan Church on Conover Street—the one that is used now for concerts and lectures."

"S-p-l-e-n-d-i-d!!!" said the little woman, and danced for joy.

"You see," continued Mr. Newlight, "if these people who profess to be in sympathy with me can raise even five hundred dollars a year for me, it will be better than this uncertain book business, and far more to my liking. I don't wish to drop altogether out of the lists of the militant."

"And then, dear, the donation book—don't forget that!"

"To be sure, little woman, the donation book," rejoined her husband.

In explanation of the above, let it be understood that Chris, in her love of method, had, from the first day of their housekeeping, instituted what she termed "the ministerial donation book"—a dozen sheets of letter paper stitched together at the back,—in which she transcribed the date of receiving, the character of the offering, and the name of the donor of every voluntary contribution made to their household resources. In her leisure moments, which, as I have intimated, were not many, she sometimes reviewed the contents of this book with much amusement. It served to indicate, in some measure, the kindly interest taken in them by their neighbors and parishioners; and, even after the sad rupture of relations with the church, the members of Mr. Newlight's old congregation (to their honor be it said) did not wholly abandon their generous giving. The little list tended to soften, in a measure, the reproachful frame of mind which occasionally overcame the minister and his wife. New friends, also—those whose purses were neither broad nor deep,—contributed heart-warm gifts out of their little store. Let me advise every clergyman's wife to do as Chris did, and keep a donation book. Systematic marshaling of facts is a powerful agent in the science of sociology. We have Herbert Spencer's warrant for it.

When Mrs. McGonegal donned her bonnet and shawl to go home, Chris took from her purse the price of a full day's labor and would have forced it on the good soul.

"No, no, Mis' Newlight; don't you go fur to do that now. Sixty cents for the washin', and not a penny over—not a penny. I ain't one o' them kind that won't do nothin' for nothin' for nobody, and what I done I done cheerful. 'Tain't often I kin git a chance to give ye a heft with the i'nin', and it's glad I am when the chance does come. Monday mornin', then, agin, if it's advantageous; if not, then not till Wednesday. Monday's your day, and Tuesday's Postlethwaite's, and I can't break my days to my customers when the days is sot. 'Twouldn't be fair. Good-night."

The back-kitchen door closed after the depressed-looking bonnet and the startlingly-gay plaid shawl; but a royal heart beat beneath, and Chris felt a warm glow of genuine admiration for the generous woman, as she went with her husband to look at their darling Dicky.

He lay, pink-flushed, in the warm, moist slumber of healthful childhood, his round arms thrown above his head, and one soft cushiony foot thrust unconsciously through a hole in his little shabby crib blanket.

"We have much to be thankful for, Chrissie," earnestly said the minister.

"Truly," answered his wife, as she covered up the little venturesome toes.

Was this honest avowal of gratitude the less a prayer because unaccompanied by meaningless genuflections and the utterance of formal words? Their worship lay in their work, and faithfully it was performed from day to day.

The experiment of a new society was tried. Alas for human charity! alas for human justice! It failed signally and completely. Hopes were held out to the sanguine minister, subscription papers were put in circulation, and the vacant church was promised. Mr. Newlight prepared a discourse, and on a certain

Sunday took his way to the appointed place. He was surprised at finding the door locked, and the sexton not to be seen in the vicinity. He went to the sexton's house, and that functionary informed him that, in consequence of his (the minister's) destructive opinions, he (the sexton) had received orders from the Chairman of the Church Committee to make no preparations for services, such as lighting a fire, etc., and to withhold the key on penalty of dismissal!

"Very well," said the Rev. Searcher; "I shall preach outside!"

By this time a congregation of about thirty had assembled, among the number Mrs. McGonegal. The minister, after a few words of explanation, took his stand at the head of the long flight of steps leading to the church door. Suddenly one drop—two—a dozen drops of drizzling rain, and then a shower. Extending his arms, as to a group of little children, the minister said: "Come with me, my friends; under my own roof we shall find shelter."

Chris saw them coming and divined the cause, which made her heart burn within her. "To think of the narrowness that is in this wide, wide world!" she said to herself, and threw open the doors. To one and all she gave the entering company a welcoming word and a hand-pressure; and burly farmers said, one to another, "Well, if that little gal ain't got pluck, I don't know where the article kin be found!"

Two or three such meetings were held and then the attendance languished. It may be that the few who came feared that Mrs. Newlight's carpets might be injured; it may be that they did not possess sufficient firmness of purpose to stand by their first impulses. Certain it is, from whatever cause, a fatal influence checked the budding enterprise.

How few in small country towns are firmly and continually sincere! Even when thoroughly convinced of the truth or justice of a course of conduct pursued by some one, they are afraid of "the long-necked geese of the world, who are ever hissing dispraise."

I once read a charming allegory of two knights who went forth (with pen and pencil respectively) to do battle with the giant Sham. The name of the one knight was Sir William Makepeace Thackeray; that of the other, Sir John Leech.

Oh, for a girded knight, in these degenerate days (and it would take one towering in strength and intellect, full panoplied in iron mail), to enter the lists against the giant They Say!

Said Miss Sharples to her friend Mrs. Mackenzie, with whom she was drinking "a sociable cup of tea," "They say that Mr. Newlight can't get any place but his own house to preach his infidel doctrines in. I should think he'd have found out by this time that the Lord is against him. I don't see how you get your quince butter so smooth. Now, the last quince butter that ma and I made in the fall just blubbered and blubbered, and went to lumps."

"Perhaps you did not stew the quinces soft before you put in the sugar," suggested her companion.

"That might have been it," rejoined Miss Sharples, with a pensive sigh.

It was Saturday morning, and Chris was making a diminutive beefsteak pie. Mr. Newlight had gone to the neighboring village of Merton, and she knew he would come home sadly in need of substantial food; hence the extravagance—unwonted, indeed—of a pie.

She had put the finishing touches to the crust. (Chris was very tender-hearted about pie-crust, and said she never liked to press the edges down hard; it seemed to her as if she might hurt it. Some persons have that feeling about the keys of a piano; there would be more genuine music in the world if all had it.) As she was about to set the pie in the oven, a knock at the front door startled her with the presentment, "a sensing," of some "uncanny" visitor.

She opened it, and stood face to face with a jaunty-looking man about thirty, gloveless, and without an overcoat, though it was an intensely cold day in December. He declined her invitation to enter the house, inquired for her husband, and, on learning he was from home, said in a deep, Chadband voice:—

"Ah, I will call again."

"What name did you say, sir?" asked Chris.

"Mr. Browne—the Rev. Mr. Browne, of St. Ludwig," replied the stranger in the same unctuous tones.

Chris was startled beyond measure. She was not a clairvoyante; she was not what the Spiritualists call a "test medium"; but she had been actually frightened, sometimes, at the unerringness of her subsequently proved convictions and suspicions! She possessed a peculiar power of fathoming the natures, aye, the very thoughts, of the people around her. About this man who stood before her, with his half-open, light-gray eyes turned obliquely upon her, in the cringing bend of his head, and the false depth of his voice, there was an emanating something, a magnetism of deceit—call it what you will, you who are learned in psychology; the one terse, vigorous word expressing it is simply humbug.

He went away, and Chris returned to her work; but the impression which the stranger, whoever he was (she felt morally sure he was not the person he assumed to be), had made upon her, was not to be shaken off.

I think that persons of highly nervous organization, and consequent activity of brain and body, are more susceptible to these inexplicable influences, these currents surcharged with magnetism—which flow (whether for good or evil) from one individual soul to another, when brought into communication.

Take your ordinary thick-skulled pachyderm, and seat him in a railway-car beside a gentlemanly forger, or a soft-voiced, petite Borgia, and ten chances to one he will ride the length of his journey without experiencing a single quiver of sensibility; but there is in the natures of another class a witch-hazel divining rod that rarely fails of its mark.

Some hours later the Rev. Mr. Browne came again. He had mistaken the time. The train on which Chris expected her husband was not due until five P.M.; it was then only half-past two.

"It's somebody who is certainly very anxious to see Searcher," cogitated the little woman. "I do hope he doesn't want to borrow any money; for Searcher will be sure to lend it to him if he has it by him."

The hands of the town clock pointed to exactly ten minutes of five when the stranger knocked for the third time. To the Reverend Searcher, who soon returned, he represented himself as a brother minister, who had lost all by a disastrous fire, and who was making engagements to lecture on various subjects in different towns of the Eastern and Middle States. He had been at Merton, the next village, but had met with no success, and had come to Drowseford in the hope of getting an audience, as he understood the Drowsefordians to be a rather intellectual class, as compared with the Mertonians.

Mr. Newlight candidly acknowledged that he could not give him much encouragement. There were a few cultivated families in the village; but the majority of the inhabitants were more inclined to patronize circuses and minstrel bands than any species of intellectual entertainments. "But can you not stay and spend Sunday with us, Mr. Browne, instead of remaining at the hotel?"

The Rev. Browne gave a sudden electric bound. His jaw fell, his eyes dilated, his whole manner betrayed a nervous eagerness to accept the proffered invitation.

"That would be too great an inconvenience, I fear," he exclaimed.

"Not at all," rejoined Mr. Newlight, while Chris murmured some inarticulate phrase of forced politeness. Blame her not, fastidiously honorable reader. It is sometimes harder to speak and act the naked truth in small matters than to face a loaded howitzer.

"Well—ah—since you are so kind, I will go to the hotel and inform Mrs. Browne of your politeness! I will answer for her that she will greatly prefer stopping at a private house."

He donned his hat with alacrity, and Chris, whom the mention of a Mrs. Browne had stunned into momentary paralysis, recovered her wits sufficiently to ask:—

"Will you be back to tea, Mr.—Browne?"

"Oh—ah—yes, since you are so kind. I can answer for Mrs. Browne that she will greatly prefer coming to tea."

He vanished into the outer darkness like a familiar demon, and Chris turned blankly to her husband.

"Oh, Searcher, I know he is an impostor; and did you see with what frantic haste he jumped at your invitation? I feel sure he was manoeuvring for it all the time. Oh, that beefsteak pie! it is perfectly Liliputian! and to think of there being a Mrs. Browne! I feel as if I had been buried alive, with a heavy stone on my breast!"

"Well, well," answered her husband, a little quickly, "it can't be helped now, I suppose. They may be all right; and, as a brother minister, it would have been very shabby in me not to invite him."

"That's just it," said Chris; "I don't mind the trouble, but I do hate to be humbugged, as I know we are going to be," and she got out two more cups, plates, and saucers with a little unnecessary clatter—the result of increased nerve-force acting on the muscles.

If the personality of Mr. Browne acted as a disturbing element to Chris's mental poise, that of his wife exerted a similar influence, differing, not in kind but in degree. She possessed the figure of a professional gymnast—an incontrovertible specimen of the "development theory,"—with the face and costume of a third-rate actress. Her dress was a black velvet, profusely decorated with bugles. Her massive throat was encircled by a necklace of jet medallions, which looked as if it almost throttled the wearer. She wore her dark hair in a short, thick, wavy mass, and in front, among the clustering locks, was one tress of mysterious gray.

In certain confidences forced on Chris the next day, Mrs. Browne accounted for the gray tress by the fact of its being a race-mark of all the Montcours's—a Canadian French family from which she professed to have sprung.

"To think," said Chris, indignantly to her husband, "of her pretending to be French; when she can scarcely speak ten words without betraying her Hibernian origin!"

"I am going to lock the sideboard, and take the key to bed with me," she continued; "who knows but they may abscond in the night with all my wedding presents?"

Her husband laughed; but Chris was as good as her word, and snapped the key in the lock with a most resolute air.

The Brownes, whatever their characters or history, certainly endeavored to make themselves very agreeable during the Sunday of their stay, and, had the slightest hint of invitation been given, would evidently have been delighted to spend a week or two with Mr. and Mrs. Newlight. It is probable that they were impetuous "professionals" of some sort, who, having come to the end of their resources (like so many of their improvident class), had been obliged to resort to stratagem to tide them over.

Mr. Browne appeared tolerably conversant with the affairs of the denomination to which he assumed to belong, and produced various letters and credentials purporting to have come from prominent brother ministers. An unsuspecting man like Newlight would accept these guarantees in good faith. His wife was intuitively convinced of their worthlessness.

It was amusing to see the gestures and changes of facial expression with which the Rev. Mr. Browne interlarded the narrative of his experience.

Plunging forward at an angle of forty-five degrees, and waving at intervals his fat, cushiony hands, he rolled out:—

"I have been co-o-l-d (plunge), I have been hung-g-gry (plunge), I have been without a place to lay my head-d-d (plunge and wave). I forfeited an estate of forty thousand pounds in England, because I refused to become a minister of the Established Church against my honest convictions. And what have I gained by it? What have I gained by it, I repeat? I have come to the conclusion that it is anything but glorious to be a martyr, and I would now settle down to the first thing that promised me a comfortable living—a com-fortable living."

He rubbed his pudgy hands together, and sank back luxuriously in his chair, with an air which plainly said:—

"I pity you, Newlight. I sincerely pity you for your mistaken idea that virtue is its own reward."

They left at noon on Monday, and Chris said she felt as if the weight of a mountain had been lifted off of her. "I could not breathe freely while they were in the house, Searcher, dear; but still I would not have you think that I regret having taken them in—impostors though they are, and I know they are, and they know that I know it."

After this breathless syntactical effort she sat down to rest, and the Rev. Searcher took the occasion to perpetrate a mild joke.

"Then, my dear, make your mind easy; you have obeyed Scripture, and so have they in doing as they would be done by. You are not sorry for having taken them in, and they (if impostors) are assuredly not sorry for having taken you in."

Chris rushed at him with a paper-cutter; but he parried with a lead pencil, and thus the bloodless battle came to an end.

To satisfy his wife, who desired him to be fully persuaded that she was right, Mr. Newlight wrote a letter of inquiry to certain parties with which the Rev. Browne claimed to be intimately acquainted. In due time the answer came:—

"St. Ludwig, Jan. —, 18—.

"REV. SEARCHER NEWLIGHT:

"Dear Sir,—I am under the impression that you have been the victim of a swindler. The Rev. Mr. Browne, of St. Ludwig, belonging to the denomination you mention, is an excellent man of about fifty-five, unmarried, and has not been absent from his pulpit duties for the past eight or ten months. As to the story of the fire, I regard it as only one in the tissue of falsehoods with which your late visitor has imposed on you and yours."

"Very respectfully, ———."

Chris was angelic! She never once said, "I told you so."

After the failure of his attempt to organize an independent church, Mr. Newlight was obliged to resume his previous occupation. The work was arduous, the returns slow. Times were dull, and business men, laborers, and mechanics were chary of disbursing money for the superfluous. It was almost impossible to make both ends meet, even by the practice of the most rigid self-denying economy. In addition to the grievous burden of providing for the daily necessities, Chris had put her shoulder to the wheel, in the endeavor to cancel certain debts unavoidably contracted during the summer. She bore up bravely as a general thing, but she was no saint, as the following will sufficiently prove.

One morning towards the close of the winter the Newlights were sitting at breakfast, which consisted of boiled potatoes, and salt wherewith to give them savor; not a half ounce of butter, not a morsel of bread (alas! the dreaded "last crust" had been reached the day before)!

Suddenly Chris rose from her chair, threw her arms widely above her head, with a look of the deepest anguish, whirled around in the centre of the room, then seizing a tin basin which hung on the wall, she flung it with all her force as far as it would go, and burst into a frenzy of tears.

Dicky made round eyes, and held a spoonful of potato suspended midway from his little battered tin plate to his mouth, as he lisped, "Wath a mattah wiv oo, mamma!"

"Why, little woman?"

Chris flew to her husband's breast, and sobbed out, "I—I—do-on't care! I don't mind it for ourselves, but to see that lit-lit-little, patient soul sitting up there like an angel, eating potatoes and s-a-a-alt (here she rose to a perfect howl), is enough to make a woman feel like a Bengal ti-iger! o-oh! And the worry and hurry of the work nearly drive me out of my senses sometimes. There, I've said it, what I thought four horses would never drag from me, and now I'll repent in sackcloth and a-a-shes—o-oh!"

The Rev. Newlight was a man of patient soul; and this outbreak seemed such a natural issue of the little wife's pent-up feelings, that he knew not how to comfort her. After the tempest of her wrath and grief had somewhat spent itself, she looked up with an April face, and said, "I know I'm an awful, old, vicious creature—and—I ought to be hung, I suppose."

Chris washed the breakfast dishes, tidied up the house, and sat down to a mountain (Pelion upon Ossa? Say, rather, Everest on Kunchingona!) It was a mountain of mending; and, as she sewed, Dicky played about the floor with some carpenter's blocks, and built "a train and an injin."

Chris was patiently filling up the fearful chasms in a pair of her husband's stockings—longing to take a peep into the last number of Science for the People (the one luxury in which the Newlights had indulged during the past year), and thinking "oh, dear, I wish the shoemakers wouldn't leave nails in the boots; they must be in league with the stocking-makers all over the land," when her husband returned from his daily quest to the post-office.

"What will you give for a letter from the Vindex, my literary consort?" he asked, waving aloft a yellow object, not sufficiently bulky to indicate rejected MS., and just thick enough to hint at possible good fortune.

"Oh, what shall I give who have promised a crown? Why, first I will give thee a kiss," sang the jubilant creature, and suited the action to the word.

"Oh, Searcher, look here! Was there ever anything more positively delicious? Just listen!"—

"MRS. S. N.:

"Dear Madam,—Inclosed, please find our check for ten dollars, for your article entitled 'Busy Mothers,' published in the Vindex of last Saturday. We also mail to your address one dozen copies of the paper, 'complimentary.'

"Hoping to hear from you again, we remain,

"Yours truly,

"THE EDITORS."

"The blessed old darlings! whoever they are," said Chris, in silver tones; "I could almost kiss them! Why, just think, Searcher, that ten dollars will buy a small sack of flour, and a whole ham, and stockings for Dicky—and—oh, everything under the sun. I declare—I feel—just—like—an earthquake!"

"Well, don't act like one," said her more demure husband, as she whizzed around the room, utterly oblivious of poor Dicky's laboriously-constructed "injin," which literally became "a smash up!" "Wait till you hear the contents of my letter; then have the agony all over at once."

"Did you get a letter?" stopping short.

"I should rather think I did. Come here." She ran to peep over his shoulder, but he turned and clasped her to his side. "Do you remember those two gentlemen, lumber merchants, who came here in the winter, and insisted on paying me ten dollars for a couple of books that were only worth three, and said they would remember my case?"

Chris nodded.

He flourished before her eyes the following:—

"CLEARMOUNT, March —, 18—.

"REV. SEARCHER NEWLIGHT:

"Dear Sir,—We have borne your case in mind. A vacancy having occurred in our office, we can give you a clerkship at one hundred dollars per month, provided you are willing to come as far as Clearmount. Let us know your decision at once, and oblige,

Yours sincerely,

"GRAY & BILLINGS."

"Oh-oh-oh! Hold on to me—for I know I am going to drop," said Chris.

So the long and bitter experience of the winter was over for them, and their lot was once more cast in a pleasant haven. But a word as to the import of this little sketch. In certain of the world's dark ages heresy was adjudged the damnable sin. Is the opprobrium of it less keenly suffered in our day and civilization?

Latest intelligence from Drowseford informs me that Miss Sharples is heroically nursing the Rev. Sempronius Lahmeswull through an attack of varioloid. All honor to her for her brave devotion. May she be abundantly rewarded.—Ladies' Own Magazine.

DEMOCRACY AND CATHOLICISM IN OHIO.

As to the Catholic clergy, Judge Taft said:—

"The theory of the Catholic clergy is, that no schools can be satisfactory to them; which do not permit the full instruction of Catholic children in the Catholic faith, so that they may be well indoctrinated with their religious opinions at the same time they are acquiring secular knowledge and discipline, if not the same instructors. Their only way to secure this object out of the school fund is to have it divided; and they do not yet see why this cannot be done. They oppose the common schools, therefore, even when relieved of all sectarian teaching, in the hope of an arrangement by which they can have the teaching of Catholic children under the care of Catholic religious teachers, in schools supported by the school fund, which is raised by taxes levied upon all, or that the Catholics be relieved of the school tax. And they think they propose fairly when they propose that all other denominations shall have the same privilege. They think their position is logical and just, and adhere to it, through good report and through evil report, with a characteristic perseverance which belongs to the history of the Catholic hierarchy."

We doubt whether there is a Catholic priest in Ohio who will controvert that statement of their attitude to the common schools; at least he will not dispute its fairness as reflecting the sentiments and feelings of the clergy as a class. The address of Bishop McQuaid, at Pike's Opera House, more than sustains Judge Taft's statement. The history of the controversy in the State of New York over this very question affirms it, and citations from the columns of the Freeman's Journal, the Eastern organ, and from the Catholic Telegraph, the Western exponent of Catholic feeling and opinion, conclusively demonstrate the fact that opposition to our system of secular schools will not cease until it is supplanted by one in harmony with the ideas of the Church. "It will be a glorious day for Catholics," says the Telegraph, "when our school system shall be shivered in pieces."

It is not likely that Judge Taft is in apprehension of such an immediate catastrophe. The school system is too strongly entrenched in the affections of the people to be torn out by the united effort of any body of ecclesiastics. Nor does he fear a division of the school fund. Judge Taft's chief purpose was to put before the people of the State, the causes of the continued opposition to the schools on the part of a body of clericals representing a powerful sectarian body.

All of this would have nothing to do with the present political canvass in Ohio, and Judge Taft would be the last man to inject it into the campaign, deprecating as he says he does, the introduction of sectarianism into politics, but for the apparent compact entered into between those sectarian enemies of the free schools and the Democratic party, and a disposition on the part of those who have the clerical policy in charge to make the party the instrumentality of their designs. And all this in connection with the bill introduced into the Legislature last winter by Mr. Geghan. As Judge Taft says, and in anything but the spirit of a bigot, there is nothing in the bill which seems to be dangerous or unreasonable. But there was hesitation about passing it, and it required the clerical lash, which was vigorously applied, to force it through. Mr. Geghan himself declared the Church had "a prior claim on the party" because the voters of its persuasion had pretty uniformly voted the Democratic ticket. The Catholic Telegraph threatened the Democratic legislators with the punishment of the withdrawal of the Catholic vote if they failed to pass the bill, and when at last it was passed, it pledged the "solid unbroken Catholic vote" to the Democratic ticket in October as a reward for obedience to the demands of the Church.

Now, it is obvious, that in any discussion of the school question, Judge Taft, however liberal in his religious views, could not pass over this alliance without remark; for combinations between political parties and religious bodies, for political or sectarian ends, are the most dangerous foes of free institutions. Knowing the avowed and open hostility of the Catholic clergy to the State school system, it is not unreasonable to suppose they would use the same political machinery which they had employed to open to them the doors of the penal and reformatory institutions of the State to attain their objects in respect to the schools; namely, either division of the school fund, or relief from taxation for their support. The introduction of the mass and confessional into the penitentiary, asylums, and reform schools, is a small object compared with the greater end which is steadily kept in view by the clergy. Hence, such an alliance as the Catholic Telegraph announced is to be regarded with suspicion, and Judge Taft's question, whether it is quite safe to trust the legislation and administration of State affairs to such hands, becomes one of importance and general interest.

We should be the last to say that the Democratic party is opposed to our free school system. It has as staunch defenders among Democrats as among Republicans; but, being allied so closely with a powerful body which is under the control of a clergy hostile to the schools, the temptation to conform legislation to the interests of this great auxiliary body of voters is strong, and the virtues of professed politicians are proverbially weak. The school fund cannot be directly divided—though the New York plan of parceling out school money might, with some modification, be hit upon, notwithstanding our Constitutional provision,—nor can taxes be laid unequally upon the citizens; but it might be possible, as was done by a Democratic Legislature in Texas recently, to so reduce the rate of the school tax as practically to sponge out the school system. This is a danger the people of Ohio would do well to guard against; and Judge Taft in his speech makes such citations of facts—facts that are incontrovertible—as will be likely to cultivate a lively interest in the matter.—Cincinnati Commercial, Aug. 26.

REPRODUCTION OF ORGANISMS.

The epidermis, or outward skin, grows with the greatest facility, just as the hair and the nails; it is indeed the same tissue. The crystalline lens of the eye, which somewhat resembles the substance of the epidermis, is also reproduced when it is taken away. Many experiments made on dogs and rabbits proved that this bi-convex lens, which is one of the principal organs of sight, is perfected afresh in a few months.

Besides the skin, there are the nerves, the restoration of which was unknown until the end of the last century, when Monro and some others drew up a complete theory. In the sciatic nerve, for instance, it is sometimes necessary to cut out about the third of an inch. The ends soon show an alteration; then in about six weeks or two months a gray lump appears on one extremity, which directs its course toward the opposite one, and reunites with it. This is composed of nervous tubes, more slender than the original ones; but by degrees they grow in size, become whiter, the fibres are more perfect, and after an interval of four to six months there is a cord of nerves newly formed. This process will go on even when two inches have been excised. As the matter is repaired, the progressive reestablishment of the sensitive functions can be seen, whether of motion or of feeling.

The cartilage, which is perhaps better known under the name of gristle, was considered for a long period as incapable of renovation; but in 1867 this was found to be a mistake. The cartilaginous tissue of dogs and rabbits was divided, and at the end of two months there was a complete restoration. It is also found that the thinner muscular tissues which perform involuntary movements in the interior of the body possess the same power. One point only remained to be proved—whether muscular fibres could restore by means of similar fibres their loss of substance. This was tried on some Guinea pigs; the muscles were cut, and after a few months they were found to be complete again. Thus all the tissues of the animal frame can be restored in the adult, and by a precisely similar plan of development as in the young.

The knowledge of these facts has been in the practice of surgery the starting-point for many new operations, which are still advancing. Thus the reproduction of bone has especially interested the public. Bones consist of three parts: the marrow, the osseous substance, and the periosteum, a membrane which covers the outside, and which was discovered during the last century to be the principal agent in elaborating the whole structure. One skillful experimenter remarked that wherever he could introduce the periosteum there he could have bone, and could thus multiply the bones of an animal, and place them where there were none before. This, however, is not desirable; but as the bones are very liable to inflammation, tumors, and decay, surgery can here step in and take away all the unhealthy parts, excavate the bone, and at the end of a few months the limb, which has never lost its form, repairs its losses, a new bone tissue is formed, and restored to the former condition of healthy vitality. Formerly amputation was the only resource in such cases; now the limb is saved, bone gives birth to bone, just as the severed nerve reunites itself, the cartilaginous layer adhering to the periosteum being nothing else but bone in the course of formation.

The operation of grafting in the vegetable kingdom is well known; living fragments are attached to a perfect tree. But the grafted portion never becomes an integral part of that to which it has been transported; it rather develops as a parasite, like the mistletoe on the oak, and remains physiologically distinct. This, however, is not the case with animals; when a piece taken from another part of the same individual, or from a different subject, is grafted, it becomes a perfect portion, and gives the same life. The cells of the choroid coat of the eye may be transplanted, and preserve their vitality in their new home. The transfusion of blood is nothing but the introduction of red globules borrowed from one organism and transferred to another. This succeeds even if the blood passes into an individual of quite a different class; as, for instance, from a mammal into the vessels of a frog. The globules will be found after some time living, and easily recognizable as those of a superior animal. The spurs of one cock have been grafted into the comb of another, and teeth of mammals have also been transplanted.

From these facts surgeons took up the idea of grafting bones in the place of those that had decayed, and several attempts seem to favor the plan; but now it is acknowledged that a graft of either the periosteum or the marrow has an unconquerable tendency to be reabsorbed, or to disappear after a time, on account of the unfavorable conditions in which it finds itself, or for want of nutrition.

More success had attended the grafting of teeth; but this is not yet quite established. The teeth spring from a little bag or follicle, in which is the organ of ivory, and that for the production of enamel. When an entire follicle was taken from a puppy, and grafted into an adult dog, the germ was regularly developed to the production of a complete tooth. The enamel when grafted alone perished, while the organ of ivory produced an ivory tooth. These interesting researches lead to the hope that teeth may some day be thus restored, seeing that the entire organ with a complete structure is more likely to grow than when it is only a fragment, transplanted and isolated, like a piece of bone.

The grafting of the epidermis has been accomplished by many celebrated surgeons. After an operation, a burn, or a bruise, the destroyed skin is but slowly restored, and often with difficulty. Thus the idea arose of taking a piece of healthy skin from the same or another person, and laying it on the wound. It was found to require the utmost delicacy on the part of the surgeon; and instead of covering the whole with one piece, very small bits were applied each day, following the progress of healing, and replacing those morsels that did not adhere. In about twenty-four hours the grafting was accomplished, and the wound was not, as usual, a contracted scar. Such are some of the efforts of physiology; the working out is difficult and tedious, but, with skill and patience, the labors of the present time may bear future and valuable fruit.—Chambers' Journal.

CAPT. GEORGE PEARCE, who won the Queen's prize at Wimbledon, was kind enough afterwards to disclose his art of war. After he had been declared winner, the gold badge was pinned on his arm, and he was carried to a tent where, addressing his comrades, he said that it had been the custom for past Queen's prizemen to attribute their good fortune to some special cause. Angus Cameron, who had won the coveted prize twice, attributed his good fortune to the fact that he was a teetotaler. "For myself," said Captain P., "I believe I have been allowed to win the prize because I was recently bold enough to admit myself a convert to the truth of the Bible." The prizeman is a solicitor, and there is a startling implication in his language that boldness is needed in that region to admit the foundation of the Christian religion as by law established. We have come a long way from the days when, as in the case of Der Freischütz, marksmen had to pawn their souls to the devil for bullets that would not fail.—Golden Age.

Poetry.

JOHN A. ANDREW.

A HYMN SUNG AT THE DEDICATION OF THE HINGHAM STATUE, OCT. 8, 1875.

BY OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

Behold the shape our eyes have known!
It lives once more in changeless stone;
So looked in mortal face and form
Our guide through peril's deadly storm.

But hushed the beating heart we knew,
That heart so tender, brave, and true,
Firm as the rooted mountain rock,
Pure as the quarry's whitest block!

Not his beneath the blood-red star
To win the soldier's envied scar:
Unarmed he battled for the right,
In Duty's never-ending fight.

Unconquered will, unslumbering eye,
Faith such as bids the martyr die,
The prophet's glance, the master's hand
To mould the work his foresight planned—

These were his gifts; what Heaven had lent
For justice, mercy, truth, he spent,
First to avenge the traitorous blow,
And first to lift the vanquished foe.

Lo, thus he stood; in danger's strait
The pilot of the Pilgrim State!
Too large his fame for her alone,—
A nation claims him as her own!

RECEIVED.

Books.

EIGHT COUSINS; OR, THE AUNT-HILL. By Louisa M. Alcott. With illustrations. Boston: Roberts Brothers. 1875.
CITIZEN SUFFRAGE. The Argument of Carrie S. Burnham before Chief Justice Read, April 3 and 4, 1875. Philadelphia: 1875.
ELEMENTS OF ENGLISH GRAMMAR. By S. W. Whitney, A.M. New York: J. W. Schermerhorn. 1875.
NOTHING LIKE IT; OR, STEPS TO THE KINGDOM. By Lois Walsbrooker. Boston: Colby & Rich. 1875.

Pamphlets and Periodicals.

THE CARDINAL'S BERRETTE. A Sermon by O. B. Frothingham, May 2, 1875. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1875.
PHARISEES. A Sermon by O. B. Frothingham, May 9, 1875. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1875.
FIRE-BURIAL AMONG OUR GERMAN FOREFATHERS. A Record of the Poetry and History of Teutonic Cremation. By Karl Blind. London: Longmans, Green, & Co. 1875.
PUBLICATIONS OF THOMAS SCOTT, Esq., 11, The Terrace, Farquhar Road, Upper Norwood, London, S. E.—The Birth and Growth of Myth. By Edward Clodd.—The Service of God. By Prof. F. W. Newman.—Convent Experiences. By Miss A. F. B.—Human Depravity. By Rev. James Cranbrook.—The Origin and the Abstract and Concrete Nature of the Devil. By G. G. Zerffi.—A Philosophical Conversation. By E. N.—Signs of the Times: September and October.
SERMONS by the Rev. Charles Voysey, London.—The Holy Communion: July 4.—Anthropomorphism: July 11, 18, 25.
BRIGADIER FREDERICK. A Novel. By Erckmann-Chatrian. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1875.
THE QUESTIONS OF TO-DAY.—MORAL DEFENCE OF THE Pastor of the First Progressive Christian Church.—DANGERS WHICH THREATEN THE REPUBLIC: an Oration on July 4, 1869. By Damon V. Kilgore, Esq., of Philadelphia.
ORTHODOXY THE WORST ENEMY OF CHRISTIANITY. A Sermon by Rev. J. T. Sunderland, at Northfield, Mass., Sept. 19, 1875.
THE UNDERMINING OF THE GOVERNMENT.—By Isaac P. Noyes.
AN ADDRESS before the Moulders' Union, Salem, Ohio, Aug. 24, 1875. By Charles Bonsall.
THE CENTENNIAL. By Col. J. A. Stewart. Atlanta, Ga.: 1875.
JOURNAL of the National Indian Association, in aid of Social Progress in India. August, 1875. London and Bristol.
THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY. September, 1875. New York: D. Appleton & Co.
THE UNITARIAN REVIEW. September and October, 1875. Boston: L. C. Bowles.
THE WESTERN. August and September, 1875. St. Louis: Western Publishing Association.
THE SANITARIAN. September and October, 1875. New York: 234 Broadway.
THE HERALD OF HEALTH. September and October, 1875. New York: Wood & Holbrook.
THE PENN MONTHLY. September and October, 1875. Philadelphia: Penn Monthly Association.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 9.

H. C. Hanson, 75 cents; G. C. Young, 25 cents; B. C. Ward, 25 cents; A. A. Kellogg, $3.20; M. J. Savage, $3.20; Henry Townsend, $3.20; George Sheppard, $3.20; J. J. Church, $3.20; S. D. Bardwell, $3.20; A. W. Withington, $3.20; Wm. P. Draper, $4.04; J. H. Campbell, $3.25; J. C. Merrill, $3.20; S. M. Halliwell, $3; Achille Magna, $3; A. M. Eaton, 50 cents; Chris. A. Day, $10; W. D. Brewer, $6; T. D. James, $6; E. M. Hawley, 7 cents; Wm. Garner, 75 cents; Truair, Smith & Co., $2.10; E. M. Schenckberg, $4; E. Naumburg, $3.20; Chas. D. Miller, $3.20; F. E. Nipher, $3.20; R. C. Spencer, $5; Lizzie Martin, 70 cents; Geo. Iles, 20 cents; C. D. Place, $3.20; Jacob Hoffer, $3.20; A. P. Pritchard, $3.20; R. G. MacGill, $3; John M. Forbes, $3.25; W. H. Fitch, $7; Geo. Allen, 50 cents; Luther Ruthrauff, 50 cents; E. C. Gast, 10 cents; N. A. Hayward, $1.60; Jos. De Godt, 75 cents; F. A. Greene, $13.20; Chas. Goodspeed, $3.20; J. M. Hawks, $3; L. B. Johnson, $9; Oliver Ditson & Co., $20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 14, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

NORTHAMPTON has $858,200 of untaxed property, over $200,000 of which is church property.

IN A SPEECH of Theodore Parker's, delivered in 1850, the phrase—"a government of all the people, by all the people, for all the people"—is used as a definition of true democracy. It is well known that Abraham Lincoln was a reader and admirer of Parker, and this striking phrase may have been unconsciously reproduced in his most noble Gettysburg address.

THE FREE and rational use of Sunday, now so markedly on the increase, is exciting uneasiness and alarm among Christians of all sorts. These resolutions were lately passed by the Baptist ministers of this neighborhood:—

"Resolved, That we regard pleasure excursions on the Lord's day as contrary to the law of the Christian Sabbath, as dangerous to the morals of those who participate in them, and as great annoyances to the communities upon which they are imposed.

"Resolved, That we regard with special repugnance such pleasure excursions on the Lord's day as are made in the name of religion, since they involve not only the sin of desecration but also that of hypocrisy."

Commenting on these resolutions, the Boston Advertiser, which seems now-a-days increasingly anxious to propitiate Evangelical favor, made admissions tempered by a certain subdued but dolorous whine: "There has been a marked change in the feeling of the larger American communities as to what constitutes a proper and respectful observance of the Lord's day. Many things are now not merely tolerated, but considered eminently desirable, which our sturdier fathers would have resented as sacrilege. But the old respect for the day remains, and it is kept as a day of rest and of worship to an extent probably unknown anywhere else in the world. It will be a great misfortune if, through innovations of the kind which are now attracting the notice of the religious public, that respect should take its departure."

THE Deutsche Merkur, the organ of the Old Catholics in Germany, quotes the following extracts from a catechism of church law published by the Ultramontane Bishop Martin:—

"1. Catholics cannot be bound to send their children to undenominational State schools, nor can they be compelled to pay taxes for such schools; the bishops have the right of setting up educational establishments of their own.

"2. Bishops may order processions, pilgrimages, and observance of Church festivals, and in this right they may not be interfered with by law or police regulations.

"3. The State may not suppress or limit Church societies, such as the Workmen's Unions, St. Borromeo's Union, and the like.

"4. The State has not the right to limit by a statute of mortmain the acquirement of property by the Church; it may not tax Church property, and must leave its administration and application solely to ecclesiastical officials.

"5. Members of Church boards must be nominated by the bishop, or, if chosen by the congregation, must be confirmed by the bishop.

"6. The State cannot levy any taxes or dues from the clergy, except by permission of the Papal See. Similarly, without permission of the Papal See, clergy cannot be summoned before a civil tribunal, even in ordinary civil and criminal causes.

"7. Under pain of excommunication, it is forbidden to imprison a bishop or to remove him from his See.

"8. The State may not order that the bodies of Catholics should be buried in communal graveyards, but it ought to set apart forever special portions of these cemeteries for Catholics, or should allow them to provide their own burying-grounds."

THE LIBERAL LEAGUE MOVEMENT.

The excellent results of the late convention at Philadelphia in placing the Liberal League movement on a sound basis, and the noble, hearty response of the liberals at Florence to a very imperfect advocacy of its claims upon public support, have strengthened our hope that the enlightened moral sense of the country will yet be enlisted on its behalf, in season to secure the triumph of the principle of purely secular government before an outbreak of sectarian fanaticism shall have involved the nation in manifold disaster. Would that we were gifted with the persuasive and silvery eloquence of a Bossuet, a Burke, a Patrick Henry, a Webster, a Wendell Phillips, that we might win the hearts of our countrymen to the adoption of measures on which depend their highest conceivable interests! Alas, we have only intense conviction and blunt speech to employ in their service; yet with these common gifts alone we must attempt to remove prejudice and invoke the public opinion which gives life and power to every great movement for human weal. Perhaps it is quite as well, after all, that the fascinations and magical arts of rhetoric are out of the question; for we rely on no momentary dazzling effects, but wholly on the solid justice and truth of the principle we plead for, and on the necessity, evident to dispassionate reflection, of a general united movement by the people to carry it out. Making no appeal whatever to excited feeling of any kind, we lay the case calmly before the deliberate and sober judgment of our fellow-citizens, and desire no response unsuggested by their own independent reason, enlightened conscience, and spontaneous patriotic impulses.

1. What, then, is the Liberal League movement?

It is simply and solely a movement to secure the more perfect realization of the object aimed at by the authors of our national existence and founders of our national government. Their purpose was to establish a republic which should rest on and be administered by the natural intelligence and virtue of the people, uninfluenced by ecclesiastical supernaturalism of any sort. In the Declaration of Independence, they took the unequivocal ground that, to secure the rights of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," "governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." This is the most absolute possible assertion that the origin of all just government, such as they proposed to establish on this continent, is the WILL OF THE PEOPLE, and not any supernatural will or Divine ordinance whatsoever. The foundations of this great republic were thus laid in the rights and prerogatives of NATURAL HUMANITY, in total disregard and oblivion of all ecclesiastical supernaturalism. In other words, without even so much as mentioning the Church, the Bible, or the Christ, our forefathers declared their independence of Great Britain "in the name and by the authority of the good people of these colonies"; and they solemnly ordained and established the National Constitution in their natural, human capacity as—"We, the People of the United States." By thus totally ignoring ecclesiasticism of every kind, they built the entire fabric of their government on the principle of the absolute separation of Church and State; and, to render their purpose, if possible, still more transparent and unmistakable, they forbade Congress, in the very first Constitutional Amendment ever adopted, to make any law "respecting an establishment of religion." It would have been impossible to make plainer the fact that this was originally designed to be a purely secular government.

Nevertheless, certain "survivals" of ecclesiasticism (enumerated in the "Demands of Liberalism") remain to be reformed in the practical administration of the National and State governments. The one sole object of the Liberal League movement is to secure the complete practical embodiment of the original national ideal of a purely SECULAR STATE by reforming these abuses, and thereby to remove obstructions which produce rapidly increasing disorder and friction in the conduct of affairs and endanger more and more the public welfare. That is, it aims to make the total separation of Church and State the fact, as well as the theory, of our national existence, thereby purifying our national politics from the poison of ecclesiastical interference, and putting an end forever to all possibility of political dissension on religious grounds.

2. Who are "Liberals," in the sense intended by the Liberal League movement?

All citizens who favor the complete practical separation of Church and State, and are willing to co-operate for that purpose. The term covers all who comprehend and sympathize with the spirit of our republican institutions, who cherish at heart the national ideal of a purely secular State, and who approve the purpose and attempt to carry forward this ideal to a higher and nobler realization. So far as this movement is concerned, the term "Liberal" is simply equivalent to "patriot," and has no opposite but "traitor"; for seeking to unite Church and State in this country is seeking to undermine and destroy the very foundation of all our national institutions, which is treason, while seeking to make the separation of Church and State practically complete is the task and duty of the most enlightened patriotism. The object of the Liberal League concerns every citizen, and makes its appeal for support solely in the name of the high obligations of citizenship. All history and experience have proved that liberty is impossible where the Church holds political sway, and that liberty is curtailed in the exact ratio of the Church's influence in political affairs. Hence every citizen who would strengthen the secular defences of liberty, and remove its ecclesiastical limitations, is entitled to the honorable designation of "Liberal,"—that is, liberty-lover; and the Liberal League proposes nothing in which all such citizens, of whatever private creed or persuasion, should not heartily believe and earnestly join.

2. What is the nature of the practical work proposed by the Liberal League?

The practical work proposed is to secure the adoption of certain practical measures: namely, the equitable taxation of church-property and the consequent release of the people from enforced support of the Church,—the secularization of the public schools by discontinuing all religious exercises in them, and especially by redeeming the school system from its present sectarian Protestant character through the abolition of Bible-reading as a school exercise,—and so forth. These measures it is the object of the Liberal League to work for in all proper and legitimate ways, like those used for carrying any other measures of a public character. It is not the object of the Liberal League to hold regular local meetings for miscellaneous lectures or addresses, or to do the work of local societies of a religious, scientific, or social character; all this is necessary work, but not the work of the Liberal League, which is devoted to accomplishing certain specific political reforms, and uses the platform and the press simply as means to these political ends. The total separation of Church and State can only be accomplished through the action of the State, and the Liberal League ceases to be such when it turns aside to hold merely local meetings of a miscellaneous kind. There must be business energy and business concentration of purpose in carrying forward this movement, or it cannot possibly prove useful or successful.

3. What is the necessity for any such movement at all?

In the first place, justice demands it. The State taxes every free-thinker to support the Church, when it exempts the property of the latter from taxation; and it thereby commits a gross violation of the rights of conscience. The State commits a great wrong against the Catholics, the Jews, the non-Protestants of all sorts, when it taxes them to support Protestant public schools; and you and we become accomplices in this wrong by tamely acquiescing in its continued perpetration. Whoever sees the wickedness of these things is bound to do his part towards making them cease.

In the next place, expediency demands it. The Catholics are growing very restive, and we are forced to say with reason, under compulsory taxation for the support of Protestant public schools, and the danger to our present school system is enormous, because the protest against it is deserved. By suffering the Bible to remain in the schools, we are "laying up wrath against the day of wrath"—leaving a cause of just grievance to continue its irritating influence in alienating more and more the hearts of a large portion of the population from the wholeschool system. We are in the wrong, and the wrong is, as always, working against us. There is no safety for the school system so long as the Bible is in it, and, the longer we delay to remove this grievance, the harder it will be to maintain the system itself. It is folly of the most egregious kind, as well as injustice the most flagrant, not to take up with earnestness the movement to reform the school system by making it purely secular; and the reformation will be easiest accomplished in the name of that principle of non-union of Church and State of which the Liberal League is an organized affirmation.

Lastly, the time demands it. The attack of the Catholics on our republican institutions is arousing the Protestants as such to activity, and by and by is certain to call forth a dangerously bigoted type of opposition. The Protestants, though divided, will by a large majority stand fast by the Bible as the symbol of Protestantism, which they confound with liberty, unless now, before heated blood has blinded their judgment, and before they have taken a fixed position on the subject, they can be led to take the broad secular ground. To-day the arguments of true Liberalism will be listened to as they will not be by and by; to-day the Liberal League has an opportunity which will be lost, if unimproved. In the hour when reason is still capable of making her voice heard, and before passion comes in to drown the calm expostulations of justice, lies the great opportunity of efficient work for those who already discern the signs of the times.

Are not these reasons, briefly outlined, enough to show the need of the Liberal League movement? If so, will you not forthwith consult with your friends touching the formation of a League in your own neighborhood?

DEFINITIONS.

Moody and Sankey will soon be upon us, and the winter is likely to be alive with discussion on Christianity. Now, then, is the time to make clear to ourselves and others that we know what we are talking about. Mr. Beecher opens the flood-gates of confusion in the sketch he gives of his aims and purposes, in his announcement of an intention to labor at the editorial conduct of the Christian Union. A most remarkable announcement that is. The paper in Mr. Beecher's hands is to be a Christian paper in the true sense,—by "Christian," Mr. Beecher meaning everything that is worth knowing, having, and doing, whatever adorns private character, beautifies domestic life, elevates or benefits society, purifies politics, advances science, favors art, encourages literature, promotes the interests of health and wealth, increases the privileges of human beings in their relations with each other. In a word, "Christianity" stands for whatever Mr. Beecher feels an intellectual, moral, or sentimental interest in. This is complimentary to Christianity; but is it complimentary to the agencies of civilization which have come into exercise since Christianity was born, and some of which have flourished and flourish still (as they suppose) in spite of it?

If leading men talk in this loose fashion, we may as well give up all attempts at being intelligible, say that words have no sense, that twice two make five, that mush is the only nutritious food for the mind. Christianity is the religion that has as its central figure "the Christ"; not Jesus of Nazareth, not any teacher or prophet, but "the Christ." It may be the Christ of Hebrew expectation, the Christ of the Arians, the Christ of the Trinitarians, the Christ of any of the multitudinous sects; but, in any event, the Christ.

The first Christians held simply the faith in Christ, the Jewish Messiah; the later Christians adopted Paul's Christ, the spirit; the Orthodox Christians believe in Christ, "Very God of Very God." All believe in the Christ as distinguished from Jesus. The history of Christianity had been written a great many times, by different men, of different opinions, writing in different interests, with different prepossessions. There are Romanist histories, and Protestant histories, and histories of so-called "Infidels." But one and all agree on this definition, and commend or criticise the religion for its fidelity or its infidelity to what that definition implies. They who praise the religion, praise it for achievements in the name of Christ; they who assail it, assail it on the ground that in the name of Christ nothing great or good has been accomplished; but neither one school nor the other has thought it fair to ascribe to the faith either good or evil that has manifestly been due to other causes than faith in the Christ. If Mr. Beecher or any other can prove from fresh documents, or from new readings and interpretations of old documents, that the religion of Christ is to be credited with the achievements that have been set down to the account of geology, astronomy, natural history, chemistry, physiology, political and social economy,—achievements that seem to the vulgar mind to have resulted from discoveries as to the powers and potencies of the natural world,—for the telegraph, for instance, or steam, or the post-office, or the printing-press, or the sewing-machine, or the thousands of beneficent instrumentalities that bless mankind,—let them bring forth their proofs, and confound our scepticism; but until this can be done, or, at least, honorably attempted, such random declarations must be set down as an attempt to palm off religion on false pretences; in other words, as very bold and reckless imposture. They may be wrong who confine the term "Christianity" to any particular definition of the Christ, and hold all Christians responsible for the logical deductions from one out of many Christologies; but, letting the definitions be as wide as the most liberal desire, the limit must be drawn somewhere. The Christian holds Christ answerable only for results that can be directly traced to him. If Mr. Beecher believes that all things whatever are traceable to him, he is precisely the most stupendous believer alive. It appears that he is about to justify and explain this prodigious, this omnivorous, credence in the columns of the Christian Union. If he succeeds, he will stand chief among theologians, not of his generation alone, but of all generations. He will be a greater apostle than Paul, for he will inaugurate a new form of the religion which will throw Paul's work completely into the shade. Paul was content that Christ should be confessed Lord of the spiritual world. Mr. Beecher claims that he is Lord of the political and social world as well; more than this, that he is Lord of the undiscovered worlds of aesthetics, philosophy, mechanics, economics, dietetics. In no figurative sense does he anticipate the reign of the Christ on earth. The next issue of the Christian Union will probably set the world by the ears. From Mr. Beecher's established reputation as a nice scholar, a profound and exact thinker, an accomplished theologian, and a master of precise expression, we may expect the foundations of the new religion to be laid deep and strong.

O. B. F.

INFLATION.

"VOTERS, SEE WHAT INJUSTICE YOU ARE RESPONSIBLE FOR! You have sanctioned laws by which the National Banks, composed of a few of the people, borrow of the nation, the whole people, over $370,000,000 without interest, and are paid interest—OUT OF THE TAXES PAID INTO THE PUBLIC TREASURY—on the securities deposited for the loan! WHAT IS THE REMEDY? Demand a return of the National Bank notes, and return to the banks their securities. Create sufficient greenbacks to buy an amount of bonds equal to those returned. Tax-payers will thus save millions of dollars in taxes yearly, and the country still have about the same volume of currency as now. Have only United States money: issue as much as productive industries may require on United States Bonds or real estate as security, charging 4 per cent. interest, and make the money interchangeable with 3.65 per cent. United States Bonds. Repeal all laws creating or sustaining banks; let banking be free and conducted under the law of partnerships. The people deposit with the National Banks an average of about $670,000,000, for which they get no interest, and have only a precarious security! With the interchangeable bond system this money will flow into the United States Treasury, making it unnecessary to borrow in Europe, and saving a large amount of interest. If you are in favor of greenback money, join greenback clubs, and take the newspapers that are friendly. Have your local paper publish the above."

The above financial tract, of which the "seventh edition of 5000" has already been printed, embodies the views of the most advanced inflationists, or "the people's money" men; and, however honestly such views may be advocated, I firmly believe that their adoption by the community at large would involve us in commercial disaster and ultimate ruin.

It is my profound conviction that the commercial integrity of the people of this country has been undermined during the last decade by the financial policy of our government and the defence of inflation by influential and trusted men. The business of the country is based upon the broken pledges of the nation. The generation of young men just stepping into active life is taught that bad faith with creditors indicates smart financiering; that repudiation is liquidation, and the defence of it true statesmanship. We owe an enormous debt, and honesty demands that it shall be paid as soon as possible; but the inflation leaders are forever devising ways and means to evade payment. To use plain terms, we lie and steal and then proceed to justify the performance. We lie when we promise to pay one dollar, and when demand for it is made, wilfully break our promise. We steal when we pay a creditor seventy-five cents, and pretend we have paid him one hundred cents. The "one dollar" is worth seventy-five cents to-day; may be worth eighty-five cents to-morrow, and seventy cents next week; and, as a necessary result, business transactions once legitimate become gambling operations. Speculation, extravagance, fraud, and corruption supplant trade, economy, honest-dealing, and integrity. Holding these views, I believe that an ex-posure of the folly and fallacy contained in the above tract will be of some service to the cause of national morals, and is, therefore, entirely consistent with the spirit, aim, and scope of THE INDEX.

At the outset I challenge the statement that the National Banks "borrow of the nation . . . over $370,000,000 without interest." Whatever the crimes of the banks may be, this is not one of them. Their relation to the government is in no fair or mercantile sense that of a borrower. The mere fact that interest is not paid upon the alleged loan is in itself evidence that no such loan was ever made or contemplated by the government. What constitutes a loan? How do we define it? It involves the relinquishment of value by the lender. He transfers to the borrower the property loaned; he parts with it, and until it is returned to him he is just so much poorer himself. After the transfer has been made he has just so much less for his own use. If I borrow $100 of Mr. E. M. Davis, the author of this tract, he has $100 less than he had before. If the banks borrow $370,000,000 of the government, the United States Treasury holds $370,000,000 less than it held before. Will Mr. Davis tell us how much less there was in the treasury after the establishment of the National Banks than before! Was the government poorer by one dollar? It certainly was not; for in authorizing the banks to issue $370,000,000 in currency, it parted with nothing.

The simple truth is, the banks purchase government bonds,—that is, the government's promises to pay hereafter; and are authorized to issue currency based upon them and redeemable in greenbacks,—that is, in the government's promises to pay on demand. These greenbacks are redeemable in coin, and until paid are evidence of an insolvent, or, if solvent, a defaulting, nation. The bonds upon which the bank currency is based are placed in the custody of the government, not as security for a loan to the banks, as the tract asserts, but as a measure of protection to the people. Their deposit in the United States Treasury is a guarantee of the redemption of the bank currency, as agreed.

United States bonds very properly bear interest, and the owners of them, whether banks or individuals, collect interest. This interest is in no sense a bonus paid to the banks, as Mr. Davis assumes. To expose this fallacy, it is only necessary to state that any bank association in the country may, by its own act, cease to be a bank, reclaim its bonds, and continue to collect interest on them. In such event, the government calls in the circulation of the retiring bank, exchanging for it the greenbacks deposited with it by the bank for this purpose—not paid to it, but merely deposited with it in trust; for in making this exchange the government acts simply as an agent for the bank and for the people. Having secured to itself control of millions of dollars alleged to have been loaned by it, what disposition does it make of this accession of wealth? It "shall be," the law reads, "burnt to ashes." Can infatuation exceed this! First, loan $370,000,000; second, stipulate that the borrowers shall not pay interest; third, stipulate that they shall receive interest on the security pledged for the return of the money borrowed; fourth, stipulate that the money borrowed shall never be returned, and that the moment all evidence of indebtedness is destroyed, the security pledged for its payment shall be handed over to the debtors, and they shall stand discharged. And this we are assured is a fair and proper interpretation of the "National Bank Act" of Congress!

Let us refer briefly to the origin of this act. It was passed at a time when the nation was hard-pressed by the slaveholders' rebellion. Our credit with foreign powers was low; our treasury was nearly empty. This act was emphatically a measure designed to restore credit, and to fill, not to deplete, the treasury. To enable the government to find a market for its bonds, to enable it to borrow money, and to conduct the war to a successful issue, the National Banks were authorized.

The tract we have under review reverses the facts, and we are seriously asked to believe that with a civil war on its hands, with an empty treasury, and with expenses amounting to more than $1,000,000 per diem, Congress deliberately authorized a loan of hundreds of millions of dollars to a "few of the people"; and as if to overload the proposition with absurdity, it is added that these privileged few are not only absolved from paying interest, but are actually to be paid for consenting to borrow. The government has much to answer for; but one's credulity must be severely taxed before he can believe that any Congress was ever guilty of such wild legislation.

In a future paper I propose to continue the examination of Mr. Davis' remarkable tract. R. P. R.

Communications.

THIS IS A CANON LAW COUNTRY.

THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—The expression "splashing the water in an aimless way," around a hostile and ugly-looking craft, for example, instead of lodging a good shell in its port-hole, or disabling its turret, accurately describes, in my estimation, the harmless gunnery practice of which Romanism, as a growing temporal power in this land, is at present made the target by many writers, not excepting, until lately, yourself. In reading my manuscript over, I had at first, however, the thought of passing the pencil over that expression, lest it should give offence to one who, on several questions—on the free-love question, and on this very Church question,—has done the duty of a sentinel "fast and true." I, however, let it stand, hoping that its effect might more probably be to elicit from you some excellent article: which was the case. That article is the one (on September 9, I believe, but all my numbers of THE INDEX which contain excellent articles get borrowed somehow, so that I never can lay my hand on them when wanted) in which you speak of the "Corruption Fund." As to the article on the "canon law," with which you accompany my letter in your issue of Sept. 23, I do not find it so masterly, and I submit to your readers that my letter is not refuted by it.

1. Your taking me to task for using the term "canon law" in a more generic sense than the one in which it may be restricted to the canon law of the Romish Church, is a mere question of words. When I say that "the canon law, not only of the Church of Rome but of every Protestant sect, is part and parcel of the law of the British Empire and of the United States," the sense in which I add that "this is a canon law country" is made sufficiently plain. By canon law I here understand the ecclesiastical law which any church, true or false, chooses to give to itself, or to submit to as a matter of compromise; whether that ecclesiastical law be limited to the canons of the seven (Ecumenic Councils, as in the Orthodox Church Universal; or extended, so as to comprise the canons of the apostles, those of a few local councils and of a few individual fathers, as in the Greek branch of the Orthodox Church; whether it be a farrago of apocryphal quotations from the ancient fathers and from the "extravagant" bulls of the new heretic popes, as in the Romish secession, or as much of that farrago as the British Parliament and Prince Bismarck could stand,—whether it calls itself "The Form of Presbyterian Form of Church Government," or "The Book of Discipline of the Methodist Church." It is on the canon law in that sense, an extended but very intelligible and legitimate one, that the discussion was; and, therefore, your long quotation from Blackstone—showing that, in the Henrico-Octavo Blackstonio-Bismarckian sense, canon law means a very queer thing which, of course, I know)—was in this connection as irrelevant as it was erudite. I might add, were it not also, in this place, an irrelevant point, that, in a restricted sense, the only real canon law is that of the Orthodox Universal, or of the Orthodox Eastern Church, and not that of the Popish Church, Anglicanized or not.

2. That, in this sense, the canon law of every sect is part and parcel of the law of this land, is what you not only implicitly admit,—you even proceed to explain how, and on what grounds, it is such. "If a civil court," you say, "inquires into the private regulations of any sect, it is only for the purpose of enforcing the fulfilment of a contract, a bequest, or a trust, according to common law or equity." Just so. What is the canon law of the Popish or of any Protestant Church in this country, if not "the private regulations of a sect," constituting, among its members, "a private contract"? The sectarian nature of this contract makes it so private, that the public secular courts, in a country not being "a canon law country," would absolutely refuse to hear anything about it, but would answer the contestants in the words which you quote after me:—

"If it were a matter of wrong or wicked lewdness, oh ye Jews [or Papists, or Protestants], reason would that I should bear with you; but if it be a question of words and names and of your [canon] law, look ye to it, for I will be no judge of such matters."

But as "this is a canon law country, sir," the civil court does no such thing. As I said, "Whenever a case between a minister and his congregation or synod [as to baptizing by three immersions or by one, for example] is brought before a civil court, the court calmly ascertains what the canon law of that church prescribes on this particular point, and orders the sheriff to execute it," by compelling the minister or people to baptize or be baptized in the proper way, or submit to the temporal penalties provided by the canon law.

What that penalty is, depends on the particular character of each century. When some Austrian order was for the first time bestowed upon a Rothschild, an Italian cartoon represented the Jew repelling with a gesture of horror the Christian emblem in the following words:—

"In tempi men leggiadri e più feroci, Si applicavano i ladri nelle croci."

To which the kaiser answered with a smile, at the same time pinning the cross on the breast of the Jew:—

"In tempi men feroci e più leggiadri, Si applicano le croci sopra i ladri."

To-day the sheriff does not commonly burn the minister or congregation, but gives to whichever of the two is wrong according to the canon law the option between conforming to it and forfeiting all rights to the temporal property of the Church.

This is just what the court did in the Portsmouth case. As you correctly say, "When the court refused to interfere in the matter of entrance fees to the church building, or to meddle with the disciplinary treatment of his flock by the priest, it did so on the express ground that these were matters of internal administration over which it had no control." But the reason why it had no control over them was, not the general principle that a civil court is, as it should be, deprived of any power to enforce the canon law of any church; but that the canon law of the Catholic Church, which was the one concerned, forbids its members, under the strongest anathemas, to appeal from the decisions of the spiritual rulers to any temporal authority. Far from "thereby disowning all the obligations which the canon law might have imposed," the court acted "in due obedience to the canon law" of that particular Church. Had the decision been on general and prima facie grounds, there need not have been any trial at all; and the court might have refused to hear the case, and said to the parties, "If it were," etc. Instead of that the court virtually said to them: "As my first apprehension was that your Church was like any one of the Established Churches of this country, oh ye Catholics, reason would that I should bear with you. Having done it, I find to my surprise, that there is one church in this country which is not established, and which has so framed her canon law as to give to a civil court no handle to take hold of. Accept, therefore, my apology, as neither disinclination to meddle with such matters, nor want of habit of doing it, has prevented me from rendering a decree such as you pray for."

3. Your arguing the non-recognition of canon law by the civil authority in this country "from the total absence in this country of ecclesiastical or spiritual courts, which would be indispensable to the administration of canon law," is most extraordinary. Roman Catholics and Anglicans will, not without astonishment, learn from you that they have in this country no diocesan or provincial synods for the enforcement of canon law. Presbyterians will be equally astonished to learn that they have no presbyteries, no synods, and no general assemblies; Congregationalists that they are not in the practice of holding disciplinary meetings; and so on with the various sects. If, however, the civil courts refused to take any cognizance of the laws and decisions of these various ecclesiastical courts, but merely left them free to enforce their laws themselves through spiritual sanctions, by delivering unto Satan the rebellious offenders, your assumption might be true, at any rate, for the purposes of this discussion. But we have seen that this is far from being the case. When a spiritual court has exhausted all the resources of spiritual persuasion and spiritual threats, it delivers the offender, not unto Satan, but unto the civil court; and the civil court delivers him, not unto Satan, but unto the sheriff. The sheriff will, by the order of the civil court enforcing the ecclesiastical law, take by the collar with the right hand a Roman Catholic priest who teaches Anglicanism, and with the left hand an Anglican minister who teaches Romanism, and throw each of them out of his parsonage into the street. The reason why the civil courts thus enforce the laws of ecclesiastical legislatures is that the canon law of the respective religious bodies is, like the treaties with foreign nations, part and parcel, though indirectly so, of the law of the land.

4. When Tyler, in the passage which you quote, says that "we have no ecclesiastical establishment in the United States," he simply means that here no sect is established to the exclusion or disparagement of others, but that all sects are established on a parity, the canon law of the one being enforceable by the civil courts equally with that of the others. To have an idea of what an unestablished church is, we must leave the United States, where the nearest approximation is the Roman Catholic Church; and avoiding England, or crossing it by a very fast train, land on continental Europe,—in France, for example. In this latter country, by the side of the four established sects, the Episcopal Roman Catholic, the Calvinistic, the Lutheran, and the Israelite, we find quite a number of other religious bodies, small in numbers but full of life, such as the Dominicans, the Jesuits, the Baptists, the Methodists. These bodies are entirely unrecognized by the civil law as corporations capable of holding property, suing or being sued, the law seeing in them nothing but the individual citizens of which they are composed. Each one of these bodies is allowed the liberty of worship; and has its own canon law, which it can at pleasure enforce against its members by spiritual penalties, but not by temporal ones, as the civil courts will not enforce such. Now Americans, even American free-thinkers, who have not entirely got rid of puritanic State-church notions, will ask how those religious bodies can manage to exist in such conditions. Those religious bodies not only manage to exist, but are the very life of French Protestantism and of French Romanism respectively. Far from envying the position of their established brethren, they look upon the established bodies with feelings which embrace all the shades between contempt and pity, as the owner of a tidy home looks upon a great, shabby boarding-house. I have been a member of such unestablished bodies, both Protestant and Roman Catholic, and I know what I am speaking of.

Of the religious connections which I formed and broke, these are the only ones which I broke with regret, and remember with affection or respect. It is, therefore, in no spirit of persecution of religious bodies with which I have ceased to sympathize, that I advocate such measures as would make American churches cease to be established churches, and America itself cease to be a canon law country.

I have, I think, sufficiently defended myself of the returned charge of "splashing the water" so far as having confused notions of the nature of canon law, or of the British or American legislation on its subject. As to whether the measures that I recommend, to meet an acknowledged danger of supreme magnitude, would be mere "splashing the water" by firing round shot at the plates of an iron-clad, or hitting it below the water-line, is what I will leave your readers and yourself to decide. The strength of Romanism as a political power lies in its money-power, in what you so well term its "Corruption Fund." That fund it can only hold and retain in one of the two following ways: either in a corporate capacity, which I propose to withdraw from it and from all other sects; or through its bishops, or others of its members, appearing before the civil law to own the property in their private capacity as mere individuals, but holding it really for the benefit of the sect, and at their death transmitting by will to others, to hold and transmit in the same manner. This second method is in its turn made impracticable by my proposed legislation restricting the testamentary power, and securing the passing of the largest part of the property to the natural heirs, or in their defeat, by escheat to the State. Now, my dear sir, "splashing the water" is what Romish prelates would call a very mild expression in this case. The moment such a legislation goes into execution, unless a circle has more than three hundred and sixty degrees, I tell you, sir, they are, as a political power, undone; caught on all sides beyond the possibility of a move, as the French were at Sedan. That moment sees the end of the CATHOLIC CONSPIRACY and of the CANON LAW PERIOD in the United States.

I am, sir, truly yours,

JULIUS FERRETTE.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 4, 1875.

[1. Bishop Ferrette forgets that the term "canon law" had been used with entire accuracy in its technical sense alone, in the articles which he mildly ridiculed as "splashing," etc.; and that its technical sense alone was concerned in the question discussed in those articles. If he chooses to use the phrase in a loose, inaccurate, and merely metaphorical manner, we have nothing more to say on the subject, since all that he has written turns out to be totally irrelevant to the discussion he undertook to criticise, and for which he now desires to substitute a discussion on a wholly different matter.]

2. The Bishop's original and paradoxical assertion that "this is a canon law country" having now somewhat amusingly shrunk to the mere truism that Church and State are not yet practically and totally separated in this country, of course we agree with him in that view of the case.

3. It is singular that we must point out that "synods" and "presbyteries" are not "courts," and not recognized as such by the government of this country; and that there is nothing "canonical" in merely enforcing the observance of freely formed contracts. People have the right to form what contracts they please, if not criminal in their nature; and, if Bishop Ferrette would have the government prevent them, directly or indirectly, from forming sectarian contracts among themselves in their individual capacity, we think he recommends tyranny and persecution to which Americans would never submit.—ED.]

CATHOLICISM AND THE OHIO DEMOCRACY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Permit me a brief reply to your remarks upon my letter concerning the attitude of the Democratic party of Ohio upon the Catholic question.

You criticise me for holding THE INDEX responsible for the sentiment quoted from the Christian Union, that the Democratic party "has taken an attitude friendly to the views of the Catholics." Had the Christian Union paragraph stood by itself, properly credited (as it was) to that paper, your criticism would have been just; but, on the contrary, it was quoted in, and made a part of, a leading INDEX editorial,—used to "point the moral and adorn the tale" of "The Catholic Peril," which you so ably unfolded. I think none of the readers of that article doubted that you tacitly indorsed the sentiments of that paragraph; else what its raison d'être in the body of your editorial?

But why object to be held to this sentiment of the Christian Union, when you essentially re-affirm it in your present comments? Quoting from the Catholic Telegraph that "the unbroken, solid vote of the Catholic citizens of the State will be given to the Democratic party," you add: "And that this means that the Democratic policy on the school question will be pleasing to the Catholics, goes without saying. We want to do no injustice to the Democratic party; but facts are facts, and must be recognized."

Yes, "facts are facts"; but inferences from facts are not always justly drawn by any means. If you mean by this that the policy of the Democratic party of Ohio is at all likely to favor a division of the school fund, your inference seems to me most unjust.

The position of parties in Ohio on this school question seems to us to be very plain, and easily explainable. The Republican party in Ohio, as elsewhere, contains a large and powerful Orthodox element, which strongly favors the retention of the Protestant Bible, and its daily reading as a religious exercise, in the public schools. Many of this class would undoubtedly favor the proposed Christian amendment to the National Constitution. It was this powerful element in the party which defeated the nomination of Judge Taft for Governor, using his well-known opinions on the school question against him. It was a fear of losing Orthodox Republican votes, and not a fear of an increase of opposing Catholic votes, that induced the Republicans of Ohio to decline to take Judge Taft as their standard-bearer.

The school question was sprung upon the people by this unscrupulous class of politicians, and the Catholics, angered by the assault, very naturally strike back. Nor is it strange or unnatural that they should prefer to support a party which proposes to give them fair play by a strict secularization of the public schools, to one of which a powerful section favors forcing Protestant Bible-reading and Evangelical doctrine down their throats, whether they will or not. The attitude of the Catholics toward the two parties is thus easily explainable, without supposing that there is the slightest danger of Democratic assault upon the integrity of the school fund.

The Democratic leaders and voters are not fools, however mistaken they may be on most questions. Before they could grant the demands of the Catholic leaders in this matter, they would have to secure a repeal of Article 6, Section 2, of the Ohio State Constitution, which provides that "No religious or other sect or sects shall ever have any exclusive rights to, or control of, any part of the school fund of this State."

Whenever the school question comes legitimately before the people, in this form, there is no question as to the result. And you will find a large majority of the Democrats, and an intelligent minority of the Catholics themselves, working and voting against a division of the school fund, as they did in the recent election in New Jersey.

Says the New York Herald, owned and edited by a Catholic, in an editorial comment on the New Jersey election: "The most exciting feature of the contest was the struggle over the education question. The Catholic priests made great efforts to have the amendment relating to the public schools voted down, but they were not heartily supported even by their congregations. . . . Many prominent Catholics resented the interferences of the priests by voting, and urging others to vote, against them." And in Democratic New Jersey the priests were defeated by over 40,000 majority.

I am glad to see that you do not join in the partisan cry against the Gheghan law; yet it seems to me that you do not quite understand it. There is nothing in it which would conflict with the entire abolition of the chaplaincy system, as advocated by THE INDEX. It simply secures to the inmates of a public institution the right to the private administration of "the rites of his denomination," and expressly prohibits the enforcement of any religious observances; providing, at the same time, that religious ministrations shall "entail no expense on the public treasury." Abolish the public chaplaincy system altogether, and the Gheghan law, which is copied essentially by laws of Republican Massachusetts and Minnesota, would still be just, and perhaps necessary.

It may be well to provide against possible misapprehension, by remarking, in conclusion, that the writer was born and bred a radical Republican, and sympathized heartily with that party in its good work before and during the war.

But success breeds corruption, and new issues demand new combinations; and in the struggle for secularizing our political system, he is firmly impressed that quite as much is to be expected from honest and intelligent Democrats as from Republicans. There is less of the spirit of religious bigotry to-day in the Democratic than in the Republican party.

Let us deal justly by our friends, and then we may successfully meet our opponents.

LEWIS G. JANES.

NEW YORK, Sept. 27, 1875.

[We can make at present no other comments on the substance of the above article than to invite attention to an article, quoted on another page from the Cincinnati Commercial, which treats the same subject. But it is not fair to insist that we must necessarily indorse every paragraph we quote in our editorials, and we are surprised to find Mr. Janes deliberately reiterating his injustice, which we had supposed a mere matter of carelessness on his part. As to the particular paragraph in question, we inclined to think it true, but, not knowing it to be so, we quoted it on purpose to avoid indorsing it. If we had been willing to indorse the statement of fact it contained, we should have made that statement, and referred to no authority. It is not a "sentiment," but a statement of fact, that we object to being dragged into indorsing. We still believe that the Democratic party in Ohio has been dangerously colluding with the Catholic clergy; but we do not know it, and protest against being held to affirm it unqualifiedly. Notwithstanding the Constitutional obstacles pointed out by Mr. Janes, the passage we have italicized at the close of the Commercial's article shows how easy it will be to overcome them; and we are not so credulous as to consider a party's platform proclamations more trustworthy than its actual deeds, as indications of its future policy.—ED.]

NOTHING BUT WONDER.

EDITOR INDEX:—

The communication of "A. S. H." in THE INDEX of Sept. 9, on Mr. Voysey's answer to his letter was, excepting only his "thirdly," very entertaining. "A. S. H." has, unquestionably, a keen eye for logical consistency.

But his thirdly is a dead fly in the ointment. It is harder for a man to be otherwise than dogmatic than for a camel to go through the eye of a needle. "A. S. H." says: "The painstaking scientist finds behind these truths not mind, or God, but law, . . . and demonstrates the adequate supremacy of law. Law is without heart or brain, void of sympathy or feeling, and respects nothing but its own rule of action." The italicizing is mine. When will free-thinkers set the example to theologians of avoiding disputes arising from mere difference of names? If "A. S. H." finds behind every truth a something supremely adequate to its office, why should he lose sleep because Mr. Voysey prefers to name it God? And by what right does "A. S. H." assume to give us so minute a view of his "law," while he denies Mr. Voysey the liberty of even hinting at the "properties" of the being he finds behind the facts of Nature? Or whence the charm of his nomenclature that so magically gets rid of the problem involved? The "properties" which "A. S. H." claims to find in law are mostly, to be sure, of a negative character, and with what there is of a positive character scarcely recommends it as better than the Christian's God. "Law," he says, "is without heart or brain, void of sympathy or feeling, and respects nothing but its own rule of action." But what is law? It is here that "A. S. H." unconsciously dogmatizes. In calling the thing he sees "behind every truth" "law," he assumes to have found something actual to which he is justified in ascribing "properties"; but—those other three letters! They are an abomination because they raise a "problem."

No problem suggested in the conception of law enacted and executed by itself!

But these remarks apply here only on the hypothesis, accepted both by Mr. Voysey and "A. S. H.," that something is visible "behind every truth." The fatal defect in the position of both disputants is the assumption that anything is seen beyond Nature. We see nothing but the facts of Nature, included in which are what we term cause and effect. We infer or imagine many things besides. "A. S. H." thinks he sees "supremely adequate law," and, moreover, notes its lack of heart and brain, complacent that his discovery suggests no "problem"; while Mr. Voysey, with others, infers a supremely adequate being which he calls God, deeming this the only reasonable way in which to account for the existence of the universe.

I conclude that we, with the mental vision vouchsafed us, see nothing beyond the facts of Nature; neither law nor lawgiver. Law certainly is impossible without a lawgiver, the existence of which being admitted, our curiosity is simply transferred to seek its origin. The truth is, there is but one faculty of our being—that of wonder—which finds full and entire gratification in the contemplation of this subject, shrouded as it is in impenetrable mystery. Let us marvel and be content. Z.

A SCENE FROM LIFE.

The incident I am about to relate occurred at one of Vandenhoff's evening readings.

It was some little time, two or three years, possibly, after the war, when with still unhealed wounds we were endeavoring to settle down to our old pursuits, bravely doing our best to go on with life as it was left to us,—covering up by an every-day calmness of exterior the pain that would assert itself in our hearts for dead forms lying on lonely battle-fields. As will be well remembered, we needed no mimic representations then. "Life was real"; truth was stranger than fiction. Every morning we had awoke to tales of carnage and of battle. Through rivers of blood we had buried our dead. Heroic deeds had filled the air; heroically we had endured, silently we had suffered. The stage was crowded with actors; the audience extended over the broad earth. The battle-cry was liberty—liberty or death. We staked our lives, our broad lands and fields, our children and homes, our country, for justice and liberty for the slave.

The carnage had ended, Justice was triumphant. The white dove of peace fluttered over North and South. Two or three years had passed, erasing the blood-stains. Mimicry and poetry began again to have charms for us. Our æsthetic natures craved entertainment. Vandenhoff appeared before us of old, casting his spell of necromancy about us with true artistic power.

Entering the hall that evening might have been noticed an elderly gentleman of distinguished appearance, accompanied by his daughter, clothed in widow's weeds. This was the first time they had appeared in any scene like this since death's shadow had darkened her life. Though not knowing her intimately, I had always been attracted by her grace of manner. In all gatherings, in the dance, every movement of hers had charmed me. Then I heard of her marriage during the war to a Col. Reed, whom I did not know; but after-events proved him a brave and chivalric soldier. It was said that, wrought up to desperate deeds, he had individually challenged a rebel colonel, and that the two had fought till death ended the conflict. I had heard of the sad news being brought to her, she lying sick at the time, with her baby beside her. I had grieved for her, and was pleased, when I saw her enter, to know that she was able to take her part in life again.

Vandenhoff's selections were varied, and we listened with interest. The war was of too recent date to be passed over in silence, and presently he gave out the "Picket Guard," which he read with thrilling effect. Instinctively I looked toward father and daughter. At first they bore up bravely; then her head drooped. The father became absolutely convulsed, and shook like a leaf, burying his face in his hands. Every word of the reader, as I knew, pierced them through and through. Soon she composed herself, and, raising her head, laid her hand on her father's shoulder soothingly; but he sat with bowed head until the readings were ended. I looked on, absorbed in this scene; my heart was in my throat. The readings were also at an end for me. I have never met father or daughter since, but they have remained a living picture in my memory. Again and again this scene has come back to me. Again I see the slender figure, with new-born strength, gently lay her hand upon her father's arm in silent appeal. Could words be plainer? "Do you not see, father, that I can bear it?" All the time the voice of the reader was probing their wounds with words of fire. Ah, brave heart!

It was the story of a life in pantomime: the careless, happy child; the maiden wandering through paths of roses to a happy future, crowned by love; then the crushing blow which ended forever these dreams and hopes, and the brave assumption of life's responsibilities; the dignity of grief expressed in silent gesture; the strength to bear; the knowledge of the possibility of suffering which the sorrows of others cannot teach; the complete renunciation—and a transfigured world.

Such knowledge comes to us all, each generation following in the footsteps of its predecessor, varied only by circumstance and temperament.

Progress takes long strides in invention, in art, and science. The inventor reduces labor to a minimum; art adorns the world; science subdues the elements to its power. But who in all the ages has found a panacea for the great human cry of the children of earth? Philosophy cannot shield us; faith in the unseen is not enough; intellectual development but adds a subtle sting to pain; pleasure palls upon us. What then? Nature's forces come to our relief, and with invisible powers wrap us in calm submission.

Silent footsteps have preceded us; unseen hands beckon us. We have ascended to other plains. We are within hail of the great city of God. We hover on the outskirts, watching for knowledge that comes not. We question every passing breeze, the morning's breaking light, the noontide's splendor, the moon's refulgent rays, for knowledge that comes not.

With questioning glance we wait by the way-side. Death is no legend of a far-off future to us, but a shadow that walks by our side, and we wait with gaze turned expectantly toward the "Golden Gates."

MRS. M. C. WOODWARD.

TOLEDO, O., Oct. 1, 1875.

CONVERTED INFIDELS.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—If "infidelity" in Scotland means the same that it does in America—the "religion of reason,"—then the enclosed statement by Moody, cut from the Independent of Sept. 30, cannot be true:—

There is not a heart so hard that he cannot touch it. While we were gone, this time, an incident occurred that interested me very much. While in Edinburgh, a man was pointed out to me by a friend, who said: "Moody, that man is chairman of the Edinburgh Infidel Club." So I went and sat down beside him, and said: "Well, my friend, I am glad to see you at this meeting. Are you not concerned about your welfare?" He said he didn't believe in a hereafter. I said: "Will you just get down on your knees and let me pray for you?" "I don't believe in prayer," Well, I tried unsuccessfully to get the man down on his knees, and finally knelt down beside the infidel and prayed for him. Well, he made a good deal of sport over it; and I met him again many times in Edinburgh after that. Well, a year ago last month, while in the North of Scotland, I met the man again. Placing my hand on his shoulder, I asked: "Hasn't God answered the prayer?" He replied: "There is no God. I am just the same as I always have been. If you believe in a God and answers to prayer, do as I told you—try your hand on me." "Well," I said, "God's time will come. There are a great many praying for you, and I have faith to believe that you are going to be blessed." Six months ago I was in Liverpool, and there I got a letter from the leading barrister of Edinburgh, telling me that my friend, the infidel, had come to Christ, and that of his club of thirty men seventeen had followed his example. How it happened he could not say; but, whereas he was blind, now he could see. God had answered the prayer. I didn't know how it was to be answered; but I believed it would be, and it was done. Let us pray God to convert the sceptic. He can do it through his almighty power. His arm is not shortened that he cannot save. What we want to do is to come boldly to God.

The religion of reason has no Arminian doctrine of "falling from grace," and no Calvinistic doctrine of "backsliding" in it. I have yet to learn that a single one of its disciples ever departed from the faith—ever apostatized or grew weak-kneed in any circumstance whatever. I have yet to learn that an infidel (in the Orthodox Church sense of the word) ever showed the white feather, or ever exhibited any craven fear. The thing is utterly impossible in the very nature of the case; for the religion of reason has no such weak and vicious elements of turning and failure in it. I felt sure that Paine's death must have been serene and peaceful, when I had read only his Age of Reason; and if I knew that the chairman of the Edinburgh Infidel Club and his seventeen associates had Paine's religion, I should know that Moody's statement in regard to their embracing the Brazen Serpent religion he preaches is as false as the Orthodox Church lies that have been told about the noble Thomas Paine.

Yours truly,

REASON.

HARWICH, Mass.

NATURE is pitiless; she never withdraws her flowers, her music, her joyousness, and her sunlight from before human cruelty or suffering. She overwhelms man by the contrast between divine beauty and social hideousness.—Victor Hugo.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 "13 " 25 " 8 " "
 "26 " 51 " 6 " "
 "52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATION

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including
 O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interest. Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOOT (A. ERONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOLD (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Treasury.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Post-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove Heintz, Waver, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE. Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	2.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellaneous.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Universalists.....	1.25
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
William Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	4.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S Life. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoirs, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone's Boy.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
More Origin of Species.....	1.25
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	1.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Stories for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Day.....	1.25
Mosses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water. In Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection" and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relation. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Kestness of Mind in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions. By J. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	1.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philosophy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrine and Evidence.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trotty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Prison, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of James. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.75
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays in Moral, Political, and Aesthetic Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humourists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols. III. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldsworthy's Life.....	1.50
Waverley: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

$200 A MONTH to Agents everywhere. Address Excelsior Mfg Co., 151 Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL, for both sexes, MERIDEN, CONN. EMILY J. LEONARD, Principal.

MORSE'S PAINE. PHOTOGRAPHS

For sale at the office of THE INDEX.
Sent by mail on receipt of 50 cts.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

BISHOP FERRETTE'S FRENCH LESSONS, IN BOSTON OR CAMBRIDGE.

One Pupil, $40.00.
Two Pupils, $44.00: per Pupil, $22.00.
Three " 48.00: " " 16.00.
Four " 52.00: " " 13.00.
Five " 55.00: " " 11.00.
Six or more Pupils, $10 per Pupil.

Address: BISHOP FERRETTE, Cambridge, Mass.

THE AMERICAN EDITION OF MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE, Boston, Mass.

W. S. BELL'S LECTURES.

I am now ready to deliver any or all of the following lectures in any part of the country. Those wishing to communicate with me can address me at No. 55 Foster St., New Bedford, Mass. The following is a list of the subjects of my lectures:—

1. EVOLUTION (new lecture).
2. DARWINISM " "
3. LIFE AND WRITINGS OF SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE.
4. CHARLES LAMB.
5. THOMAS PAINE.
6. CHRISTIANITY OPPOSED TO CIVILIZATION.
7. RELIGION ANTAGONISTIC TO SCIENCE.
8. THE SAYINGS OF JESUS.
9. THE RESURRECTION OF JESUS.
10. THE DELUGE.
11. GEOLOGY.

LECTURES AND CONVERSATIONS.

FREDERIC A. HINCKLEY

Is prepared to lecture or conduct conversational meetings on the following subjects:—

- Essential Religion.
- Education and Educators in a Republic.
- The Ballot for Woman.
- Woman: Her Rights and Duties.
- Marriage.
- The Philosophy of the Labor Movement.
- The Relation of the Labor Movement to Intemperance, Prostitution, and Crime.

TERMS MODERATE.

Address Box 916, Boston Post-office.

MUSIC BOOKS FOR THE AUTUMN.

For Sabbath-schools, our beautiful Shining River. 35 cts. The newest, as it is one of the best, of Sunday-school Song Books.

For Singing-schools, the famous Song Monarch. 75 cts. Perfectly adapted to interest Singing Classes.

For Devotional Meetings (just published), Living Waters. 30 cts. Compiled by D. F. Hodges. A rich treasury of the sweetest hymns and tunes.

For Choruses, Conventions, and Choirs: The Leader. $1.38. Tunes, Anthems, Chants.

Chorus Choir. $2.00. Choruses and Anthems.

Perkins' Anthem Book. $1.50. Easy Anthems.

Trial by Jury. $1.00. Just published. A most mirth-provoking Operetta, with fine music.

Sent, post-paid, for retail price.

Liberal discounts to Societies and Conventions.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

CHARLES H. DITSON & CO.,

711 Broadway, New York.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247. Send for Circular.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Landaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN, WEST NEWTON, MASS.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY

335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW INDEX TRACT!

THE BATTLE OF SYRACUSE.

This is a discussion between Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and Francis E. Abbot, on the Definition, Nature, and Authority of the Christian Religion, and its alleged Hostility to Freedom. It contains an account of the famous Syracuse Conference in 1866, at which the Unitarian denomination collectively and finally planted itself on the Preamble affirming the Lordship of Jesus Christ, and rejected the Preamble affirming the Unlimited Right of Free Inquiry. Every Unitarian minister and every earnest Unitarian layman ought to read this discussion. Price TEN CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN

RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform.

THE "EXPLANATORY NOTE."

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, now not infrequently asked, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. It aims to discover and to establish truth in religious matters by the method of intelligent free inquiry. Lectures, Conventions, and Publications are its instrumentalities; and this volume is made up chiefly of Essays and Addresses that have appeared upon its platform. In addition to the foregoing more elaborate essays, it has been thought advisable to append some selections from the less formal discussions which occurred in the annual meetings of the Association, and have been preserved in its Reports. The following extracts, made entirely from these annual pamphlets, will show what a variety of representative voices have been heard in the Conventions of the Association, and indicate somewhat the range of topics which have been touched. It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly-subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

"Should any readers wish to know more of such an Association, the first of these selections may meet their desire.—W. J. P."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Ednah D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price $2.00.

Sent post-paid by

THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

LANDS FOR SALE, near WALTHAM, S.C. Small tracts and easy terms. Address W. J. DUFFIE, Owner, COLUMBIA, S.C.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A BOOK THAT SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF ALL PEOPLE.

New Edition of Josiah Warren's TRUE CIVILIZATION.

It treats "of a subject of vital and serious import to all persons; but most immediately to the men and women of labor and sorrow." Price fifty cents. Address

S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.

For sale by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX.

Bound volumes of THE INDEX for 1871, 1872, and 1873, will be sent by express (at the purchaser's expense) on receipt of $2.50, $2.50, and $3.00 respectively. These volumes are exceedingly valuable singly, irrespective of each other; for the important essays and other articles they contain are of permanent interest, and will furnish as instructive reading twenty years hence as to-day. No more valuable present could be made to a friend struggling out of Orthodoxy than one of these volumes.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX, Tremont Place, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1875.

WHOLE No. 304.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———.

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

"If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. Now, the centennial year of our national existence, I believe, is a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundations of the structure commenced by our patriotic forefathers one hundred years ago at Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar appropriated for their support shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian schools. Resolve that neither State or Nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmixed with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the Church, and the private school, supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the Church and the State forever separate."—PRESIDENT GRANT, at Des Moines, Sept. 29, 1875.

GLIMPSES.

CARDINAL MANNING proposes to build a "splendid cathedral" near Westminster Abbey, and wants a hundred years for its erection. He is too modest by half; we will cheerfully allow him a full thousand.

THE OHIO dairymen extinguished General "Sam" Cary after his plea for inflation by remarking: "We liked your speech very much; but we don't exactly make out from it how, if you add two gallons of water to a gallon of milk, it will make any more cheese."

THE FIRST Radical matinée of the season was held last Monday at the hospitable residence of Mrs. Sargent, who announced that the (first) "Radical Club" would be henceforth known as the "Chestnut Street Club." It was originally organized as the "Free Religious Club," just after the formation of the Free Religious Association in 1867. Mr. Henry James read a notably fine and vigorous paper on "Nature and Person," which was followed by remarks from Professor C. C. Everett, Dr. James Freeman Clarke, Professor Oliver Wendell Holmes, and others.

THE INSIDIOUS means adopted by the Catholics to get practical control of the public schools is strikingly illustrated by a device to which attention is called by the New York Observer. A law was passed at the very end of the last session of the New York Legislature which "provides to incorporate 'The Sisterhood of Gray Nuns,' and to authorize them to grant diplomas to any persons who shall graduate at any of its schools, which diplomas, placed on file with the department of public instruction, shall be a warrant to the one holding it to be a teacher, at the discretion of the superintendent, in the public schools of the State."

MR. CONWAY lectured in Boston last Thursday on "London" to a very large audience. The lecture was replete with interesting description, and had that peculiar literary charm which characterizes all his productions. His appearance shows the effects of many years absence in a foreign land; but the American spirit and tone were as strong as ever, and made it evident that a large-minded man becomes a cosmopolite rather than a cockney by dwelling in the great city of the world. Mr. Bradlaugh was on the platform, as were also many citizens well known in Boston. We advise our readers to miss no opportunity that may be offered to hear Mr. Conway.

THE OHIO election, which took place as THE INDEX went to press last week, seems to show that there is a large minority in that State which favors a public financial policy sure, if adopted, to bring inconceivable disaster on the whole country. The victory of the hard-money platform was too nearly a defeat to carry as much moral weight as could be wished. No doubt many honest and excellent people are on the side of inflation; but that fact does not prove that inflation itself means anything but national dishonesty and repudiation. The experience of the whole world cannot be refuted by any visionary theory. Gold and silver are the world's money, not in virtue of any arbitrary legislation, but of the laws of Nature; and the attempt to substitute paper is proof of melancholy ignorance or still more melancholy want of principle.

THOSE WHO suppose that Evangelical Protestants will generally acquiesce without difficulty in the secularization of the public schools should not overlook such facts as the emphatic protest of the Chicago Presbytery against the recent action of the Board of Education, which has forbidden Bible-reading and other religious exercises in the schools of that city. The chief danger to the school system is that the Protestants as a body will meet the Catholic attack by imitating this action of the Presbytery; and we see nothing that can avert it but the Liberal League movement in one shape or another. The resolutions of Dr. Arthur Mitchell, asserting the right of the government to recognize the Bible in the schools and deprecating its removal, were unanimously adopted by the Presbytery. Persistence in this policy would surely cause the destruction of the whole public school system.

REFERRING to the resolutions of the Chicago Presbytery in favor of keeping the Bible in the schools, the Independent excellently says: "In this action they 'deprecate all intention to interfere with the religious liberty of any fellow-citizens,' etc., etc. It is very kind in them to 'deprecate' interference with other people's equal religious rights; but we fear it will not be appreciated. Wheat flour makes excellent food; but there are people who prefer corn-dodgers, and to pry open their unwilling jaws and force down their throats the healthiest white loaf ever kneaded would be arrant oppression, however much deprecating the party might do. And yet bread is the staff of life. Let it be remembered that excellent citizens can grow up without reading the Bible in the public schools; also that it has been read in Chicago public schools purely as a religious exercise, against the protest of citizens who are compelled to support the schools, and who prefer dodger to bread. The oddest thing about the discussion, as reported, was the attitude of the Rev. C. L. Thompson, who was willing to respect the conscience of Catholics in this matter, but not of Atheists and Infidels. Perhaps he thinks they do not have any."

THE SUPREME COURT of the United States has decided that women are not entitled to suffrage under the Fourteenth Amendment. The chief points of the decision were thus summed up by Chief Justice Waite: "1. The word citizen is often used to convey the idea of membership in a nation. 2. In that sense, women, if born of citizen parents within the jurisdiction of the United States, have always been considered citizens of the United States, as much so before the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution as since. 3. The right of suffrage was not necessarily one of the privileges or immunities of citizenship before the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment, and that Amendment does not add to these privileges and immunities. It simply furnishes additional guaranty for the protection of such as the citizen already had. 4. At the time of the adoption of that Amendment suffrage was not co-extensive with the citizenship of the States; nor was it at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. 5. Neither the Constitution nor the Fourteenth Amendment made all citizens voters. 6. A provision in a State Constitution which confines the right of voting to male citizens of the United States is no violation of the Federal Constitution. In such a State women have no right to vote."

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. B. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERBURY, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carrie S. Burnham, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Züning, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

Construction and Destruction in Religion.

AN ESSAY READ AT THE EIGHTH ANNUAL MEETING
 OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION, BEE-
 THOVEN HALL, BOSTON, MAY 28, 1875.

BY FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

To build is greater than to tear down, to construct greater than to destroy. Yet there can be no construction without destruction, unless it is possible to create something out of nothing. Whether in Nature or in Art, every new form involves the disappearance of old forms; in fact, the only creation which is possible is the recombination of elements ancient as the universe itself. The total amount of matter in existence is unchangeable, capable neither of diminution nor of increase; and the same is true of the total amount of force. From old materials alone can anything new arise; and it is certain that dissolution of the forms under which these old materials existed must precede or accompany the production of the new forms. For example, no building can be erected without the destruction of the trees which furnish the wood-work, the destruction of the ledges whence the stones are quarried, the destruction of the ore and the excavation of the mines whence the iron is obtained, and so forth. Nature and man must build everywhere and always under the same law; namely, that integration and disintegration, construction and destruction, are as inseparable as inside and outside.

This law is specially obvious in the case of organic life. All the carnivorous races live by destroying feeble organisms; all the herbivorous races live by destroying vegetable organisms. All plants draw their nutriment in great measure from the products of other organisms which have been decomposed, that is, destroyed. The cotyledons of the pea or bean are a wonderful construction providing for the development of the new plant, which grows only by destroying them. And so on. The more life Nature creates, the more she demolishes: the two processes are inseparable. Life and death succeed each other like day and night.

The same law is equally regnant in the world of human society. Nation succeeds nation, not by killing off all its members, but by absorbing them in new political combinations, as Poland has been partitioned between Russia, Prussia, and Austria, or England, Scotland, and Ireland merged into Great Britain. Systems after systems of thought have grown up only to be successively destroyed or transformed. Institutions appear and disappear, yielding their sociological elements back to the common treasury of human experience only to be recombined and reconstructed in fresh forms. It is needless to illustrate in detail; I merely wish to show that religion would be an exception to a universal law, if it did not manifest itself in the same manner, and create its new historic forms at the expense of the forms which had preceded. If there is one word which epitomizes the whole course of Nature, in all its aspects, it is the word Metamorphosis; and if any one should suggest Evolution in its stead, I should only need to say that Evolution tells but half the truth until Dissolution is also named. These two great facts of endless Evolution and endless Dissolution are summed up in the greater fact—Metamorphosis. Unless we are prepared to defend the thesis that Evolution means absolute creation, we must be willing to admit that all which is evolved must previously have been dissolved. The grand sum of Being remains unaltered and unalterable: its history is nothing but ceaseless formal change in eternal substantial changelessness.

I claim, therefore, that the large and broad mind will recognize the duality of process which constitutes the history of religion, as of all things human; that he will never witness the destruction of an old system without looking for the construction of that which is even at the same moment succeeding it,—never witness the construction of a new system without studying the destruction of the one or many old ones whence it is deriving all its elements; and that he will perceive the indispensableness of laying equal emphasis on each term of the relation, if he would grasp and comprehend it. The key to all knowledge is comparison; and no one understands the new-born who takes no note of the dying or the dead. It is impossible to affirm without denying, or to deny without affirming; I think we have heard too much that affirmation is the only important thing—that negation is the part of barren and unproductive thought—that it is time to cease tearing down and begin to build. To such unreflective exhortation, the sagacious thinker must reply that he does not know what is affirmed till he knows also what is denied; that negation is just as essential as affirmation to the sphericity of thought; and that he who expects to build without tearing down should possess the attribute, denied to Omnipotence itself, of creating materials out of the non-existent. Let us not deceive ourselves with phrases. Affirmation and negation, construction and destruction, are impossible except in and through each other; and we should not yield to the empty and fatuous cry of the unthinking—"We have had enough of pulling to pieces: now let us begin to construct!" Yes, construct by all means; but do not imagine that you can escape the law which requires pulling to pieces in order to construct. All the elements of the new are in the old; if you are earnest to build the new, you must first get these elements out.

Essaying, then, to be genuine and enlightened constructionists in religion, how should we deal with the problem as it is presented to us by our own time?

Hitherto religion has been only local, historical, restricted, in its manifestations; it has been dependent on some man or class of men fulfilling the honest but self-assumed function of revealing truth supposed to be in their exclusive possession. Hence all its constructions have partaken of the same narrowness and limitation. But to-day religion is making a mighty effort to be universal, cosmopolitan, unlimited; like Enceladus under Ætna, the imprisoned giant is struggling for his liberty, and shakes with vast convulsions the mountain of institutional formalities that weighs him down. All historic religions have been special organisms; but universal religion must be an organic force pervading all human society, and creating, not special institutions of its own, but rather a higher and nobler condition of all institutions which are grounded on natural justice and truth. In this direction solely must the constructive thought and energy of the race henceforth work, in the field of religious evolution. The bonds of special creeds, and of the special institutions which incarnate them, are the obstacles which first of all must be overcome, before the spiritual forces of universal ethical advancement, of individual aspiration and development, can upbuild in society and in the soul the magnificent religious constructions of the future. It is not a secondary or subsidiary matter to abolish these iron restrictions which cramp and repress the vitality of the age: it is to-day the prime, the essential task of the constructive spirit to liberate the imprisoned genius of humanity, and leave it free to build under the blue skies of God the temple of a secularism freely religious in spirit and aim. Out of the old must be born the new; and he is the arch-foe of the future who would now endanger mother and child alike by seeking to suppress the inevitable throes of parturition. Huxley spoke like a true prophet of science, when he said: "History shows that the human mind, fed by constant accessions of knowledge, periodically grows too large for its theoretical coverings and bursts them asunder, to appear in new habiliments; as the feeding and growing grub at intervals casts its too narrow skin, and assumes another—itsself but temporary. Truly the imago-state of Man seems to be terribly distant; but every moult is a step gained, and of such there have been many."

The task of construction, therefore, proceeds pari passu with the destruction of the special characteristics of the various historical religions. But the new construction is so unlike the old that it is totally unrecognized, save by the few discerning minds given to our own, as to every, age. The story is somewhere told of a vast and splendid palace of ice, erected at great expense on the banks of the Neva by one of the sovereigns of Russia. It was illumined resplendently with chandeliers and candelabra, adorned with all the trappings of imperial luxury and magnificence, and made the scene of constant balls, fêtes, and festivities during the long northern winter. But the winter wore away; the returning sun shot down his rays on the crystal walls; the vast fabric melted slowly down in trickling rills; and the place that knew it for a brief season of revelry and splendor knew it no more forever. Surely it was the very wantonness of destruction that the warm sunbeams should come only to demolish such glorious architecture of human genius and power! Yet all the while, silently and unperceived, the "destroying" sunshine was busily at work, loosening the frozen soil, waking the earth from its sterile slumber, clothing the mighty plains of the North with tender flowers and grass, arraying the bare, brown trunks of the forests with raiment of green leaves, ripening the fruits and maturing the harvests that should feed the nations of the earth,—destroying the puny work of human artifice and pride, but constructing the infinite glories of the new and living year! To complain of such destructiveness as this, to lament the disappearance of the ice-palace and take no heed of all the beauty that came with the iconoclastic summer's sun, would be no more irrational than to bewail the decay of icy theologies and take no heed of the tender humanities that come with the sunlight of knowledge, and silently clothe the world with the green promises of spring and summer. Because the artificial constructions of the historical faiths so little resemble the natural constructions of universal religion, the air is filled with lamentations, with reproaches, with protestations against the ruthlessness and iconoclasm of the reformers. "The ice-palace of Christianity is a house, with a roof, windows, and doors; it is a great and imposing construction; and we understand it. But your destroying science that is melting it down constructs nothing but—grass!" Nothing but grass? The life of the world is at stake in the coming of the grass and the grain; and they cannot come without bringing the destruction of your idolized ice-prisons. Let the "destroying" sunshine of knowledge and of truth thaw out the frozen world; I care not what it melts. It cannot destroy your wretched ice-blocks without building a new world of organized life and beauty in their stead.

Look with me at the constructions which Christianity (to take the religion best known to us as a type of all historical religions) has created in the world. I find them to be three: the Christian Theology, the Christian Church, the Christian Character.

1. It would be tedious to describe the well-known features of the Christian theology: you know them well. That the first man was created pure and holy, but was tempted to his fall by his wife and the Spirit of Evil; that all mankind were involved in his sin and have lain ever since under the wrath of God; that the only escape for him from eternal perdition was for God himself to become incarnate in Jesus Christ, whose life and death are accepted as atonement for all the sins of those who accept the terms of salvation,—all this has been built up by master-minds into a vast body of doctrine which, however irrational in its premises and immoral in its conclusions, can be despised by no one who is competent to appreciate the genius and intellectual force necessary to create such a stupendous system. Orthodoxy, unlike some forms of sentimental radicalism, has never been ashamed of the "intellect," although it has, to be sure, insisted on harnessing the intellect to its own chariot. While it has never relaxed its hold of the reins, it knows too well that it cannot dispense with the understanding—that it is suicide for religion to rely exclusively or even chiefly on a "sentiment," a "sense of mystery," or an "intuition." It has always denounced what it calls "carnal reason," by which it means reason that will not accept the fundamental claims of Revelation or the system of faith built laboriously upon them. But reason "sanctified" by "faith" has been the great architect of Orthodoxy; and such names as Augustine, Athanasius, Thomas Aquinas, Calvin, and their peers, prove how completely Orthodoxy has depended upon the logical intellect for its influence and power. The doctrinal or purely intellectual framework of Christianity is the greatest of all its constructions, since it is the condition of all the others; and to suppose that Christianity can long exist even as a barren and empty name, if its system of doctrines goes to pieces, is to be totally blind to all the teachings of the history of human thought. For one, I entertain profound admiration for this vast and venerable system, regarded solely as a creation of the human brain; it is a masterpiece of constructive genius in the intellectual world, worthy of comparison with the chief systems of philosophy in all that constitutes greatness of mental architecture. Its fatal defect is that it is not true—not conformed to the facts of the universe as known to-day to all well-instructed persons. It contains truth, no doubt, and a great deal of it; but the increase of knowledge brings to light many truths irreconcilable with it, and still more truths not included by it, and therefore it is a construction that cannot much longer endure.

2. The second great construction of Christianity is the Christian Church. Under this term I include all institutions based directly upon the Christian Theology, in whole or in part; and perhaps all the countless allied institutions of an eleemosynary, charitable, educational, or propagandist character should also be included under it. These various institutions have never really been so organically connected as to fulfil the ideal of Christian unity; schisms and separations have long since rent the "seamless robe of Christ," and there is no tailor, human or divine, skilful enough to unite the fragments. Yet, considered together, they form a clustered whole which shows the Christian theology in active operation as a vast social force, tending to create a definite type of human society. Of all the multifarious organizations thus grouped together under the common name of Christian, no large and philosophic mind will question, in view of all the facts, that the Roman Catholic Church comes the nearest to a complete historical embodiment of the Christian theology. It is an attempt to organize the entire race, socially and politically no less than morally and religiously, in accordance with a plan strictly deducible from the earliest Christian teachings, but adapted as far as possible to the varying conditions of different ages and climes. I believe that the world has never yet seen another organization so perfect, so marvellously suited to accomplish its objects. So long as the Christian theology can retain its hold on the human mind unweakened, so long, I believe, will the Roman Catholic Church survive and flourish; and whoever wishes to read a most masterly account of the services which this Church has rendered to mankind in the past should read the ninth chapter of the sixth book of Comte's Positive Philosophy. That its usefulness diminishes in the direct ratio that mankind outgrow the Christian theology, and that the pertinacious continuance of the organization after the expiration of its usefulness is a great and formidable threat against the dearest liberties of the world, are certainly facts; but these facts should not blind us to the other fact that human genius applied to the organization of society has not yet been able to equal the Roman Catholic Church in the universality, the flexibility, the adaptation to all sorts and conditions of men, or the astonishing strength of influence, which have characterized from the beginning this great social construction of Christianity. Magnificent in artistic proportions as its own cathedrals, the Catholic Church must command the wonder and admiration even of those who see in it the pitiless foe of all modern progress and civilization; and the new faith of the world will be great indeed, if it shall excel this dying Christian religion in the architectural grandeur and beauty of its social creation.

3. The third great construction of Christianity is the Christian Character; that is, the type of individuality developed in the believer by the combined influences of the Christian Theology and the Christian Church. Here we see Christianity in active operation as an internal moral and religious force, not only moulding intellectual belief by its Creed and determining external relations in a great social environment by its Church, but also creating peculiar motives, affections, purposes, actions, in the individual heart and life. Through the mighty influence of education, which the Church has always monopolized until very recent times, and which it jealously guards as the chief fountain-head of its own power over the world, a peculiar quality is stamped ineffaceably upon the young character which marks it as Christian in a vast majority of cases. Of course this distinguishing peculiarity is greater or less in proportion to the native power, volume, and originality of individual mind; but it is rarely absent wholly in one reared under distinctively Christian influence.

In the eminent saints of Christian history, similarity of type is obtrusively evident; and in scourger saints, genuinely and nobly such, of every local church can boast one or more, the type is unmistakable. It consists essentially it may be termed the submissive virtues: faith, hope, humility, self-abasement, resignation, forgiveness, gentleness, meekness,—in short, love. It is the predominance of the emotional and devotional over the intellectual qualities; a fervor robustness of independent conscience, a perfection of individual will, or unbending integrity of personal intelligence appear, it is in spite of, consequence of, the influences which are characteristic of Christianity. This Christian Character, inly, in the view of one discerning enough to see both its excellences and defects, a moral creation of surpassing beauty in many aspects; the charm of feminine grace and loveliness, is its chief response in the heart of woman; strong men are to-day increasingly disinclined to their own characters by it, but admire it in rather than in themselves, that is simply that Christianity is not a religion that can co-exist with the spirit of full-grown and virile man. Its own ideal, held up by its founder, is "childlike"; and human nature in its maturity, in men or women, finds it impossible to live. Yet it can be admired as a beautiful construction of Christianity, when exemplified in those to whom it is natural and alluring; though I must confess the typical Christian appears to me always, young and morally considered, as a child that matures, but stops at half-growth.

Then, are the three great constructions of Christianity—its Theology, its Church, its Character, all admirable in their way; yet they are all to be destroyed, not chiefly by the efforts of iconoclasts, but by the natural development of man. The universal religion that is taking the place of the Christian and every other special religion, eating constructions appropriate to its own and maturer nature, and cannot without abuse be required to imitate what it is inevitably and actively destroying. The unlikeness between the old constructions is so profound, that the world of to-day, looking for a reason of the old, are stone-blind to the growth which is under their very eyes. Even some highly intelligent radicals, who very properly believe that they ought to be busy with construction and affirm that for this in the establishment of a new world a new demonstration of God or immortality is a special doctrine; and because for some unexplained reason nobody shows a consuming zeal for the churches in this way, they are disheartened or disaffected. I would fain briefly sketch the actual constructions, so much more admirable than any imaginable creed, which are taking this very time, under our very eyes, unperceived by most of us, yet very noticeable as substitutes for the perishing constructions of an old religion.

First and greatest of these constructions, the root of all others, is the vast body of knowledge, the marvellous accumulation of truths respecting the facts, nature, and laws of the universe, which is represented by the sciences. It is growing with inconceivable rapidity in all directions, climbing up the problems of astronomy, physics, chemistry, the still higher problems of sociology, psychology, religion in every sense of the word.

Nothing can long escape from examination by it, or from complete submission to its one, universal method. The creation of the modern sciences, at first emerging from the thick darkness of ignorance in such isolation that their close mutual connection and interdependence escaped observation, is the commencement of the erection of an immense edifice of real knowledge, which is to hold henceforth the proud position of the hitherto half-fabulous TEMPLE OF TRUTH. Nor this alone. I attribute the construction of this magnificent though unfinished fabric, which is the work neither of a supposed revelator nor of any self-appointed intellectual leader, to the birth and growth in the universal human mind of a new passion for knowledge, a new and mighty love of natural truth; and this love of truth as it is in Nature, not in Jesus, out of which springs all earnest search for it, is the fundamental principle, the central inspiration, of the universal religion which is fast swallowing up Christianity with all its congeners. Science, then, is the first great construction of universal religion; and it is so unlike the structure of Christian Theology in all respects that perhaps I ought not to compare it to a temple, or to anything else which can be at last finished or completed. On the contrary, it is a vast growing tree, to whose life no imaginable limit can be assigned,—a veritable TREE OF KNOWLEDGE with leaves for the healing of all nations, which was prophesied in the ancient dream of the Garden of Eden, and is found at last.

2. The second great construction of universal religion, although as yet its corner-stone is scarcely laid, is the Commonwealth of Man, the vast "federation of the world" of which England's Poet Laureate sang years ago, the glorious Republic of the Human Race which shall be founded on universal liberty, on equal rights, on justice, on a brotherhood which shall abolish forever the barriers of race and creed. This is the mighty social structure which the spirit of science, the spirit of free intelligence and earnest devotion to truth, must inevitably create in the coming years. Long and bitter struggles must first come between this free spirit and the fortified institutions of antiquity, bristling with cannon, stuffed with gold, swarming with men, which will never surrender without a desperate battle for the empire they still wield to-day. But the victory is not doubtful in the end; nay, its promise is already here. The great Republic which it thrills every true American heart to call Our Country is the beginning, the actual historical beginning, of this universal Commonwealth of Man. It is our CHURCH; let us scorn to have another! Its organic principles of universal individual liberty, of universal equal rights, of universal justice between man and man,—in a word, Liberty in Union and Union in Liberty,—are the identical principles on which shall be built up the Commonwealth of Man, the identical principles which this platform affirms and consecrates as Free Religion. Yes, this little Association holds up the standard of Liberty and Union—Perfect Freedom and Perfect Fellowship; and not only to America, but to the world, the voice of Destiny declares to-day: "By this sign shalt thou conquer!"

3. Lastly, the third great construction of universal religion, going on all the while that public spectators are clamoring, "Construct! Construct!" is a higher type of individual human character, the free development of Natural Manhood and Natural Womanhood. Here we see universal religion operating as an active force in the recesses of the human heart, and touching the secret springs of human conduct. When the child is educated in accordance with its fundamental principles, he will be trained to defend against all assaults or seductions the absolute supremacy in his own soul of natural Reason and natural Conscience. So long as this supremacy is preserved, there is no danger of vice, of wrongdoing, of superstition, of anything that debases self or injures another. This is the religion that alone shields private life or public welfare from terrible disasters. The intellectual and moral faculties must be supreme over all others—over wayward wills, impulsive desires, gushing affections. The virtues that grow out of this sustained supremacy are moral strength, integrity, pride of character, dignity of sentiment and act, self-respect, independence, incorruptibility, courage, justice, truthfulness; in short, the non-submissive virtues. The ideal held up by universal religion is manhood and womanhood, not childhood; and it forms a type of character unmistakable in all the differences of individuals, inasmuch as it illustrates everywhere and always the sacredness of natural individuality. It is a great and magnificent construction, which must become more and more admirable in the eyes of the world in proportion as the world escapes from the blinding influence of false ideals.

Thus I have briefly, and of course inadequately, sketched the actual constructions created by Christianity and by universal religion. But my task would be left undone, if I failed to point out explicitly that each kind of construction acts against the other as a destructive force. The Christian Theology and modern Science are struggling together in a conscious warfare that can terminate only by the death of one of the combatants. The Christian Church and the Republic are locked in a deadly contest, though neither of them as yet more than dimly apprehends the fact. The Christian Character and the Moral Ideal of free individuality are equally battling for existence against the other, though the battle is in the air, unperceived by the unreflective. I do not think the issue dubious. Yet this I say: that the final victory of the magnificent constructions of the future over the provisional and now obstructive constructions of the past is delayed by every one who perpetuates confusion as to the real issue,—who helps to disguise, however honestly, the vast warfare waging, not only in the world of ideas, but equally in the world of institutions, between Christianity and Free Religion,—or who, discerning the real issue, forbears to bring his active aid, be it never so small in amount, to the side of the latter. Science cannot fulfil its destiny until it has buried the Christian Theology; the Republic cannot triumph over all its foes until the Christian Church shall be disabled by death from sapping its fundamental principles; the individual man and woman cannot achieve the fullness of natural development until they are educated in an atmosphere purified from the paralyzing influence of the artificial Christian character. The conflict is here, to be seen by all who have eyes to see it: he has not made it who simply points it out. Men might silence the disagreeable announcement, but they could not change the disagreeable fact. No man can labor for the spread of science, for the extension of republican ideas, or for the cultivation of free individuality, without adding his mite to the vast sum of those influences which are gradually destroying the Christian Theology, Church, and type of character. It is an immense mistake to suppose that one can labor for universal religion without thereby doing the work of the avowed anti-Christian, though in unconsciousness or concealment of the fact. This is the unpalatable truth which it has fallen to my lot to tell; and I cannot but believe that humanity will be the gainer when this truth is not only told, but heard, respected, and put into appropriate action. The task of construction itself has its destructive side, and cannot be successfully performed till mankind, coming to full consciousness of the fact, take up the duties of the age in a spirit worthy of them.

When the snows were melting on the mountains at the close of last winter, the ice that had piled up in some of our narrow river-valleys under the influence of the severe and protracted cold formed immense and dangerous gorges, which threatened terrible disasters by damming up the floods. Day by day the waters rose behind them; and at last, impelled by the exigencies of the hour, men began to blast away portions of these enormous gorges, that they might break up before the mass of water had become such as to ensure the destruction of their villages and towns. Their efforts were partially successful, though they would have been more so, if earlier commenced and if made on a larger scale. The case is not unlike that of Christianity. An immense institution, wealthy and powerful, stands in the way of forces which are accumulating in dangerous strength behind it. Sooner or later it must give way, break up, float down the stream, and leave the river of human progress untrammelled by its obstructive presence. Far-seeing men would fain avert the evils of the future by blasting away betimes, through the activities of Liberal Leagues, the political connections of this great ice-gorge of Christianity with the republican State. Their work is seemingly destructive and iconoclastic, yet really constructive, conservative, and benevolent. It would seem to be the especial duty of brave and intelligent radicals to aid in this purely protective work, and help, to the full extent of their power, the peaceful and timely removal of an obstruction which, if unremoved by these means, must inevitably bring catastrophe and disaster in the end. Is it too much to hope that radicalism will yet prove itself, by its own foresight and courage and public spirit, worthy of the occasion, and aid efficiently in the labor of carrying forward the construction of a Republic which is the true Church of universal religion?

THE MODERN CEMETERY.

AN ADDRESS AT THE DEDICATION OF THE NEW CEMETERY AT BROOKLINE, MASS., OCT. 5.

BY PROFESSOR F. H. HEDGE.

We are met to consecrate in these retreats a new place of interment. The necessities of a rapidly increasing population have outgrown the sepulchral accommodations of this and the neighboring towns, and demand a new garner for the harvest of death. I congratulate you, citizens of Brookline, on the fitness and beauty of the site you have chosen for this purpose. These green slopes, these sylvan shades, these rural surroundings, offer that seclusion, that harmony of earth and sky, that peace of Nature, which most of us crave for our final resting-place and that of our friends.

And here the question arises: Why do we desire for the dead those local advantages of which they are insensible? Why bestow such care and cost on the resting-place of those to whom all places are alike? What matters it where this corruptible shall undergo the process of corruption? What to the mouldering bones are verdure, and flowers, and the beauties of landscape, and the song of birds? Why not dispose of them in the simplest fashion which private convenience or public economy may dictate? To this question, put by the understanding, the answer is given in the ineradicable instincts of the heart. It is true the dead know not of their resting-place. In vain for them the breath of the violet, or the murmur of the pine. Alike to them the ocean floor, the thick-ribbed ice of the pole, the Alpine crevasse, the blood-stained sods of the battle-field, or the turf of consecrated ground. None the less have civilized nations in all ages recognized a sacred obligation in the care of the dead, and accepted the duty of giving fit interment to the clay which was once the abode of a rational soul. Even in those nations and times in which the dead were committed to the flames instead of the ground, the cremation was attended with appropriate rites and demonstrations of respect; the ashes of the burned were carefully gathered and piously preserved, were incensed in portable coffins and deposited in tombs, and these were held as sacred as the graves of bodies subjected to a slower consumption. The oldest civilization of which the record survives confronts us on the threshold of history with amazing tokens of the care devoted to the dead; it shows us sepulchral mountains of stone designed to preserve forever the bodies intrusted to their keeping. With different views, but with equal piety, the Hebrew patriarchs guarded and cherished the burial-places of their departed. "Bury me with my fathers," said the dying Jacob to his sons. "Bury me with my fathers in the cave that is in the field of Ephron the Hittite. There they buried Abraham and Sarah his wife, and there they buried Isaac and Rebekah his wife, and there I buried Leah." One seems to hear in these words the universal wish of the human heart to be gathered to one's kindred. Who does not desire that his mortal remains may rest side by side with those of his beloved; that in death, as in life, he may not be divided from his own? "I desire," said the great Napoleon, when confronted with death in his prison-island, "that my ashes may repose on the banks of the Seine, in the midst of that French people whom I so loved." The dead know not of their resting-place; but will you therefore plead that it matters not where they are laid? I can understand that one shall reason in this way concerning the disposition of his own remains; but no one, I think, who possesses an ordinary share of natural sensibility or humane feeling can regard with indifference the treatment after death of the body of a dear friend. The earthly form which has once enshrined a living soul, especially if that soul be one that was knit to ours in bonds of love, can never be to us like common clay.

It is not, however, for the honoring of the perished form alone; it is not for the comfort of their bones that we give our kindred solemn interment, and lay them in fit and consecrated places. What we really mean by so doing, what the burial custom, so ancient and beautiful, expresses, is this: that the dead whom we call the "departed" are not all departed, but in a sense are with us still. The form vanishes; the dust returns to the dust whence it was; the spirit returns to God who gave it; the soul passes to its proper sphere; but something stays. Something is left to surviving friends, invisible, impalpable, but how real! A veritable presence and power in the world! This is the true Manes of which the ancients thought so much. I call it the Idea, the mental image bequeathed by the dying to those who survive. For that idea's sake it is, and not for sake of the equiva, the cast-off garments of flesh, and not for the soul's sake which has gone we know not whither, that we bury the dead in select and consecrated places.

And what kind of place shall we select for that purpose? What ground is fittest to receive the ruined form, which even in its ruins is sacred through the binding force of that idea with which it is associated in our affections? Shall it be a solitary place in a private freehold, remote from all others? There are cases, I suppose, in which such a disposition of the dead is expedient, and there are cases in which it is necessary. But in a populous community it is obviously impossible that each individual, or even each family, should have their own peculiar burying-ground within the precincts of their own estate. Not every family can have an estate of their own, and inevitably, in the course of time, estates change hands; and then the inhumed must either be disturbed in their repose, or their resting-place become the property of unsympathizing strangers. Necessity requires that we bury our dead, not in private grounds, but in a garden of graves which is common to many. And if necessity did not require it, there is still a fitness in such community independent of all economic or prudential considerations. We are members one of another. No man liveth to himself alone, and no man dieth to himself. We live in communities, bound together by various ties of fellowship and mutual dependence. We are not divided in life; it is meet that we should not be divided in death; that the common resting-place should repeat the community of the neighborhood and town.

But though, for the reasons I have named, we may not seek for our dead the insulation of a solitary grave, we would give them seclusion from the public thoroughfare, from the press and throngs of active life, from the noise and turmoil of the mart and the street. The place of graves should have rural surroundings. In the bosom of Nature, away from "the busy haunts of men," from traffic, and revelry, and strife, in a green silence relieved but not disturbed by the sigh of the wind, by the song of birds, or by murmuring waters, we would bury our dead.

Such are those recent cemeteries which a wise piety has provided in the environs of populous cities. There amid flowery banks, by shaded alleys, lie the dwellings of the dead, in beautiful keeping with the stillness of the scene; and life and death mingle so peacefully that there seems to be only a sigh between those who tread the sequestered walks, and those who sleep beneath the shining marbles or the verdant sods. There Nature blends her shadows with human grief, and sadness is wedded to beauty, and the nodding flowers and the solemn trees seem to invite you to lay down the burden of life at their feet; and the thoughtful wanderer already dies in imagination while contemplating so sweet a rest. While meditating there I have felt the nearness without the harms of death, and have praised the wisdom which could tempt the living to seek the society of the dead, and to invite the healthy and the happy to the retirements of the grave and the thoughts of mortality.

A graveyard in a city is a ghastly object,—an island of death in the midst of a rushing, roaring sea of life. Its unsympathizing silence rebukes, without checking, the impatient driving and striving of which that silence is the goal. Its lessons of mortality are lost on the passer-by, whom the constant spectacle of the rusty head-stones that border his daily walk has made heedless and callous. It mocks the fever it cannot allay. But a few feet divide the living from the dead; yet into those city cemeteries goes no one to meditate. The poet Gray would never have composed there the immortal "elegy" which, known to all languages, finds universal response, and, more than any other poem of equal length, with the tenderest music of humanity has smote the heart of the world.

Outside of the city, beyond the reach of its roar, into the open country, we will carry our dead. We will give them quiet,

"The silence that is in the starry sky,
The sleep that is among the lonely hills."

We will give them beauty, the spontaneous beauty of Nature, or such as Nature yields to the solicitations of art, the punctual bloom of spring, the wealth of summer's verdure, the warning splendors of autumn. The sentiment which craves such beauty for the place of graves is of recent date. In former time the only question concerning the disposition of the dead—of the common dead—was one of convenience. They mouldered in crypts and catacombs, or were huddled together in rectangular enclosures by the wayside; fields which, except as the stone-cutter's art might elaborate single monuments, no pains were taken to render attractive.

Such beauty indeed as art can bestow on single monuments has never been wanting to the dead whose fame or virtues were thought to demand, or whose vanity coveted, or the grief of whose survivors accorded, such distinction. We have read how the Carian queen immortalized her grief in stone, and originated the name by which sepulchral glories such as builder and sculptor dispense have ever since been distinguished. We have read how the Pharisees of Jesus' day builded the tombs of the prophets, and garnished the sepulchres of the righteous. How Christian art has garnished the sepulchres of royalty may be seen in Westminster Abbey, in the Hotel des Invalides, in the crypt of the Capuchin chapel at Vienna, on the Hartschin of Prague, and in all the capitals of Europe. "Man," says Sir Thomas Browne, "is a noble animal, splendid in his ashes, and pompous in the grave, solemnizing natiivities and deaths with equal lustre, nor omitting the ceremonies of bravery in the infancy of his nature." I am not speaking of monuments and the splendors of plastic art, but of the beauties of Nature and of burial-places allotted to the common dead, when I say that the demand for beauty in this direction is a recent sentiment. Once indeed "there was a garden, and in the garden a new sepulchre," the most memorable named in the annals of mankind. But that was a single private tomb. Plato recommended that the most barren and worthless ground should be set apart for sepulchral uses, and his advice appears to have been largely adopted in subsequent time. The garden which Louis XIV. gave to the Jesuit La Chaise was early in this century converted into a cemetery. In the management of that cemetery care has been taken that every trace of the garden should disappear. Green alleys have been replaced by paved walks, and wreaths of stiff immortelles must serve as a substitute for living flowers.

Our country, so far as I know, has taken the lead in the institution of burial-grounds like the one we here consecrate, establishing the principle, now generally accepted, that cemeteries are to serve for the living as well as the dead; that while they receive the sacred deposit of mortality, and hide the perished forms of our beloved, they shall also by their stillness and their beauty attract surviving friends to muse in their shades, and persuade communion with the unseen of our affections and our hopes. Forty years and more have elapsed since a tract of ground in the town of Cambridge, long prized for its wild, romantic beauty, its verdant heights, its piny dells and secret nooks, the "Sweet Auburn" of my childhood, where we held our May festivals, and gathered the earliest wild-flowers, was purchased by a corporate company, and turned into a burying-ground. The example was followed far and wide. New York had its "Greenwood," Philadelphia its "Laurel Hill," and now there is scarcely a town of any note but has its rural cemetery, conceived in the same spirit, and answering to the same want.

In this spirit, and to meet this want, you, citizens of Brookline, have selected and secured these pleasant grounds, and now formally present them as a place of interment, to be reserved and kept sacred as such, so far as the present may determine the future, through all generations. You have chosen well; and the rules your trustees have adopted for the management of this trust encourage the hope that wise judgment and good taste will distinguish this spot, and that "Walnut Hills," avoiding the errors of its neighbors and predecessors, will be a model in its kind. I especially rejoice in the first of the "rules concerning lots"; viz., that "no lot shall be enclosed by wall, fence, coping, hedge, or any boundary whatever, but the limits of each lot shall be marked at each corner by granite posts, and that these shall be sunk in the ground so that the tops shall be below the surface." This is as it should be. No visible, at least no conspicuous, bounds should proclaim private rights in a place of common rest, and mar the unity of the whole. It is painful to see in Mount Auburn, of late, those obtrusive granite copings which not only offend the eye with their importunate glare, but violate a fundamental idea of such institutions—the idea of community,—and instead thereof present ideas of property, of separation, of exclusion.

In this connection, with no right to advise, I cannot forbear expressing the hope that another offence, conspicuous elsewhere, may here be avoided. I mean the frequent obelisk, a species of monument appropriate only to the commemoration of exceptional greatness and wide renown; of those who in their lifetime towered above their fellows, and whom it may therefore be well with such towering structures to distinguish in death. A granite shaft of Egyptian dimensions piercing the sky, such as I have seen surmounting the grave of some obscure individual whom neither his virtues nor his deeds entitled to such distinction, whose name perished with him when he dropped out of sight—a monument which illustrates nothing but the vanity buried beneath it, or the bad taste of friends,—is not only ridiculous, considered in relation to its object, but dishonors with its impudent pretensions the cemetery in which it stands. From such dishonors, from monuments of vanity and works of pride, from all that may shock a refined taste, or insult the feelings proper to the place, may this field remain forever free.

And so we devote these virgin acres to the solemn associations of death,—to sepulchral rites, to everlasting farewells, to sacred memories and immortal hopes. These sods we devote to the rest which follows "life's fitful fever," these walks to the converse of friends whom buried treasures or the charm of the spot may draw hither to wander and muse. Be this a sanctuary where the din of traffic and the greed and passion of the world may not reach; a hallowed section of that larger cemetery in which countless generations are inhumed, and out of whose dust in endless procession the new generations spring. Here Nature shall resume the being which she gave. Here the mother shall resign the darling of her hopes, and the husband and the wife the companion of their youth. Here the strong and the weak, the high and the low, the rich and the poor, shall lie down together. Those whom life had widely sundered shall meet and "blend in common dust." Summer shall deck them with one coverlet; winter shall wrap them in one winding sheet; sun and moon, with impartial lustre, shall smile on their sleep. Here friends shall part, and those who together had shared the burden and the joy of earthly years shall separate, the one to his task, the other to his rest. And here may mourners learn that though our friendships are the accidents of a day, the love which they educate has no term; that age after age shall unfold in it the power and likeness of that Divine love whose breath first kindled this spark in the breast.—Advertiser.

IS THERE TO BE A WAR?

BY THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON.

I can remember when it was the custom to deride Emerson as a man who habitually talked nonsense; and if any one defended him, the sentence most likely to be quoted as proof of his folly was the remark, "Let no one quit his belief that a pop-gun is a pop-gun, though the most ancient and honorable of the earth should affirm it to be the crack of doom." But this sentence always seemed to me a very sensible one, and I have now tested it for a good many years, and find it eminently reassuring and consoling.

The prediction is constantly made that we are on the verge of "a religious conflict, which threatens the very existence of the Republic"; that it is already doubtful whether we have any "defence against the establishment of a despotic empire in our very midst,—an empire under the control of a despotic and determined few, whose declared purpose is to supplant our free institutions with a tyranny more harsh and unsparing than any ever yet seen upon the planet." And those who do not share this conviction are denounced as indifferent, timid, or blind.

For one, I do not sympathize with this foreboding. No doubt, any organization that becomes very large and powerful brings with it dangers, and will bear watching, whether it be the Roman Catholic Church or the Methodist, the Pacific Railway or the Masonic order. But I do not see how any one who lived through the anti-Masonic or the Know-Nothing excitement can help admitting that the power of any such association in the United States is, after all, very limited, and is liable at any moment, through any excess, to rouse the overwhelming force of public sentiment against it. Certainly I can recall several periods when the danger of Roman Catholic usurpation, or of a collision between Roman Catholics and Protestants seemed far more imminent than now. I remember when the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court was a Roman Catholic,—Judge Taney holding that high office more than a quarter of a century; yet no harm came. I remember when the wave of Irish immigration seemed likely to deluge the whole land; but it did no real harm, and now its progress is checked—as the inexorable census shows,—and nobody but Gen. Butler seriously supposes that it is going any further. I remember when, in Brownson's time, there was another great wave of conversions among educated New England Protestants. That also passed by. Some of the converts after a time came quietly back, as I can testify from my own knowledge; and we now hear of but few such conversions. I can remember when these things produced such a popular excitement, that organized processions of "Native Americans" used to parade through the Irish quarters of Boston and New York, with cries and banners so insulting that one wondered how the hot Celtic blood could restrain itself from outbreak. During those years it seemed reasonable to talk of the possibility of a religious war; but among the softened religious antagonisms of this time the alarm seems to me only one of Emerson's pop-guns.

It has been repeatedly shown by statistics, and recognized by the admission of Roman Catholic priests themselves, that this Church has actually lost, numerically, by the vast transplantation of its votaries to these shores; since their total number, even as reckoned, by the Church, is not so large as the emigrant population, with its natural increase, would furnish. The few conversions made to that Church are carefully heralded; but the number of those who slip silently away from it and are lost in the mass of Protestant population no one proclaims. This nation is thoroughly and permanently non-Roman Catholic. Every intelligent priest knows this in his heart, and knows that, whatever boasts he or his newspaper organs may make, they must not go very far in their claims lest the ghost of "Native Americanism" or "Know-Nothingism" be raised again. New Jersey is not counted the most enlightened State in the American Union; yet the mere effort of two or three priests of that State to urge their parishioners to vote a certain way in the late election sent a sweeping majority over to the side these priests wished to defeat. There is not a Northern or Western State where the same result would not have followed. The Roman Catholic Church everywhere knows that it is watched; that the popular prejudice is against it; that the enormous Irish immigration has waned, and the predominant increase from that source is now Protestant. If it has the desire, it has not the folly to expect to be the ruling element in the nation; unless it be in that vague and remote way in which Jews still convince themselves that they expect a Messiah.

We must remember that much of what has heretofore been called aggression in the Roman Catholic Church has been simply an honorable struggle for the just rights which Protestantism refused to concede to it. So long as we have not secularized our government the Roman Catholics, like the Jews, have really found their cause to be that of religious liberty. While New Hampshire declares them ineligible to office, they have no choice but to resist by all honorable means such exclusion. When Vermont expels Irish children from school for a single day's absence on a church festival, the Roman Catholic clergy would do wrong to submit. When a Massachusetts school committee requires the reading of the Protestant Bible in schools, or a Rhode Island committee refuses to elect a teacher because she is a Roman Catholic, then Protestantism puts itself in the wrong and puts its opponent in the right. Up to this time, as it strikes me, most of the demands of the Roman Catholic Church have been reasonable; and if, as now appears, they are beginning to be unreasonable, there is no doubt of the result, and that church, like any other, will learn its place.

Of this I feel so sure that I confess to more solicitude as to the sins and extravagances of radicals, than as to those of Roman Catholics. Even within the doors of the Boston Radical Club I have heard the disfranchisement of Roman Catholics seriously urged; and one of the alarmists, whom I began by quoting, declares in the same article that the State has a right, under certain circumstances, to interfere with "the internal organization of a religious body" and to compel it to organize "by democratic methods." In other words, according to this theory, the State is to prescribe for each sect whether it shall be ruled by bishops, elders, or deacons, and how much power they shall have in the organization. In the same way, I suppose, the State must decide for the "Sons of Pythias," or the "Improved Order of Red Men," how they shall elect their "Grand Sachem" or "Most Worthy Patriarch." All such theories seem to me to show a want of faith in the principle of religious freedom. They involve the essence of persecution, and the moment you persecute any class of men you lose all right to complain if they persecute you. Once completely secularize the government, and you disarm every church as to its organized power for evil, and leave only its power for good.—Independent, Sept. 30.

WAS IT TIMELY?

That the President made a speech at Des Moines the other day, and a very good one, seems to trouble a certain class of people almost as much as his long course of refraining from speech-making did. Something new to quibble about is to them of the nature of a god-send, and they show their gratitude by their diligence in fault-finding. Possibly the speech was unnecessary; but if we have come to the time that we are to have only necessary speeches in this country, either from the President or less important folk, there is a crisis at hand for which not sufficient preparation has been made. The President's speech was quite as necessary as any other that was made there, and much more interesting than some of them. In the face of notorious facts of significant import, that have lately been forced upon public attention, it was proper enough for the President, or for any one else called upon, to make talk at the reunion of the Army of the Tennessee, to consider whether the republic was likely to be distracted by a great conflict concerning the fundamental principles of its Constitution, and to warn the citizens who heard him to take thought beforehand for its prevention. This is what the President did, and the disappointment because he talked sensibly and earnestly upon a matter of national concern, is provoking almost as much fine sarcastic writing as if he had actually seized the occasion to eulogize a litter of bull-pups.

Mr. Gladstone in England has thought it worth while again and again to raise a warning voice there against the encroachments of a power that threatens English liberty. We believe the liberal and independent journals of the kingdom have not thought it becoming to sneer at him for showing so much regard for the future of his country. The President, in few but well-chosen and weighty words, has spoken out what he thinks with regard to the future security of our institutions. If we are to have, he says—mark the if—if we are to have another contest in the near future, it will not be a sectional one, but one in which the dividing line will be between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. There are two things about this declaration that ought to afford the Democratic and Independent press much satisfaction. The President makes it very clear that he at least doesn't lie awake nights through fear of the new war which some of our slow-moving statesmen suspect the South is determined upon. He shows also that he substantially agrees with Dr. Woolsey, Mr. Adams, and many other wise and sagacious citizens, as to what is the present most threatening peril of the republic. Why it should be proper for them to set forth their views in long orations and written articles, and improper for him to do it in a five-minutes' speech, is only less intelligible than why certain journals should think such opinions very praiseworthy in these gentlemen and very absurd in the President.

The President believes that this Centennial year of the establishment of the republic is a good time to set about the work of strengthening its foundations. Is he not right? And if he is right, is it not eminently proper that he should utter the sentiment? Nor does he leave us at a loss as to what he means by these words: "Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the greater security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and equal rights. Let us encourage free schools, and keep them free from pagan, atheistical or sectarian control. Let us guard against the union of Church and State. With these safeguards the battles which created the army of the Tennessee will not have been fought in vain." That is to say, the republic preserved by the Union armies will continue in integrity, honor and usefulness. It seems to us that this is a very proper appeal for the Chief Magistrate to make, and that it is likely to do a great deal of good.

There are those who affect to think the danger of such a conflict as he forebodes is not imminent. The truth is, it is now upon us, and it is high time we were made aware of it. In some States they are now in the thick of the fight. What is the contest in Ohio but one between intelligence and patriotism on one side, and ambition and ignorance on the other? The same contest is waging in other States, not always about the same expressed issue, but between the same classes of people. The lines are not closely and exclusively drawn, for they never are in such a conflict; but as between the controlling interests in the several camps the characterization will hold now, and it will be more conspicuous as the fight goes on. Here in New England, to be sure, the forces are more mingled than in the West or the South; but we cannot hope to escape being summoned to range ourselves with one or the other party, unless fortunately, the issues now becoming prominent get settled right in the localities where they have arisen before we become involved in them.

The President has thrown his great influence at a good time, but not at all too soon, into the right scale, and his speech should be hailed with satisfaction, not with carping; and so it will be by those whose prejudices do not make them blind to his virtues and to the signs of the times.—Boston Advertiser, Oct. 5.

NATURE in HER immensity has a double-meaning, which dazzles great minds and blinds savage souls. When man is ignorant, when his desert is peopled with visions, the obscurity of solitude adds itself to the obscurity of intelligence; hence come depths in the human soul black and profound as an abyss. Certain rocks, certain ravines, certain thickets, certain wild openings in the trees through which night looks down, push men on to mad and atrocious actions. One might almost say that there are places which are the home of the Spirit of Evil.—Victor Hugo.

PROF. X., in Rochester University, insists strongly on pronouncing final us in Latin like English oose. Student in recitation, not appreciating the point, comes upon the word "profugus." "Professor, would you, on your principles, pronounce the word prof-you-goose or prof-you-goose?" Prof., in rage: "Leave the room instantly, sir!"—Independent.

REASONING against a prejudice is like fighting against a shadow; it exhausts the reasoner without visibly affecting the prejudice. Argument cannot do the work of instruction any more than blows can take the place of sunlight.—Charles Mildmay.

"IN FAITH, CAPTAIN," said a son of Erin, as a ship was coming on the coast in inclement winter weather, "have ye a almenick on board?" "No, I haven't." "Thin, be jabers," replied Pat, "we shall have to take the weather as it comes."

A WHIMSICAL comparison being made between a clock and a woman, Charles Fox observed that he thought the simile bad; "for," said he, "a clock serves to point out the hours, and a woman to make us forget them."

A LADY asked a pupil at a public school, "What was the sin of the Pharisees?" "Eating camels, marm," quickly replied the child. She had read that the Pharisees "strained at gnats and swallowed camels."

THIS, on the whole, is a very good definition of what a violation of the ninth commandment consists in: "It is when nobody did anything, and somebody else went and told of it."—Congregationalist.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

SHADOWS.

"COME LIKE SHADOWS, SO DEPART."

The deep, deep, purple shadows lingering lie
Across the meadow cool;
They softly rest upon the bending rye,
And shut the picture of the changing sky
Out from the little pool.

Oh purple shadows, whither now lead ye,
In this still even-tide?
Swift to the glories of the western sea,
Or to the mountains far, so grand, so free?
Where ye do love to hide?

My mind, entranced by your outlines faint,
Knows of the present naught:
Dead loves, and flowers, and painted form of saint,
And by-gone days, and songs, and fashions quaint,
Commingle in my thought.

Dim figures wrought in tapestry of years
Clearly e'en now I see;
Their eyes seek mine, their voices greet my ears;
From memory's loom the priceless web appears,
Woven alone for me.

The past is wholly mine; I clasp it strong,
And know its blessings all;
The present shared with eager, restless throng;
The future's pain or pleasure, wail or song,
Like mystic shadows fall.

Shadows with shadows blend; in purple haze
Lie pool and western sea;
I sigh—Life's purples change so soon to grays!
But shadows are the swiftly passing days,
And naught but shadows we.

CARROLL GODFREY.

THE EVERY-DAY DARLING.

BY H. H.

She is neither a beauty nor genius,
And no one would call her wise;
In a crowd of other women
She would draw no stranger's eyes;
Even we who love her are puzzled
To say where her preciousness lies;
She is just an every-day darling,—
In that her preciousness lies.

She is sorry when others are sorry,
So sweetly, one likes to be sad;
And if people around her are merry,
She is almost gladder than glad.
Her sympathy is the swiftest,
The truest a heart ever had;
She is just an every-day darling,
The dearest that hearts ever had.

Her hands are so white and little,
It seems as if it were wrong
They should ever work for a moment,
And yet they are quick and strong.
If any dear one needs helping,
She will work the whole day long;
The precious every-day darling,
Every day and all day long.

She is loyal as knights were loyal,
In the days when no knight lied,
And for sake of love or of honor,
If it need be, a true knight died.
But she dreams not she is braver
Than the women by her side;
This precious every-day darling,
Who makes sunshine at our side.

Ah, envy her, Beauty and Genius,
And women the world calls wise;
The utmost of all your triumphs
Would be empty in her eyes.
To love and be loved is her kingdom;
In this her happiness lies.
God bless her, the every-day darling!
In this her preciousness lies.

—Christian Union.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 16.

Theo. Brown, $10; H. H. Dayton, $3; M. P. Barber, $1.60; W. S. Bell, $2.20; Thos. Ranney, 75 cents; B. A. Cleveland, $3.20; H. B. McNair, 60 cents; E. B. Foote, Jr., 25 cents; E. L. Caldwell, 25 cents; G. Chatterton, 10 cents; Geo. Allen, 35 cents; D. W. Payne, $6; L. C. Sleeper, $3.50; Wm. C. MacDonald, $1.60; Joshua Hill, $3.20; E. A. Driver, $3.25; Cash, 50 cents; J. L. Whiting, $1.50; Cash, $2.79; C. A. Curtis, 25 cents; Geo. E. Ehinger, $3.20; John Zisser, $3; R. P. Hollowell, 50 cents; J. Dunn, 10 cents; J. G. Whyte, $3; W. G. Smith, $3.20; Thos. Lamay, $4.80; Jos. Bristol, $5; M. D. Conway, $22.66; Matthew Luce, $20; D. B. Humphrey, 75 cents; R. Fritchett, $3.20; Clara M. Holmes, $3.15; Thos. Tasker, 10 cents; S. D. Fahrney, 10 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 21, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
COTATIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), PROF. FRANÇOIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

THE GLORY OF THE HUMAN.

Man is not very admirable in his average aspect. There is nothing sublime in the appetite with which he devours his mutton-chop, or the cunning with which he squeezes an illegitimate penny out of the unwary buyer, or the snore with which he sleeps the sleep of the well-fed and the well-bedded. There is nothing to challenge reverence in your fellow-passenger of the horse-car who keeps his seat and looks vacantly out of the window, while that poor old woman with the heavy bundle is shaken about with every jolt of the wheels—nothing to rouse suspicion of a latent divinity in that over-dressed lady who “shops” away a small fortune for finery, while her husband is fighting off bankruptcy with the energy of desperation—nothing startlingly poetic in that dandy of a clerk who struts along the street with half his earnings (and perhaps some of his employer’s, too) invested in the clothes on his back—nothing overpoweringly imposing in the reformer who inveighs against the iniquity of interest-taking, and then hastens to put out his money at fifteen per cent. There is a great deal of vulgarity, and pretence, and sottishness, and selfishness, and meanness, and duplicity, and cruelty, and other ugly things just as bad, in this queer world we live in. One who is in love with moral and spiritual beauty, who delights in opportunities to admire and diligently seeks them as one seeks wild-flowers in the woods, has need of much fortitude in the endurance of disappointment. Human life has its cheap, its sordid, and its ghastly sides, which one must be very young or very blind never to see.

Nevertheless, so rich and profound, so marvellous and many-sided is this human nature of ours that the seeker, seek what he may, will not seek in vain. It is fecund in surprises, nay, in contradictions. The very human being who distresses or disgusts you with some sudden betrayal of bad qualities does in other situations that which would kindle a glow of admiration, were you the fortunate spectator of it in his nobler moment. There is no one so base or so mean as not to do at times very unselfish things which some one is sure to discern and to love. Whoever keeps a quick eye for the beautiful in human action is continually charmed with some unexpected glimpse of it, even in most unpromising quarters. Grains of gold shine out in the midst of the dreariest sand or the hardest quartz of human character, easily to be detected by the practised observer. We see chiefly what we look for in life, and find abundant corroboration for almost any possible theory of it. It is worth while to cultivate the love of beauty in the world of man as well as in the outer world of visible Nature, for it can be gratified everywhere and always. The true artist is never at a loss for the picturesque in common things; the true student of humanity, even in the midst of degradation, coarseness, and wrong, finds little revelations of entrancing loveliness. Nothing is undivine to him who has learned that nothing is common or unclean. In a very high sense, dirt and slime are the treasures of scientific truth, the art-galleries of æsthetic delight, the granaries and fountains of spiritual hunger and thirst.

When the ship is burned at sea, or the railroad train is telescoped in a frightful collision, or the crowded building crashes in sudden ruin, some prodigy of self-devotion is sure to be performed. The latent but ever present electricity of heroism flashes out in the emergency. Commonplace people at a moment’s warning develop incredible capacity of the loftiest virtue. But there is no miracle about it. Human nature in such crises is intensified in action, but not changed. In the tame current of ordinary affairs, precisely the same qualities manifest themselves in lower degrees to the observing. The diabolism which now and then flames out of the ground of common life with the subterranean fury of the volcano originates in habitual selfishness; the seemingly superhuman self-sacrifice which lights up some black tornado of calamity with the glory of the rainbow grows out of quiet, long-continued, and obscure victory over self. Character cannot reverse itself in the hour of ordeal. With all possible differences in temperament and constitution, the law of identity is preserved inviolable; and you will show yourself in the stress of sudden terrific trial exactly what you have made yourself in meeting the strains of small daily temptations. Before you can be great in the great, you must already have been great in the little. Evolution reigns even in morals.

In all the vast scope of this limitless universe, there is nothing so transcendently sublime as this capacity of the human soul to build itself slowly up into a moral colossus. The wonders of astronomy, of geology, of chemistry, of natural history, of all the sciences thus far constituted by human wit, pale before this infinite wonder of CHARACTER, which creates itself, as it were, by directing its habitual activities according to a deliberately espoused moral ideal,—which prescribes to itself its own law, and subdues all events to its own uses by putting upon them the yoke of its own iron and unconquerable purpose,—and which thus compels the very universe of which it is a product to become the “slave of the lamp” and humbly do its bidding. The moment that the soul is ready to surrender its very existence, if need be, rather than swerve from the fitting execution of its own moral aim, that moment it has become lord over the universe itself; for the universe cannot possibly do more than annihilate it. If the soul chooses annihilation rather than abandonment of its own ideal, then that which all the energies of the universe must obey triumphs over them all, and proves that the universe has begotten a something mightier and more magnificent than itself. This is no dream born of imaginative temerity, but has actually been exemplified, if such stories as that of Mohammed Effendi, the Turkish atheist, are true. Being brought to the stake for his atheism, and promised his life if he would recant it, he is said to have calmly replied, “The love of truth constrains me to die in its defence,” and to have met his fate unconquered and undismayed. What a martyrdom was that! In our judgment, it shows the high-water mark of moral sublimity. The atheist, expecting the immediate extinction of his whole being, chose this rather than to falter in allegiance to his own moral ideal of absolute fidelity to the truth. What is that but to evince a moral power superior to the sum of all cosmic forces, whose utmost exercise could annihilate, but not subdue? Weighed in the scales of a just valuation, the spirit which could thus triumph over the cosmos itself must be adjudged to be its moral superior, even if the moment of triumph was also the moment of final extinction.

Such, we say, would be the just conclusion, conceding that the moral power of the victim encountered only non-moral forces in the cosmos. On that supposition, the cosmos had actually produced a greater power than it had ever contained! Here lies, we think, the real paradox of all atheism,—nay, shall we not add, the real refutation of it? No answer to this argument can have the slightest relevancy which implies the least inappreciation of moral values, or which fails to discern the intrinsic and transcendent moral superiority of the spirit which calmly prefers annihilation itself to the slightest infidelity to truth. Whoever is competent to comprehend moral greatness at all must at once pronounce the power thus evinced to be infinitely higher in grade than all non-moral forces combined. If the cosmos is non-moral, then it has given birth to a greater than itself; and the more has been evolved out of the less! Can such absurdity be? Verily, we cannot admit or conceive it.

Mohammed Effendi indeed died in defence of his atheism, believing it to be the truth; but his act is so unutterably noble, so magnificently entitled to the reverence of mankind, that it seems the very refutation of atheism itself—the very demonstration of some Universal Moral Power of which his own moral power was only a concentrated spark. For nothing that has begun to be can have been the ultimate source of its own being; and Mohammed Effendi, dying for his atheism, seems to have most gloriously disproved it. Words must fail us in the effort to paint the matchless dignity, the ineffable beauty, the immeasurable spiritual sublimity of such a martyrdom as his, towering infinitely as it does above all Christian martyrdoms in all the elements of true moral greatness. The martyrs of the Church lost sight of death’s horrors in the effulgence of the Heaven which dazzled their transported souls, and waited to receive them, as they believed, on the very instant of their escape from the agonies of the arena, the stake, the torture-chamber. But the atheist saw no Heaven, no future, nothing but the eternal blank of dreamlessness and non-existence before him; the love of life with its pleasures and allurements, its ties and affections, was on one side,—on the other nothing but fierce and intolerable pain, the prospect of immediate extinction, and the passionless mandate of virtue as he heard it in the utter solitude of his own thought. No hope, no reward, no future—only the majesty of Truth and the law of his own Ideal: yet he so revered the naked obligation not to belie with his lips the integrity of his own intellect, that he calmly waved aside all the prizes for which common men are willing to pawn even their own souls, wrapped himself in the dignity of an unconquerable manliness, and perished in the flames. Others may see only folly in a choice so remote from the motives of ordinary men; but the mind that can comprehend such loftiness of spirit must pay to it the homage of an admiration that loses itself in awe, and trembles into involuntary worship. That character of such Himalayan altitude should be possible to humanity is proof indefeasible of an adequate origin for it, of a moral constitution of things, in the cosmos whence it sprung; and it compels us, in the face of all doubts and difficulties urged on an inferior plane of thought, to see in the moral nature of man an irrefragable argument for the existence of a moral nature in the universal All—compels us to recognize the “cosmical life,” of which Tyndall speaks, as being of necessity not lower, but higher, than the spiritual life of man. In a word, the virtuous man is the living demonstration of God.

It is vain to bring against such considerations objections based merely on data of the physical sciences. From physical data no sagacious mind will expect to draw any but physical conclusions; but physical data are utterly inapplicable in the treatment of moral problems, and have no force when opposed to moral conclusions. The questions of sociology cannot be answered by the principles of physics, however convenient it may be (and also misleading) to employ the terms of physics analogically and metaphorically in discussing them. Still less can questions of ethics and the higher philosophy in general be answered in that way. That the one method of all science must be as rigorously observed in the treatment of moral problems as in that of physical problems, we have for now many years strenuously insisted; but we must equally insist that moral science deals with factors, quantities, and qualities of which physics can know and does know nothing, and must be allowed to develop itself in respected independence, though bound in doing so to accept every proved result of every lower science. Hence we claim that the strength of scientific moral theism cannot be even feebly apprehended by those who are unable or unwilling to judge it by the principles of moral science, or to bring to its consideration a highly trained and cultivated faculty for estimating moral values by moral standards alone. When the problem is the existence or non-existence of a strictly moral element in Nature, the known existence of a strictly moral element in Man (who is but a part of Nature) becomes the supreme fact, and must be adequately accounted for, not evaded. It is a fact which challenges the most respectful attention of science, and will certainly receive it, when science has been developed out of its present preparatory and merely physical stage. The task of the profound religious thinker of this age is to study this fact in connection with all such other established facts as truly bear upon it, and meanwhile to prevent its immense significance to the world from being buried under the dazzling accumulations of the physical sciences. Despite all his littlenesses and deformities, Man is the highest of all studies; and the highest thing in him, the glory of his humanity and the redemptive root of his connection with the boundless universe which has evolved him, is the presence of a moral nature which shines out fitfully through all his feebleness or wickedness, and now and then bursts forth with a splendor incomparable and unapproachable by aught beside. Small as he is, there is that in him which is infinitely great; and whoever would comprehend either him or the cosmos itself must pay it most serious, earnest, and reverential heed.

INFLATION.

No. II.

In a previous paper I endeavored to expose the absurdity of the statement made by inflationists that the nation loans to the National Banks over $370,000,000 without interest. I showed that it does not loan a single dollar to the banks with or without interest. On the other hand, I should have added that, in purchasing government bonds, the banks practically loan money to the government. To prove that this is well understood by everybody except inflationists, it is sufficient to refer to the universal use of the terms, "United States loan," and "United States securities," to designate United States bonds.

To indicate still more clearly the true relation of the banks to the government, it should be said that they are a source of large revenue to the treasury. Since the passage of the "National Bank Act" by Congress, in June, 1864, they have paid taxes to the government amounting to more than $75,000,000. This amount includes assessments for the current year.

That no misapprehension may exist in the mind of the reader of this series of articles, it may be proper to remark that I do not approve the "National Bank Act" in its entirety. Certain amendments, in my judgment, might be made with advantage to the government and without injustice to the banks. I would, for example, advocate an increase of the present tax upon their circulation; but it is one thing to demand that the banks contribute their full share to the public revenue, and quite another to misconstrue their relations to the government, and thereby make them the object of popular hostility. And this misconception cannot be pointed out and corrected too soon, when it is used as the basis of a plea for a system of finance which, to a large part of the community, appears to be both faulty and vicious.

Another objection to the National Banks is thus expressed in the tract that appeared at the head of my first article on this subject: "The people deposit with the National Banks an average of about $670,000,000, for which they get no interest."

This statement is misleading. The question naturally arises, "Why do the people voluntarily carry their money to the banks?" Is it possible that the great commercial class lends $670,000,000 to these associations without receiving a corresponding equivalent? The tract says depositors do not draw interest, and by omitting even a hint of any other equivalent leaves the reader to infer that none other is received.

That there may be no mistake as to the inference implied, a "remedy" is proposed. The United States Treasury is to be substituted for the banks, and the government is to pay interest on deposits. To quote from the tract, "make money interchangeable with 3.65 per cent. United States bonds, and, 'this money'—the $670,000,000 now deposited with the banks—'will flow into the United States Treasury.'" That the treasury department is not expected to perform the ordinary functions of a bank, is made evident by the demand, "repeal all laws creating or sustaining banks: let banking be free, and conducted under the law of partnerships." The free banks are to perform the functions of the present banks, but are not to have the advantage now derived from circulation and deposits, as these are simply a sinecure of the banks, and an injustice to the people.

Now the fact is, the banks provide the people with facilities for transfer and exchange, without which, the business of the community could not possibly be conducted. This important and essential service is, in part, an equivalent for the benefit they realize from both their circulation and deposits. I say, in part; for valuable as the service is, it by no means covers the entire advantage secured by the people. In addition to transfer and exchange facilities, the banks offer a credit to every depositor, basing the credit upon the average amount of his deposit and the character of the security he proposes to pledge. A good illustration of the advantage of this credit may be found in the experience of a firm with whose business I am entirely familiar. This firm deals in wool. It sells wool to manufacturers, taking their notes, payable in four months, in settlement for their purchases. The nature of the business makes it necessary for the firm to keep more or less money immediately available. It deposits this money in the banks. In one bank it keeps an average deposit of $10,000, and in return for the use of that deposit, the bank lends it $80,000, and often $100,000, taking from it as security the notes customers have given it for wool. The bank further pledges itself not to call for a return of this loan until these notes are due; and when they become due it assumes all labor and expense of collection. The firm pays this bank as low as four and five per cent. per annum interest when money is abundant, and never over seven per cent. per annum, even if the bank can get twelve or fourteen per cent. by lending to merchants who do not deposit with it. In business phraseology, for an average deposit of $10,000, the firm is entitled to a "discount line;" that is, a loan of at least $80,000. This firm does not own a single share of the stock; its transactions with the bank, and relations to it, are the same in extent and character as those of other depositors.

An impartial observer, it seems to me, must admit that those people who use the banks for purposes of discount receive a fair equivalent for their deposits; but there is another class of depositors whose relations are to be considered. Many individuals, firms, and corporations do not require discount facilities; they, however, are obliged to hold a large amount of money available at an hour's notice. They deposit their money with the banks, and not only secure for themselves, in common with other depositors, facilities for exchange and transfer, but are paid interest on their deposits. This is a fact beyond dispute or contradiction; but inflationists in their eagerness to decry the banks overlook or ignore it. The tract I am reviewing denies it outright.

In view of the facts presented, I submit that this tract, in its statement of the relation of the depositors to the banks, is unjust by implication, and incorrect in assertion. As a counter-statement I offer the following: the people deposit with the National Banks an average of about $670,000,000, for which they receive a full and fair equivalent; this equivalent, as respects one class of depositors, consists of facilities for transfer and exchange, and discount accommodations; and, as respects another class, facilities for transfer and exchange, and interest on their average deposits. Which statement is more in accordance with the facts, it is for the reader to judge.

In a future paper I shall consider the "remedy" prescribed by inflationists for the alleged "injustice" to the people, involved in our present financial system.

R. P. H.

SENSATIONALISM.

There have been some severe strictures in the newspapers of late in regard to the desecration of Sunday, consequent upon the running of railroad trains to out-door religious gatherings.

